Summer construction projects to extend into first semester

BY JEN REEB
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Construction projects which kept workers busy over the summer have extended into the fall semester. Students returned to a nearly completed Biology building and new mailboxes. Members of the Phi Psi fraternity interest group anticipate moving into the newly-renovated house by late October.

The new Biology building, which is the second phase of a three-part overhaul of Bucknell's science facilities, is now in the final stages of construction. The building, which was originally scheduled for completion in early September, will be open for faculty on Sept. 16, but will not be completely finished until mid-October.

In a special ceremony on Robert L. Rooke Day, Sept. 21, the building will be formally dedicated to Rooke, a long-time benefactor of the university.

According to Jim Hostetler, the manager of construction for the Physical Plant, the decision as to when to convert their classes to the new building will be left to individual faculty members. Although "there were some delays in the delivery of laboratory furnishings," the classrooms and laboratories are basically finished and systems are now being tested, said Barry Maxwell, vice-president for administration.

Classrooms on the second and third floors are essentially finished, according to Hostetler. The greenhouse area on the fourth floor will be the last part of the building to be finished. The project is "well within or under budget," Maxwell said.

The Phi Kappa Psi fraternity house, which the University purchased from the national fraternity last spring, is presently undergoing extensive renovations. Efforts have mostly been concentrated on the inside of the building. "We have completely redone the electrical system and increased the size of the bathroom facilities," Hostetler said.

In addition, plans have been made to install a sprinkler system. Bids are currently being accepted for consideration, and Hostetler expects to choose a contractor within a week.

Overall, the project is "in pretty good shape, although there have been a few surprises that were not anticipated," said Hostetler. Besides the delays caused by the sprinkler system, the car-port was unexpectedly found to be 80% rotted. Also, limited amounts of asbestos were found inside. "We will remove all asbestos from the house," Hostetler said.

"Originally, we hoped to be pretty far along by the second week in October, but the combination of the sprinklers, the asbestos and the porto-cachere have set us back," said Hostetler.

Since the water for the sprinkler will be supplied from the same emergency water supply used by Dana Engineering, major work will have to be done.

It is too early to say when the project will be completed, said Hostetler. In addition to these delays, some "budget issues have not been fully resolved," said Maxwell.

The renovation of the mailroom, the third project underway, is "close to being done and will be finished up in the next several weeks," according to Maxwell. Construction on the mailroom did not begin until late July.

One thousand new mailboxes were added this year so that all freshmen will have their own boxes. Within four years, more boxes will be added and existing boxes replaced so that no one will have a boxmate. This project will require extensive renovations since replacement parts for old boxes are unavailable and new ones must be constructed.

Maxine Gray, mailroom manager, is pleased with the progress. "The workmen are doing a super job to get everything done quickly and do it right. Although all construction affecting students has been completed, there is still more renovation such as lighting, carpeting and trim work that needs to be com-

DER rejects incinerator plan

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Plans to construct a hazardous waste incinerator in northern Union County were dealt a serious blow last month, when the state Department of Environmental Resources rejected a phase one application from USPCI Pennsylvania, Inc.

The company, a subsidiary of Union Pacific Corporation, is seeking to construct the $100 million facility as the anchor tenant of the proposed 700-acre Susquehanna Industrial Park, north of the village of Allenwood and seven miles from the Bucknell campus.

"The application fails to comply with siting criteria in state regulations intended to protect sensitive environmental areas," said DER Hazardous Waste Siting Team Leader Karl Sheaffer.

"The U.S. Soil Conservation Service has determined that about 20 acres of USPCI's proposed site is class one agricultural lands, and DER's exclusionary criteria specifically prohibit construction of a hazardous waste facility on such property," Sheaffer said.

In order to gain state approval, USPCI must shift the incinerator site to another area within its 700 acres that does not include the soil in question.

"Essentially, our denial puts the company back at square one," Sheaffer said. "If they choose to resubmit an application, our review would start from scratch."

The rejection of USPCI's application is a major victory for Organizations United for the Environment (OUE), the 17,000-member citizens' group fighting the incinerator plan since its unveiling nearly a year ago.

"Citizen action is what is winning this fight," said Fred Wilder, Union County Planning Director. "We wouldn't have been able to do anything if the people of the valley weren't behind us."

The Bucknell faculty last semester joined around 100 corporations, government agencies and other groups who have gone on record against the project.

Several faculty members, including President Gary Sojka, have publicly spoken against the proposed incinerator.

Charles Sackrey, associate professor of economics and active in OUE's Lewisburg chapter, said, "USPCI is licking their wounds and deciding if they want to submit another plan. The political environment is very charged right now, [and] USPCI must know they're facing an uphill political battle."

Rash of vandalism, drunkenness begins year

Lewisburg police cite ten students in alcohol-related incidents; DeCerchio concerned

BY MARK ABRAHAMSEN AND BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writers

Last week saw Bucknell Public Safety officers and Lewisburg and East Buffalo Police responding to a rash of vandalism, disorderly conduct and criminal incidents, most involving alcohol, officials said.

"This is starting to be a bad year," Lewisburg Police Chief Donald Heiter said, after his department responded to "a large amount of disturbance calls." Last weekend Lewisburg Police cited ten students in alcohol-related incidents. Charges include disorderly conduct, underage drinking, driving under the influence of alcohol and violating the Borough's open-container law.

Bucknell's Public Safety office and East Buffalo Township police also filed charges against several students.

Among the incidents last week reported by campus and local authorities:

• A senior faces numerous criminal charges after kicking in a glass door in the Langone Center in the early hours of Thurs. Aug. 29. The intoxicated student, who was seriously injured, smashed the door because he was angry that the Bison was not open.

• Three drunk upperclass students returned to their freshman floors in Vedder Hall on Aug. 29, encouraging freshmen to "carry on the tradition" of the hall, which included the consumption of large amounts of alcohol.

• In the early hours of Aug. 30, two other intoxicated upperclass males were roaming the halls of Vedder with alcohol and knocking on doors of female students' rooms. When a resident assistant and resident manager confronted the individuals, one student said the two were "looking to get laid."

• The same two individuals, apparently still on their mission two hours later, were trying to get back into the residence hall. Public Safety officers had to be notified in order to escort the students away from the area.

• A student suffered minor injuries when his car overturned near the entrance to Bucknell West. The student, whom authorities suspected to have been drinking alcohol, was reportedly traveling at a high rate of speed and failed to make the turn from Route 15 onto Smoketown Road. An empty bottle of malt liquor was also found near the car.

• One freshman and two upperclass students, all intoxicated, were confronted by several Residential Life staff members on Sept. 1. After one individual provided false identification, another verbally abused the present RA's and RM.

• A rash of vandalism occurred at Bucknell West over the past week, including fire extinguisher tampering and broken windows.

These and numerous other incidents have law enforcement officials concerned and promising quick action.

Vince DeCerchio, director of Public Safety, noted, "I'm a little concerned about the number of alcohol-related incidents that have occurred so early in the semester, both on-campus and in town.

"I sincerely hope that the education and the relationship that I have shared with the students in regard to responsible behavior has not been forgotten over the summer," DeCerchio continued. "We made a significant amount of progress last semester, and I would hate to see the trend reverse."

Heiter, stressing his "no warnings" policy, promised criminal action against disruptive Bucknell students living in the Borough.

He explained that, before last year, his officers would refrain from issuing criminal citations in the first month of the school year, allowing students to become acclimated to the responsibilities of living off-campus.

Heiter said the number of incidents is close to last fall, but most of last year's criminal charges were filed against freshmen and sophomores, while last week's incidents involved juniors and seniors exclusively.

Bookstore stocks safety items

BY JOYCE DOLLINGER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

With the arrival of two new self-protection devices next month, the Bucknell Bookstore will join the Office of Public Safety in preventing campus crime. The Alarm Light will be sold in the bookstore for $5.99 and the Fox40 whistle will be handed out free of charge in the Langone Center.

Developed at Wilkes University last spring, the Alarm Light, or the "screaming flashlight," is a device slightly larger than a pack of cigarettes. A loud alarm attached to the flashlight can be triggered in case of emergency by detaching the wrist strap from the device.

The Alarm Light can also be adapted for use as a door alarm. The device fits into the crack of the door and is activated when the door opens.

The bookstore will initially stock 50 Alarm Lights to be sold at cost to anyone in the Bucknell community, said David Roberts, director of the bookstore.

The other personal safety item, the Fox 40, is an ear-piercing whistle which can "frighten an attacker or attract attention," according to its designer at Wilkes University.

Roberts said the bookstore will be giving away 500 whistles and brochures as a special safety promotion.

An informative film about the whistle will run in the Langone Center and students will be able to pick up whistles and brochures at a table set up outside the bookstore.

The Bucknellian gets a facelift

This summer, the staff of The Bucknellian decided it was time for a change. The paper's old graphic design, created for our switch from tabloid-size to broadsheet publication in 1989, had lost its zip. It no longer attracted readers, and was often confusing and difficult to read.

The new, improved newspaper you now hold is the result of hours of work and review by many members of The Bucknellian's staff. In addition to new fonts and styles, we hope you'll find the text clearer and easier to read. And, of course, you'll still find the quality journalism and in-depth coverage of Bucknell events for which The Bucknellian is famous.

Sackrey said OUE may hold a student membership drive on campus this fall, adding to numbers which he estimated include 200 Bucknell faculty, employees and students.

Other plans call for OUE to expand its focus beyond the incinerator debate.

"Incinerator or no, OUE will continue the political fight," Sackrey said.

Among the scheduled events for the fall is an environmental forum on Oct. 8, during which candidates for Union County Commissioner will field questions on an entire range of environmental issues.

pleted. Gray noted, however, that the construction has not caused a delay in mail being delivered to students.

Both the mailroom staff and the construction workers have been working at night to minimize the disruption, Maxwell said.

Other minor projects which were completed over the summer include four new tennis courts behind the fieldhouse and a footbridge connecting the tunnel under Route 15 to Moore Avenue.

Next on the agenda, said Hostetler, is the renovation of the Botany building to provide office space for the Career Development Center and Personnel Office.

And, "the space committee is discussing the assignment of space in Taylor hall and the Old Bison," said Maxwell.

The committee will bring its recommendations before the trustees this fall.

Heiter is more concerned because these students, who have been in Lewisburg for several years, should know what is expected of them.

Off-campus students "have to realize we aren't picking on them," he said. "We want them to act like the local citizens.

"This is my home town," Heiter continued. "I'm not against students, [but they] have to learn to respect other people, and learn to respect their privacy."

Citing last Halloween's near-riot, in which 900 Bucknell students staged a sit-in on Seventh Street, Heiter said, "If they haven't gotten the message, they'll never have another opportunity like that."

He promised mass arrests if a similar incident occurs, saying "we'll take everybody we can. We're willing and ready to go; we don't call people out for false alarms."

Heiter also stressed, however, that only a small percentage of Bucknell students living off-campus were responsible for the law enforcement problems.

The crackdown by Lewisburg will be part of a collaborative town-gown effort. In a letter to Heiter released to The Bucknellian, DeCerchio promised full support and cooperation for Heiter's efforts.

Sophomore rush alters traditional program

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The newly-adopted sophomore rush policy has forced the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) and the Panhellenic Council to alter their traditional rush programs.

The Board of Trustees voted last spring to change freshman spring-semester rush to sophmore fall-semester rush. This year constitutes an overlap in policy since freshmen could receive bids last spring.

Only transfer students and sophomores who did not accept bids last year will be eligible for this year's rush.

The IFC will sponsor a less formal rush than in past years, according to IFC President Denis Maguire '93. After registering on Sept. 9 at 5:30p.m. in the Gallery Theater, the rushees will tour the fraternity houses at designated times during the week. A second week of rush will permit open visitation. Fraternities will offer bids on Sept. 21 and may continue to do so throughout the semester.

The Panhellenic Council decided in advance that the time and expense of formal rush would not be justified for a group of less than 50, according to Panhellenic Council President Kristine Elliott '92. Of 160 women eligible, Elliott said that "fewer than 50" signed up.

Today at noon the Panhellenic Council and the sorority presidents will meet to decide how this year's rush will be handled.

Largest freshman class in history causes overcrowding on campus

TIMOTHY W. KIRK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Following the arrival of 914 freshmen for the 1991-92 academic year, students have found university housing to be at a premium. With the class of 1995 over-enrolled by close to 40 students and renovations of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity house still underway, approximately 50 students are presently being housed in converted lounges now serving as doubles and triples.

Normal attrition would have set the class of 1995 at the target number. "However, we only lost 50 students over the summer."

Because of the unexpected increase in population, the Office of Residential Life was forced to create 40 extra spaces in freshman housing, resulting in the conversion of lounges in Smith Hall to triples and Vedder Hall to doubles.

...Commmerford attributes the increased number of freshmen to an unforeseen lower attrition rate over the summer.

Assistant Dean of Housing Gerald Commerford attributes the increased number of freshmen to an unforeseen lower attrition rate over the summer. "We set a target number of 870," says Commerford of the incoming freshman class. "Usually we lose 90 or so students over the summer due to acceptance elsewhere or change of plans, and we had 960 students enrolled in May."

Converting lounges into residences is not only a freshman phenomenon, however. A small number of upperclass women are presently housed in converted lounges in Roberts and Trax, which Commerford says is "not unusual."

Once the 27 members of Phi Kappa Psi presently housed in University residence halls move into the fraternity house late this fall, there will be space in Swartz Hall and other upperclass residence halls.

Gerald Commerford, assistant dean of housing, has his hands full with residential problems caused, in part, by a large freshman class.

Defendant in local indecent exposure, harrassment case held over for trial

BY TARA G. GILLIGAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Donald Perkoski of Stillwater, PA has been bound over for court following a preliminary hearing at which one victim, a female Bucknell student, testified that Perkoski had indecently exposed himself to her as she was jogging on Smoketown Road last winter.

As a result of the August 16 preliminary hearing, during which both the victim and Patrolman Richard Miller of the East Buffalo Police Department testified, District Justice Leo S. Armbruster ordered that Perkoski be placed in the Union County jail in lieu of $10,000 bail.

Armbruster refused Perkoski's request to lower the bail, according to Janice Butler, director of the Women's Resource Center. Butler was present at the hearing to support the victim.

Perkoski has since been released on bail, said Miller.

The evidence provided in the two testimonies was enough to carry the proceedings to the next step, a trial likely to be held in November, according to Assistant District Attorney Andrew Lyons.

Lyons, the State prosecutor, said he doesn't know whether Perkoski will plead innocent or guilty in the trial, but that he seemed to be denying any involvement in the incident. "Normally, if you have a preliminary hearing... you can assume that the defendant is denying his guilt," Lyons said.

Perkoski's attorney, Lonnie Hill, refused comment.

The victim positively identified Perkoski in a photo line-up of seven men, said Miller. The investigation also revealed the defendant's prior record of indecent exposure convictions. Miller and Bucknell Public Safety Officer James Middleton were able to identify Perkoski's car as the same vehicle used in a prior incident.

Butler said that because of Perkoski's prior record a conviction could mean at least two years in the state penitentiary. "If he is convicted, and we hope he is, he will probably be doing some state time...Because he has a prior record he'll probably end up doing more time," she said.

The incident involving Perkoski was one of several incidents which occurred during the last academic year. Perkoski has not been questioned in any of the other cases of indecent exposure which occurred last year along River Road.

There has been "no direct connection between this incident and any of the incidents on River Road," although investigations of the latter incidents are ongoing, said DeCerchio, director of Public Safety.

Miller said that the descriptions provided by victims in each case differed.

Criminal charges dropped

BY TRAVIS ELLIOTT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

District Justice Leo Armbruster dismissed criminal charges against Michael Riddick '92 this July after the witnesses for the prosecution failed to appear at the hearing. Riddick had been charged with aggravated assault (first degree felony), simple assault, reckless endangerment, and criminal attempt (all second degree misdemeanors) after allegedly assaulting two men who were visiting Bucknell last spring.

In a separate hearing this Monday related to the same incident, however, Armbruster found Riddick guilty of disorderly conduct, a summary offense which court records describe as using "obscene language" and creating "unreasonable noise."

Although Riddick was not present at the summary hearing, he was ordered to pay fines and costs totalling $350 and given a 90 day probationary period. Originally, Armbruster had sentenced Riddick to serve 15-90 days in the Union County jail, but Armbruster did agree to suspend the jail term. According to court records, "The jail term was ordered due to the fact that the defendant is a summary recidivist and proven to be incorrigible."

The two men who had been assaulted, Daphnis Espinar, who suffered a broken jaw, and Elias Ladopoulos, who suffered a broken right ear drum, had both been subpoenaed by the Commonwealth to testify at the July 2 criminal hearing but neither of the witnesses were present.

According to earlier Lewisburg police reports, an unidentified male had hit Espinar; Riddick and the unidentified male then allegedly hit Ladopoulos. Earlier that night Riddick had allegedly accused one of the men of attempting to steal a pair of sunglasses at a party in Malesardi Hall.

Riddick was unavailable for comment, but in an earlier interview with The Bucknellian, Riddick maintained his innocence in the case and said that his positive identification by the victims had been a case of mistaken identity.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.
You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?
A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Three companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.
IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER-PERFECT.
TIAA received A+ from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Standard & Poor's and Aaa from Moody's Investors Service. These ratings reflect TIAA's reliable claims-paying ability, exceptional financial strength, superior investment performance, and low expenses. With its guaranteed rate of return and opportunity for dividends, TIAA is one of less than ten companies, out of 2,200 nationwide, that received these highest marks.
CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.
For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity with four different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.
Together, TIAA and CREF form the nation's largest private retirement system, with over $95 billion in assets and more than 70 years of experience serving the education community. For over one million people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

EDITORIAL

First impressions aren't what they seem

The class of 1995 is getting quite an introduction to Bucknell. Very few academic years have started off with the same kind of bang that this one has.

Even as we at The Bucknellian planned this special Orientation Edition, we anticipated something different from what actually occurred. We hoped to produce a small, simple issue of the paper recapping the events of the summer and introducing some new faces around campus. We planned to welcome students with news of completed construction projects and encourage them with a 'Welcome to Bucknell' editorial. We were also going to print an update on changes to the University's regulations and policies.

Instead, events dictated a wholly different scenario. Before the first week of classes is even concluded, there have been a number of serious incidents involving upperclass Bucknellians. One reportedly drunk student severely injured his leg kicking through a glass door in the Langone Center. Another barely escaped injury after he caused his car to flip over near Bucknell West. He too was under the influence. Nearly a dozen students have already been arrested by Lewisburg police for disorderly conduct and/or public drunkenness. And most recently, groups of intoxicated upperclassmen have been roaming through freshman dorms trying to convince residents to, among other things, "carry on the tradition" and get drunk with them. There have even been reports of an upswing in the amount of drunk driving occurring around town.

The events of the past two weeks are not a Bucknell "tradition." Indeed, they completely contradict the goals of higher education and the values of an institution like this one. Such absurd and obscene behavior, while embarrassing and stupid, is also potentially dangerous — even deadly. The young man who kicked the glass door caused "severe nerve and ligament damage" to his leg and will live with his action the rest of his life. The car that flipped over was beginning to smoke as the driver was pulled from it; an explosion could have killed him.

Clearly, this is not the kind of news we want to report in our first issue of the semester. Bucknell offers students so many opportunities and so many experiences that to throw them away by drinking irresponsibly is a travesty of the highest magnitude. As new rules come into effect from the fraternities, and University, and the state, students must learn to live within those rules. The University and the IFC are being extremely flexible, but they can't protect us from ourselves.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Graduate expected better treatment

TO THE EDITOR:

I thought you might find this an unbelieveable and sad commentary on what you have to look forward to in terms of post-graduate relations:

"Prof. _____ regrets that he is unable to complete your recommendation due to pressing commitments. He already has a backlog of recommendations."

This message was typed on a piece of folded cardboard and sent to me.

I had taken this particular professor for three classes. I had gotten A's in all of them. I had majored in his field. I had never sent him a piece of cardboard on which I stated that I could not do his homework, as I had pressing commitments.

I tried again.

This time I got an actual letter bearing my name and signed by the department secretary.

"Dear Linda, In response to your request for Professor _____ to write a letter of recommendation for you, he regrets that he is unable at this time to do so. He has an enormous amount of commitments and responsibilities that he must take care of at the University,

"We do not expect our lives to be held back by a professor who refuses to fill out a form that entails a few checks, sentences, and a signature."

but wishes you luck in your endeavors."

Nice and polite, but it wasn't going to get me into grad school.

We all know how much money we spend to get a Bucknell education. We all know how much work and dedication we put into our years at Bucknell. But we do it for a reason. We expect our degree to enhance our lives and our futures. We do not expect our lives to be held back by a professor who refuses to fill out a form that entails a few checks, sentences, and a signature.

Yes, Professor _____ has commitments and responsibilities at the University. And that includes us, his students. It's his job. It's what he's paid for. And it's what we paid for.

I always thought that in addition to academics, a Bucknell education taught you about commitment and responsibility.

I guess not.

Professor clarifies quote

Incorrect date could have caused confusion

TO THE EDITOR:

The letter in last week's Bucknellian [May 10, 1991]titled: Reader Responds to Biblical Perspective, contained an important typographical error. The quotation from Dr. Mellencott should read:

"The terms homosexual and heterosexual were not developed in any language until the 1890's when for the first time the awareness developed that there are people with a lifelong, constitutional orientation toward their own sex."

The sentence was incorrectly printed with the date 1980s. I am sending this correction in because I do not want this obvious error to cause confusion about the validity of the entire quotation.

Is Seal's debut just the flavor of the month?

BY MATTHEW WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A looming 6' 4", he's the latest British club sensation. Somehow his bizarre image, which combines leather with scarred cheeks and dreds works just right. He also happens to be responsible for the hottest single of the summer, "Crazy."

All these plusses should add up to something, but as any novice music critic knows, Seal also rather neatly fits the criteria for a one hit wonder. Such artists have kept that part could not be worse in its fifteen seconds of meaningless garble. It's enough to make you wonder if Seal's producers have not, in fact, attempted to make him something he is not.

Only during "Whirlpool" are his throaty rifts left unadulterated by the needless superficial instrumentation that fogs a good portion of the album. Other tracks like "Wild" and "Show Me" have been only mildly tampered with.

Like "Crazy," the only other pop track that portrays enough the cassingle, formerly just the single, a consistent moneymaker for record labels.

Against my better judgement, I decided to take a chance on Seal and, to my delight, I was not offended by what I found. Truthfully, the album is not as provocative as "Crazy;" however, it does contain some mesmerizing clips.

One thing clear to any discerning ear is that Seal's strengths lie in his folky, acoustic tracks much more than in his techno-pop attempts, which feature beats long since used up by the likes of Londonbeat and FYC. This is never more clearly illustrated, than by the song "Deep Water."

What starts out as charming, if not altogether soothing country rock is ruthlessly transformed into a pop dance track without warning. While the latter half of the song is not awful, the transition to earnestness to be both plausible and appealing is "Future Love Paradise." As a follow-up, it manages to be as engaging as its predecessor without sounding identical to it. For this alone Seal is to be commended. As C & C Music Factory demonstrated, people really are stupid enough to make basically the same song three different hit singles.

All told, Seal's debut is neither ground-breaking nor is it complete, but his voice is not something to be put by the wayside. It's unfortunate that there is such an obvious conflict of interests that forbids him from recognition he truly deserves.

Fortunately, the situation is not irreparable. If, in the future, Seal is able to more fully display the raw soul that truly makes him powerful, he may find that there is indeed life after the hit single.

Summer previews told whole story

BY MARC HAIMES
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Research this past summer indicated that the masses are no longer moved by the multitude of mediocre movies. People are cynical of the cinema and no longer pick pictures. Famed Hollywood scientists (cinematologists) have directly connected the decrease in ticket sales with the increase in production funds spent on advertising. Surveys indicate that with the huge number of billboard signs, newspaper ads, and extended commercials, we can accurately describe most movies without actually viewing the film...

— POINT BREAK —

Patrick Swayze stars in this adrenaline-pumping action-adventure with sweaty men boasting bulging biceps and bagging bodacious babes.

During this movie they energetically leap out of planes, chug brews, pound bad guys, high five, and generally make those guys in the "Sunkist" commercials look like effeminate croquet players.

— DYING YOUNG —

A heart-warming, bittersweet, and dramatic tale about an ailing man who battles the depression and frustrations of medical tragedy to discover true love and happiness.

— DOUBLE IMPACT —

This movie stars a muscular karate champ with a great German sounding name which the narrator of the advertisement cleverly uses to help explain the dramatic subtleties of the film...

DAMME DAMME... It's Claude VAN DAMME... with twice the VAN-DAMMAGE!!! He's DAMME good, and DAMME strong! WHAM BAMM... Thank You VAN DAMME!!! Watch him drive a VAN over a DAMME! Watch him SLAM a mutant LAMB!! Watch him JAM a video CAM!!! Watch him EAT green eggs and HAM!!! God I love him... SAM I AM!!!

— REGARDING HENRY —

A bittersweet, dramatic, and heart-warming tale about an ailing man who battles the depression and frustrations of medical tragedy to discover true love and happiness.

— BINGO —

Bingo seems to be Hollywood's most recent canine talent with a vast repertoire of tricks that would make the antiquated Lassie want to bury himself in in a big vat of kibble. In the thirty second commercial, the resourceful Bingo manages to make a phone call, testify in court, and give CPR to his unconscious master.

The plucky little pup also shoots collegiate-rule three pointers, crochets a double-knit quilt, and barks out the melody of the "Star Spangled Banner" while tap dancing and accompanying himself on the ukelele. Due to the success of "Bingo," Fox has decided to produce a sequel entitled "Bingo Goes To Washington," where desperate Democrats designate the delightful dog to be the presidential candidate for '92.

However, Bingo's political ambitions are shattered when he is caught with a seedy looking Cocker Spaniel at an adult movie theater in Sarasota, Florida... "Poodlegate!"

— THE DOCTOR —

A dramatic, heart-warming, and bittersweet tale about an ailing man who batt.....

— ROBIN HOOD —

Actually, this preview was slightly confusing. If "Robin Hood" is a British legend, then why did Kevin Costner have an L. A. accent? The commercial I saw went like this...

Merry Man #1: I do say Robin old chap, those gentlemen over there seem bloody eager to engage in battle!

Robin: Whoooh, Dude! This forest is like totally bitchin'. It's just like major trees all over the place ya know?

Merry Man #2: Pip, Pip old chum. We must make haste so we can prepare for this vital encounter.

Robin: Chill dudes. Has like anyone seen my pet wolf, Flopsy... I feel like practicing my Tango....Hey man forget those tights....they are most heinous...Will someone like find me Susan Sarandon or something?

— BOYZ 'N THE HOOD —

The X-rated sequel to "Robin Hood." Robin helps tutor some young Merry Men (after they mistakenly spell his name, "Prince of Theifz") and develops a "special" relationship with his pupils.

— TERMINATOR II —

This time around, Arnold Schwarzenegger is billed as a kinder, gentler, killer Cyborg. In the first one, the grimacing Terminator won't stop until he viciously bludgeons every human in sight.

But the new, improved Arnold, under orders to preserve human life, is content just to blast a few guys in the knee-caps and good naturedly quip, "Hasta La Vista, Baby," as they hop around in comical agony.

Bison soccer opens tomorrow vs. Temple

Jon Wise—The Bucknellian

Co-captain Keith Goodling '92 will provide senior leadership for the Bison soccer team, which will try and regroup from the loss of many prominent players from last season's Patriot League champions.

The men's soccer team will open its season against Temple on Saturday amidst a great deal of confusion and uncertainty regarding the effectiveness of the starting team. After losing many of last year's starters and not recruiting a solid crop of new players, head coach Craig Reynolds feels that both the opening game, as well as the first few games, will be a learning experience.

Reynolds remarked that he had certain doubts about the upcoming season. "We lost a lot since last season," he remarked, referring to captains Brandon Poe and Kirk Lorie, among others. "And we don't have as much as I thought we would coming in." After final cuts were posted, nearly every freshman who tried out had been cut, with Reynolds opting to stick with the more experienced players of last season. Despite this attempt, the team remains one of the least experienced in recent years.

Another strike against the team is the lack of scrimmages they have played due to new league rules. Consequently, the team will still be looking for the right combination of players who will play well together as a team in the opener. "I thought we had a team I was comfortable with until our practice today," said Reynolds on Thursday. "Our second team beat our first team in a scrimmage." As a result, the search for a starting squad may continue into game day.

The question marks begin in center midfield and outside back, where a dominant player has failed to show himself thus far. Reynolds maintains that he is still experimenting and that there is no real "clear cut answer." He adds, "We will have to rely on teamwork and togetherness." He also noted that he has yet to see anyone play in a real game situation, and that things can change when that occurs. In the meantime, he will simply wait for someone to rise to the occassion.

Reynolds refused to make predictions about how the team would finish, but stated that it would be a struggle to reach the .500 mark. He said their finish in the standings could hinge on the performances of a few key players including Alex Kogan '94, Jon Mackenzie '93, Dan D'Angelo '93, and co-captains Evan Goldsmith '92 and Keith Goodling '92.

He also pointed out that goalkeeper Mark Wrigley '94 would be an integral part of their success this season, as he could expect to be well tested.

Though the men's soccer team will be opening the season on Saturday against Temple, the starting squad is far from settled. The first few games could be difficult and experimental as Coach Reynolds looks to rebuild in an attempt to find a team that resembles the one he had last season.

All of the Bison's new starters will be tested early in their opening match-up with the Pride. Hofstra finished the 1990 regular season undefeated and reached the Division III semifinals before finally falling to Lycoming, 20-10. The New York school has begun to make the jump from Division III to I-AA this year and will split their season, playing five schools from each division.

Hofstra, which employs the Run and Shoot offense and a 4-3 defense, returns 11 starters from last year's edition, five on offense and six on defense, and is led by senior wide reciever Wayne Morris, who caught 49 passes for 823 yards and 11 touchdowns last year.

Hopefully Bucknell's starters will gain experience and confidence from this game and next week's home opener against Villanova, that will propel them to success once they begin their difficult conferece schedule in two weeks.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Returning All-Patriot League tight end Jeff Pape '92 will lead the Bison offense into tonight's opener against Hofstra in New York.

Football readies for season opener at Hofstra

Bison victorious in pre-season scrimmage versus Bloomsburg, 14-3

BY MITCH BENTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell football squad defeated Bloomsburg, 14-3, last Saturday in a preseason warm-up for this Friday's season opener against Hofstra.

The Bison were lead by a strong defensive effort that included holding their opponent to only 68 yards rushing, while linebacker John Toman '93 returned an interception 42 yards for a touchdown.

Bucknell head coach Lou Maranzana will lead Bucknell into its 106th football season trying to match or improve upon last year's 7-4 record, the school's winningest season in 27 years. He will also be looking to avenge last season's 42-29 opening game loss to Hofstra. This year the contest will be at night and held at Hofstra in Hempstead, NY.

Leading the strong Bison defense will be its linebackers, who include, along with Toman on the outside, Hew Woodward '93, and co-captain John Spatafore '92 in the middle. This corps was hurt by an injury to the second ranked, returning tackler Kevin Kane '93, who will be forced to miss the game due to an ankle injury. Back-ups will include both Todd Hardy '94 and Dan Zappa '94.

The defensive line returns three starters from a year ago along with experienced senior tackle Bill Pisano '92. The starters at the defensive end positions are John Lusk '93 and Roosevelt Smith '92. Janne Kilpelainen '93 returns at the other tackle. Shane Lympus '93 and Cecil Boone '94 expect to see a great deal of action as reserves.

In the defensive backfield the Bison must replace three starters, including All-American free safety Mike Augsberger '91. The lone returning starter is Bob Marshall '92, who will play cornerback after a preseason stint at strong safety. Debuting at the other corner will be George Rocchino '92.

Free safety will be occupied by Ian DiBernardo '92, while Blaine Fawcett will start at strong safety. Second stringers include Matt Sniegocki '93 and Rob Frass '93.

The offense is a source of many of this season's question marks because it returns only two starters. Fortunately for the Bison, both earned All-Patriot League honors in 1990.

Returning at tight end is two-time letter winner Jeff Pape '92 while Brian Henesey '92 returns at tailback needing only 37 more yards rushing to become Bucknell's third player in history to record 2,000 career yards. If Henesey gains 660 yards this season, he will become the school's all-time leading rusher.

One of the Bison's biggest questions will be the offensive line. The squad must replace "the Beast", the nickname given to last year's line, which was the strength of the offense. The most game experience comes at tackle where Jeff Hart '93 had significant playing time last year, and Eric Rutter '93 who started three games at defensive tackle. Starting at the guard spots are Eric Green '93 and defensive convert Craig Knauer '93. The center will be Vince Mays '94.

Replacing last year's very talented recieving duo of Lester Erb '91 and Dan Scocca '91 is also a great concern for the coaching staff. The probable replacements will be the foursome of Mark Harrison '92, Chris Esposito '92, Hank Ramsey '92, and David Berardinelli '93.

For the second season in a row quarterback will be a crucial question mark for the offense. Last year Todd Hatajik '91 was forced to replace two-year record setting quarterback Scott Auchenbach '90, with very little varsity experience and proceeded to set a number of school marks, including the record for most touchdown passes in a season (21).

Hatajik's back-up last season, Jeff Kelly '92, will look to step in and continue the tradition while recovering from off-season knee surgery. He is making his first start since playing safety during his sophomore year. Backing up Kelly will be Greg Coverdale '92 and Scott Mitchell '94.

Sharing time with co-captain Henesey at tailback will be two time letter winner Matt Walsh '93. Also sure to see playing time will be Joe Vargo '93 and Kevin McElvene '93, the scrimage's leading rusher with 31 yards. Jeff Wall '93 will start at fullback, backed by Ron Mesaros '92.

Handling all of the place-kicking duties will be Justin Frick '94 and Toman will once again share the punting duties with Jason Fralick '93. The kick returners include Walsh, Ramsey, and Damon Garner '94.

Field Hockey travels to Connecticut for tourney

BY JAMIE DIAFERIA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bison field hockey team opens its season on Saturday at the University of Connecticut against Villanova. The winner of the game will play the winner of the U. Conn-Rhode Island match on Sunday. The same starting squad that carried the team to a record of 4-12 last season will start again in the upcoming contests.

With the team carrying fifteen returning players from last season, Coach Jen Averill is confident that the experience of her players will finally pay off. The game against Villanova will mark the two year anniversary since the Bison received a trouncing at their hands, and, as Averill remarked, the revenge factor will be intense on Saturday. She added that she thinks this Bison team can win "if we play up to our potential."

The co-captains this season are Meghan Clark '92 and Amber Baxter '92. They will be joined by Jeanne Aurand '92, Katrina Mueller '93, and Danielle Ward '93. Ward will be the starter in goal and Averill looks for her to provide the stability the team will need to be successful. Dana Bruce '92 will also provide some leadership as a senior, the class Averill is looking to for inspiration and motivation.

She also expects a big season from Elmira Baldwin '94, last season's high scorer and Patriot League rookie of the year, as well as Tricia Way '94, who was recently moved from defense to offense.

This season the Bison will be once again be playing a tough schedule that includes the likes of Hofstra, American, Penn St. and their perennial rival, Lafayette. Averill commented that it will take strong performances from her team to compete with the latter two teams. After their match on Saturday, the team can look forward to five straight September home games.

With the start of the regular season just around the corner, field hockey coach Jen Averill is preparing for what she hopes will be at least a nine–win season. With a starting squad that is stacked with sophomores and juniors, the team is confident in their abilities and excited to show what two years of rebuilding can do.

Women's soccer prepares for second varsity season

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's women's soccer team will begin its sophomore campaign on the varsity level this Saturday at 2:30 p.m.

After a rookie season in which the squad won only two games, Head Coach Toby Lovecchio is preparing his team for the challenges of this season.

"We'll be using some freshmen and our returning players will only have had one year of experience on the varsity level," he said. However, Coach Lovecchio stressed that despite the fact that overcoming that inexperience will be difficult, he likes having a young team that will be aggressive now and provide a base for the team to build on in the future.

Coach Lovecchio also emphasized that this year's team will not depend upon any key individuals but rather on a "total team effort" and he believes that the team is prepared to put in that kind of effort.

"We are looking to be consistent, tough, and mentally prepared, and get one hundred percent effort from every player both in practice and during the game," continued Lovecchio.

In addition to effort and toughness, Lovecchio believes that a little luck in the close games may be all that is needed to turn a one goal loss into a tie or victory.

The coach also feels the combination of experience in the backfield and the addition of some new people up front will help bolster the Bison's scoring which again would make a difference in the tight games.

Although the Bison are sure to continue to experience some of the growing pains that accompany such a young program, Lovecchio has some lofty goals for this year's squad. "I'd like to do well in the Patriot League that includes finishing .500 and making the post-season play-offs."

With a dedicated coach and an enthusiastic team, the women's soccer team seems to be moving in the right direction. The continued challenge of trying to build a program at the varsity level is a great responsibility for such a young squad, but look for a tough, aggressive team this season that will provide a foundation for the future of Bucknell women's soccer.

"Finishing .500 and making the post-season playoffs...are attainable if we can get individual dedication and translate that into total team effort."
— Toby Lovecchio
Women's Soccer Head Coach

Though he realizes these are high expectations, he also believes they "are attainable if we can get individual dedication and translate that into total team effort."

Micheal Klemen—The Bucknellian

Co-captain Genine Streeper '92 will try to lead the Bison women's soccer team to the playoffs in their second varsity season.

New TIP policies implemented

BY MARK ABRAHAMSEN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Seven of the final ten Trustee Implementation Planning (TIP) recommendations have been formally instituted this semester while the final three are "in process" and are currently being reviewed by various committees for final confirmation and implementation.

Dave Skena '92, Co-chair of TIP, noted, "The TIP recommendations represent the best efforts of the students to make the decisions by the Trustees as livable as possible." TIP is the conglomeration of several committees run by University students, faculty and administration.

The final TIP reports already in effect are as follows:

• Sophomore Rush: Formal rush for membership in Greek organizations is limited to ten days at the beginning of each fall term.

• Full participation: The Inter-Fraternity and Panhellenic Councils will develop a formal rush in such a way that participation will be maximized for those students seeking Greek affiliation.

• Officers Resident in Chapters: Three chapter officers (President, House Manager, and Treasurer) are required to live in the house.

• Residence Managers: Two non-undergraduate Residence Managers will oversee the uphill and downhill chapters, and a peer Resident Assistant will live in each chapter house.

• Accessibility of Chapter Houses: Chapters will continue their "open house" policy for non-members, as guests may visit houses at any time when they are open to visitors.

• Social Limitations: Social/residential units and organizations are not permitted to sponsor more than two social functions per month at which alcohol is to be available. Freshmen may be invited to all functions sponsored by University-recognized groups except when alcohol is being served.

• Four-year Residency Requirement: Students are expected to live on campus in University-owned or recognized residence facilities (on- or off-campus) for all four years that they are full-time students.

"Other than sophomore rush, I don't think that people have felt the effect of anything yet. Perhaps in the upcoming months, you'll see people reacting and responding."
—David Skena, Co-Chair of TIP Committee

The following final three recommendations are currently being worked on and are nearly completed:

• Residential Life Committee: This committee will help provide direction for all non-Greek residential units, the Office of Residential Life, and Residence Hall Association. It will explore a phased plan for allowing freshmen to live in Special Interest Houses and Theme Halls with upperclass students and place upperclassmen in Residential Colleges in buildings currently reserved for freshmen.

• Funding for Residential Hall Activities: The University is considering instituting a modest Residence Activity Fee in 1992-93 for each resident student.

Columbian quincentennial begins

Peter Ho– The Bucknellian

In the keynote address for the Quincentennial Celebration, Director of the Center for the Study of World Religions at Harvard University, Lawrence Sullivan, stressed the common bond shared by all peoples of the Americas.

BY LAURA GRISIN AND DOUG HONABACH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

"American Encounters: The Making of Natives and the Masking of Religion," Monday night's lecture by Professor Lawrence Sullivan, director of the center for the study of world religions at Harvard University, kicked off The Columbian Quincentennial 1492-1992: A Critical Investigation, the religion department's two-year project aims to examine the impact of the Columbian Encounter.

The lecture was first in a series of events to include workshops, visiting scholars, exhibits, and conferences.

As next year will mark the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' landfall in the Americas, the religion department has organized this project to investigate the landing "not only for its historical impact but for its current ramifications as well," according to John Grim, assistant professor of religion.

The project coordinators hope to bring to the fore the Native and Euro-American attitudes that were set during the Encounter period and how these attitudes remain today. "The issue of perspective is important here.

The way in which Americans see themselves and each other is based on this initial encounter. It is an issue of American identity," said Grim.

Among the topics to be presented are the different perspectives on ecological problems that have resulted from the initial European contact. For instance, a $50 billion hydroelectric scheme in northern Quebec, the James Bay project, has reversed river flows and created lakes to provide hydroelectricity for Canada and the U.S.

"This has been devastating to the environment and is destroying the lives of the natives," said Grim.

Other topics will include the issues of religion conflict and archaeological controversies.

There will also be a workshop for high school teachers on the teaching of Native American culture and history.

Fasting, celebration mark Jewish holidays

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Jewish students at Bucknell this week joined in the worldwide celebration of Rosh Hashana with a week of fellowship, religious reflection and celebration.

The ten-day period "is an opportunity to right our wrongs; it's a period of fasting and forgiveness culminating in Yom Kippur, the Jewish new year," said Kip Lombardo GR, resident assistant of Martin House, the special interest house for Jewish religious studies.

In Jewish theology, he explained, Rosh Hashana is the time when the gates of heaven are opened, and Jews have an opportunity to seek forgiveness for sins committed in the past year, so that they will be erased from the eternal record.

In addition to atoning for sins against God, Jews must also seek forgiveness from others they have wronged during the past year, explained Eiton Tabak '94.

At Bucknell the holidays began with a Sunday night dinner sponsored by Hillel, the Jewish students' organization. Also planned are car pools to religious services in Sunbury and meals before and after Yom Kippur, a 24-hour period of fasting. The group also sponsors the annual Holocaust memorial program, Hillel's most visible event.

The events of the week are only a small part of the schedule of social events planned for the year. "This week focuses more on the religious side of Hillel," explained group president Jennifer Travis '92, "but it's really more of a social group than a religious group."

Travis said there are about 200 students on the group's mailing list, although she estimated there are another 150 to 200 Jewish Bucknell students who are not active in the group. Hillel's list of students is generated from responses to an area on enrollment forms to indicate religious preference, but Travis said many students, for a variety of reasons, do not indicate a religious preference.

Among other activities planned are Sunday brunches at Martin House and Friday night dinners, usually at various restaurants around Lewisburg.

Another important service for Jewish students is the kosher kitchen provided in Martin House. Lombardo said "this is the first time in a while" the kitchen has been kosher, meaning food must be prepared according to strict dietary and cleanliness laws contained in the Jewish Talmud. Kosher laws include abstaining from pork and using separate utensils for food containing meat and milk.

"For a lot of students thinking of coming to Bucknell that [lack of kosher facilities] would be a draw

University revises special events alcohol guidelines

BY TIMOTHY W. KIRK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Changes in the special events alcohol policy and revisions in its enforcement, including an unprecedented one month probationary period, have been instituted for the Fall term, 1991.

The changes represent a collaborative effort involving Dean of Students John Dunlop, Associate Dean of Residential Life Edward Dadez, Assistant Dean for Housing Gerald Commerford, and Director of the Department of Public Safety Vincent DeCerchio.

The revised policies reflect a recognized need for change "in the areas of security monitors and training of bartenders and security monitors," as well as a continuing effort to educate students on the policy's enforcement procedures.

Although the office of residential life notes previous training of bartenders has been adequate, problems such as large class size, ineffective training methods, and difficulties discussing alcohol education and University policy during the same session have arisen.

The policy also states that a security monitor "must be 21 years of age or older, may not be an undergraduate, and may not be a member of the organization sponsoring the social activity." Finding qualified individuals in accordance with this policy to work as monitors has been difficult. Changes in training and eligibility for security monitors have been implemented in response to these problems.

Training for Intervention Procedures by Servers of alcohol (TIPS) nas been integrated into the educational program mandatory for all bartenders and security monitors. The three-hour program is designed for a class of 20 and is taught by a representative from the Quality Beverage Company in Hazleton. The University also holds a one- hour session explaining the alcohol policy. The session is mandatory for all monitors and bartenders.

The eligibility of security monitors has also been changed to read: "the individual must be 21 years of age or older and may also be a member of the organization sponsoring the social activity." While this change appears to be more convenient for the sponsoring organization, it also places the blame of underage consumption wholly on the organization, not the security monitor. Monitors and bartenders must also work for the entire social event. Allowing monitors to work on shifts is not conducive for effective observation of alcoholic intake.

• Renovation of the Old Bison: The University Space Committee will be asked to consider a plan for the renovation of the Old Bison and attached house as a social activities center, where informal student gatherings and facilities for Craft Shop programs could place.

It appears a trend is forming in which administration is asking for more input from student groups to help improve Bucknell.

Barbara Shailor, vice president for student services, said, "The more involvement we have from the student body, both in and out of the classroom, the better the campus is. It definitely appears that there exists better communication and a better working relationship between students, faculty, and administration."

Shailor is also currently working on a funding proposal with Kari Kuehl, associate director of student life for developmental programs, for expanding freshman social programs.

Another department experiencing change that will have a significant influence on student organizations is the Committee on Complementary Activities.

The large TIP committee was unique in that it provided a fair representation of the entire student body, including Greeks and independents, men and women, and sophomores, juniors and seniors. But it will likely take some time before the campus community becomes fully acclimated to the changes.

"Other than sophomore rush, I don't think that people have felt the effect of anything yet," said Skena. "Perhaps in the upcoming months, you'll see people reacting and responding."

The final TIP document presented by the students is now being studied nationally by other universities, as many other colleges are emulating Bucknell's innovative social/residential programs.

Right: The Trustee Implementation Program, co-chaired by Dave Skena '92, will begin this year to put into effect decisions made last spring which affect many aspects of social life on campus.

The next event of the Quincentennial project, which is funded bythe Pitcairn-Crabbe Foundation of Pittsburgh, will be a lecture by Ines M. Talamantez, a member of the Apache nation and professor at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Talamantez's lecture, "Like Pollen in the Wind: Native American Responses to 500 Years of Religious and Cultural Exploitation," will critique the one-sidedness of written American history.

The November 6 lecture will be open to the public.

How is it that a country that imports almost half its oil can afford to waste it?

When a little thing like keeping the right pressure in our tires would save America over two million gallons of gas a day. Using lower octane fuels–two and a half million. And driving just five miles per hour slower would save still another two million gallons.

When solutions are this easy, there's no excuse good enough.

Fraternities honored at summer conventions

BY MARJORIE STINCHCOMBE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Nine of Bucknell University's 12 fraternities received recognition from their national chapters in the form of awards and honors presented at summer leadership conventions.

Leading the way was Bucknell's chapter of Kappa Delta Rho, which was given the national fraternity's Most Outstanding Chapter award. The national fraternity gives the award to the chapter it views as best in the country.

Michael Thomas '94 was named as the national's Most Outstanding Pledge.

The awards do not come as a surprise to Associate Dean of Student Life Ed Dadez. "Three out of the last four years a chapter at Bucknell has won their national fraternity's top award," Dadez said.

This summer, Sigma Alpha Epsilon won the Chapter Achievement Award for the ninth year in a row.

The Delta Upsilon chapter was awarded the Director's Award for Chapter Excellence. The Bucknell chapter of DU was one of only three chapters in the national organization to receive the award.

Lambda Chi Alpha and Phi Gamma Delta each won academic awards.

Other awards included Tau Kappa Epsilon's membership recruitment award, Chi Phi's philanthropy award, Sigma Phi Epsilon's award for best adviser and Sigma Alpha Mu's award for best recorder.

The range of awards presented this summer shows the depth and diversity of the system, according to Dadez.

He further commented that the awards "show that the system has improved and that each chapter is working toward excellence."

IFC President Denis Maguire added to Dadez's comments, agreeing that the awards "really say something about our system nationally and show we have a comparatively strong system."

Allie Zadroga—The Bucknellian

Word that nine of 12 Bucknell fraternities received some form of recognition from their national chapters pleased Ed Dadez, associate dean of student life.

As Bucknell's fraternities continue to accumulate chapter awards each summer, Dadez says he expects even more impressive results in coming years. Dadez said that he would like to see "double the amount of awards in order to show [that] the good things we are doing are being recognized by the national fraternities."

Student pleads not guilty in theft of CDs

BY TARA G. GILLIGAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A Bucknell student charged in the April 28 burglary of over 20 compact discs from an apartment on South Seventh Street will plead not guilty to criminal charges in a trial set for November.

Alex Lyras '92 has been charged withone count each of burglary, criminal trespass (both felonies), theft of movable property (misdemeanor), and two counts of criminal mischief (summary offenses).

Defense attorney Paul Brann confirmed that Lyras plans to plead not guilty and said, "I am optimistic that we are going to have these charges dismissed." Lyras had no comment.

The date of thecourt of common pleas trial was moved to Novemeber, the next term of court, following the defendant's request for a continuance, since both Lyras, of Scarsdale, NY, and Brann were out of the Commonwealth during jury selection this summer.

At the preliminary arraignment on May 16, Lyras was released on $10,000 bail.

The defense waived its rights to a preliminary hearing.

Charges were filed after Lyras was allegedly seen jumping out of the second story window at 36 S. 7th Street.

According to the affidavit of probable cause, submitted by the arresting officer, Travis Burrows of the Lewisburg Police Department, the defendant admitted to entering the apartment and said that he was downstairs going through CDs when he heard a person enter the residence.

Also, in the initial investigation, "the defendant admitted to taking CDs" and said that he had kicked out the upstairs screen window, crawled outside, jumped, and ran from the scene, according to the affidavit.

Burrows also states, in the affidavit, that the defendant claims to have returned the CDs.

Burrows would answer no additional questions concerning the affidavit or the impending trial.

New umbrella group provides 'network' for women's issues

BY ELIZABETH DANNEBERG
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A new campus umbrella group, Women Organized Now (WON), includes over 60 members and was formed with the purpose of "creating a better atmosphere for women students on campus," says Cary Champlin '94, the group's founder.

The intent of the group is to tie together many of the existing women's organizations by increasing the awareness of women's issues and promoting female leadership. Unlike other women's organizations, WON represents a diverse group of women.

"It provides a network for women because of this diversity. For instance, if an organization needs a rape victim to speak, WON can provide them with one," said Champlin.

Among the organizations represented by WON are political action groups, sororities, women's athletic teams, literary groups and the Women's Resource Center.

Political Science Professor Patricia Misciagno, the faculty sponsor for WON, said that the group provides much needed unity among women so that "women who have different political perspectives can have a common cause."

Membership in the umbrella group includes individual representatives from a variety of women's organizations.

Among the organizations represented by WON are political action groups, sororities, women's athletic teams, literary groups, and the Women's Resource Center.

Janice Butler, director of the Women's Resource Center, provides a direct link between faculty and students where women's issues are concerned.

Although WON started out with campus representatives only,

Champlin emphasizes that, "we welcome everyone." The group has had an overwhelming response so far.

WON, which has no association with the National Organization for Women (NOW), is led by four individuals: Champlin, Liz Felter '92, chairperson of public relations; Misciagno, and an elected treasurer. The four hold separate meetings every week to organize the group for the open meetings.

The group's future plans include sending representatives to women's conferences, sponsoring events for both Parents' Weekend and the upcoming Colloquy program, creating t-shirts to sell, and sponsoring a Jan Plan to rewrite the Women's Guide to Bucknell.

WON holds meetings every other Wednesday from 12 to 1 p.m. in 302 Langone Center. The next meeting will be held Sept. 25 and is open to everyone.

Aside from changes in security monitor training and eligibility, Vince DeCerchio warns the alcohol policy has not changed. "The policy remains the same, only the procedures for enforcement are a little different" said DeCerchio.

Public Safety officers are now conducting three checks per event, during which the officers must be escorted through the social area by an officer of the organization. Identification will be requested of persons in the segregated, over-21 area, and officers will also "monitor compliance with the IFC Risk Management Policy ("BYOB")".

DeCerchio has declared the month of September a "probationary period," the purpose of which he says is to "take all participants and walk them through our enforcement procedures." The period should "eliminate misunderstandings", according to DeCerchio, and though violations will be noted, charges will not be filed for the one month period.

As resident assistant, Lombardo is trying to restore the special-interest focus of Martin House, which was populated mainly by non-Jewish students last year. This year, Lombardo explained, 90 percent of the residents are Jewish.

"We're making a concerted effort to establish a friendly, cohesive community," he said.

News Briefs On Campus:

HIV testing offered at BU

The Student Medical Service is holding an HIV testing service on Wednesday, October 2, 1991, at the Ziegler Health Center. This free, confidential program is available only by appointment.

To schedule or for additional information, call the Student Medical Service at extension 1401.

New Pastor joins L'burg Community

The First Presbyterian Church, 18 Market Street, has called the Reverend David Thow Anderson to join their parish. Reverend Anderson has served churches in Ontario, Southern California, and Paisley, Scotland.

His ministry began September 1, and he will be installed as pastor by the Northumberland Presbytery in a special service on Sunday, October 6, at 4 p.m. in the Lewisburg Church.

Medical care available at BU

The medical service at Bucknell has revised its hours for the 1991-92 year to 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. on weekdays and 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. on weekends.

The aforementioned hours are only for nurses on duty; the physicians' hours are from 9 a.m. to 11:45 a.m. and 4 p.m. to 5:45 p.m. on weekdays and between 11 a.m. and 11:45 a.m. on weekends.

Appointments must be made if the service is to include gynecological examinations, psychiatric treatments, or drug and alcohol counseling/programs.

If an emergency exists and the Student Medical Service is closed, care can be obtained at the Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room. The office of public safety will provide transportation to the hospital.

Father Kelly arrives at Bucknell

Father Jack Kelly is now officially the new Catholic Campus Minister at Bucknell. Father Kelly replaces Angelo Maraldo, now on assignment in Virginia.

Father Kelly studied at both Niagara University and Catholic University, where his graduate work was in theatre. Previously, he has worked in Wilmington, Delaware, and Philadelphia, where he has taught a range of subjects including drug and alcohol issues.

Condoms available on campus

In addition to the HIV testing, Bucknell has placed condom machines in various spots on campus in order to prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases.

These locations include the laundry areas of BU West, Gateway, Vedder, Roberts, and Swartz.

Condoms also may be purchased in the Bucknell convenience store.

Town limits use of excessive water

Due to the lack of precipitation over the past several months, Lewisburg is issuing an emergency drought warning banning nonessential use of water.

Conserving the water will mean a sharp decline in the washing of vehicles, the operating of water fountains, and the watering of lawns and other grassy areas.

More doctors recommend extra-strength HP.

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for some very strong reasons.
"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable has powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Rahmeyer, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.
"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of math education at North Carolina State University.
So go check out the HP calculator line at your college bookstore or HP retailer. You'll agree, there's no faster relief from the pain of tough problems.

Where to buy what for the least $$$

A shopping guide to living more than comfortably

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Scanning your residential palace, you've recently come to realize that there are many objects that you really need. You've learned in the last two weeks that your social life is supported by an answering machine and that your feet get cold when walking across an uncarpeted floor. Biology 101 failed to mention that plastic not specifically marked "microwave safe" melts when it is nuked. And how are you expected to host a cookout at your house with only beverages and no barbecue? A grill is a must.

Solutions and rather economical purchases for all your problems and profuse desires can be found in local Lewisburg and area stores.

-ANSWERING MACHINES-

These fun devices which will drive your parents crazy can be purchased at three locations besides the bookstore. They are Cole's Hardware Store (55 N. Second St., Lewisburg), Ames (Rt. 15 N., Lewisburg), and Kmart (Rt. 15 S., Shamokin Dam). Prices are comparable, but Kmart has the largest selection of models.

-POSTERS-

Are your walls looking bare? From Mon., Sept. 16th through Fri., Sept. 20th, the bookstore will sponsor a huge poster sale. Posters range in size and subject from Claude Monet to Ansel Adams to Cindy Crawford. Prices are comparable or lower than those at poster stores in suburban malls.

-CARPET-

Remnants are the cheapest way to carpet your floors and they can be found in many locations, including Carpetman (600 S. Front St., Milton, 742-3733), Central Penn Carpet (Rt.15 S., Winfield, 524-7744), Oberdorf's (439 N. Tenth St., Lewisburg, 523-0500), and the Rug Outlet (Brookpark Farms, Rt. 45, Lewisburg, 524-9494). Remnants vary in cost due to size and the quality of the carpet. Most are twelve feet wide and various lengths. However, the Rug Outlet sells small five by eight pieces for $39.99.

-PLANTS AND OTHER GREENERY-

Market St. boasts three florists (Dogwood Hill, Martin's, and Stein's) which all feature hanging baskets and potted plants. While supplies last, Martin's is offering a 20% discount to Bucknellians. Stein's florist features ninety-nine cent roses. Route 15 features two full-fledged nurseries—Country Cupboard's (Rt. 15 N.) and Gilbert's Garden Center (Rt. 15 S.). Ames and Kmart also have flowers, are convenient, and haveverry low prices.

-LOFTS-

Bucknell University permits lofts that are free-standing structures. The salespeople at Buffalo Lumber and Hardware Inc. (441 N. Tenth St.) and Lewisburg Builders Supply Co. (Rt. 15 and Hafer Rd.) can assist you in building such a loft. They will suggest the wood and other building supplies and tips. Lewisburg Builders Supply will even construct the loft for you. Average lofts costs run between $45 and $105. Lumber supply companies outside of Lewisburg have cheaper prices on wood, but the salesman can not offer much assistance in actual construction as they are not familiar with the concept of lofts in dormitories.

Nancy Leon—The Bucknellian
Turning a dormitory into a residence hall is important to Ronald Schultz '94.

-FANS-

In case you have not broken down and already bought one, Cole's Hardware, Ames, and Kmart all stock fans. Cole's carries large and small oscillating, box, and screen window fans.

-EVERYTHING WITH WHICH TO EAT-

Ames, Cole's, and Kmart all have aisles of microwavable containers, utensils, glasses, dish towels, and pitchers. The Mercantile on Market St. offers wine glasses, silverware, and towels which are more department store-like in appearance.

-GRILLS-

If you live in a Mod, Gateway, or off-campus, then head, once more, to Ames, Cole's, or Kmart to pick up the ultimate in outdoor cooking. Grills are surprisingly inexpensive—usually under $35. Hibachis at Rea and Derrick sell for about $4.

-CRATES and STORAGE BOXES-

Besides the "Big Three," the bookstore, Dollar General on Market St., and the Mercantile stock crates and storage items. The bookstore and the Mercantile offer the most unique colors and shapes.

-REFRIGERATORS-

Refrigerators can be bought at Ames and Kmart. Ames' selection is limited to a small square-sized Avanti model for $117. Kmart offers more choices and better prices. Bucknell's physical plant will rent new refrigerators for $110 per year and pre-owned ones for $80. At the end of the year students receive $70 back for the new models and $50 back for the used variety.

-CURTAINS and BLINDS-

If the yellowed blinds and multi-colored curtains that Bucknell provides do not suit your interior design desires then head to Ames or Kmart and pick up a new set of mini blinds for $8 to $20 or one of a variety of styles and colors of curtains made to fit any size of windows.

-FURNITURE-

Furniture is not inexpensive or easily found in the Lewisburg vicinity. Ames and Kmart carry beanbag chairs, bookcases, and tables. Used furniture can be found in New Berlin at Willow's New and Used Furniture and Appliances (225 Front St.). IKEA does ship furniture and its thick catalog provides a lot of choices.

Bison Tales

I felt a surge of power and strength as I rammed the accelerator down and shot towards the Bucknell campus... towards independence. Strangely enough, I remembered...

...a pleasant spring morning when Ms. Flakey's first grade class sat diligently drawing dogs and dinosaurs...

"Okay children," Ms. Flakey enthused, "it's time to scamper our little toes down to the arts and crafts room!"

"Yeaaaaaaaah!"

"I wonder which one of my hard-working students should be a line-leader?"

"Oh, me, Oh, Oh, me, Oh, Oh, Oh me, me, me, me, ohhhhhhhh!"

Ms. Flakey watched with scornful amusement as her begging students eagerly threw themselves from desks while flinging their arms around and making pathetic, sea-lion type moaning noises.

"Okay Tina Brownoskie, why don't you be the line leader for today."

Tina, who had been planted pristinely during the class' desperate outbursts, smiled modestly and strolled over to assume her position. Tina always got to be line leader.

Her arduous duties consisted of:

A. Leading the line.
B. Stopping at the Arts and Crafts room.
C. Knocking on the door of the Arts and Crafts room.

Of course, Ms. Flakey was usually nearby, discussing Cenasta with Mr. Dipper the hall monitor, but a privilege was still a privilege.

As we sat in Arts and Crafts, earnestly dabbing away at paper plates with water colors, the utter injustice of the situation hit me. I wanted my own moment in the spotlight! And maybe it was the force of my frustrations or perhaps the lingering fumes of glue and paint thinner that forced me to do it... but as I walked towards the paintbrush rack, I put a booger on Tina Brownoskie's arm.

She screamed bloody murder. It was as if Dracula had broken into her bedroom, bared his fangs, and spread vampire snot on all her limbs. I was whisked away to Mr. Stonethrow's office for a horrible punishment...

Yes, the political metaphor prevalent in the above scenario is painfully transparent. But I daresay that this tragic tale could also be used to elucidate a common social phenomenon as well.

As we friends, students, and countrymen comply with our craving to congregate, we must also wrestle with yet another incessant internal need: the desire to be recognized from within our particular microcosm; to feel special, to have power, and to be admired. As you observe various social interactions, you might notice everyday situations which embrace this concept...

Student #1: Man, you should have seen me last night. I was spewing food out my window for like three hours.

Student #2: (Admiringly) Three Hours! Wow! I knew someone who pitched his pasta for like forty minutes... but three hours!!! That must be some kind of record or something!

Student #1: Man, I still have imprints on my stomach from the window sill.

Student #2: (More Admiringly) Wow! You mean they're still there!?! Doug's went away after a few minutes...can I see?. Please, Please can I be the one to see them first? Oh please?!?

Student#1: Then, after I wretched my rations, I went around putting boogers on people's arms.

Student#2: (Overwhelmed) Wow!!!

Of course plotting posers are eager to tread upon newly paved ground and the stakes soon escalate:

Person #1: Excuse me, did I inform you that last night I weaned my cuisine out the window for like three hours.

Person #2: Big deal. My mother could do that with one kidney tied behind her back. I know a guy who spittled his vittles for at least three DAYS!!!

Perhaps, as we continue to rocket down the highway of life, we devise strategies that help us come to terms with our desire for recognition... Strategies that don't involve being arbitrarily appointed by an officious administrator or toying with the self-destruct button. Or is the human race destined to become puppets who aren't even cognizant of their own unhappiness... but only aware of towering auto-insurance bills, scorching red marks on their stomachs, and a dearth of mucus?

Bison on the Loose

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

For those who have made the pilgrimage to Happy Valley, Penn State football conjures up images of blue and white painted fans roaring as they catch the wave of Beaver Stadium. The excitement that the Nittany Lions evoke can only be understood after experiencing it firsthand. With only four home football games of our own this season, State College, at only an hour's distance, is the perfect Saturday roadtrip for football and fun - lots of fun!

At Penn State, football is not just a game, but an event. The day begins at least three hours before kickoff as fans gather in the cow pastures to tailgate. Food and beverage abound here.

Once inside Beaver Stadium, you will become a part of a screaming crowd of over 90,000 gathered to cheer the #4 ranked Lions onto victory.

After the game, especially a victorious one, fans rampage down College Ave. to celebrate. Following the initial post-game celebration, students return home to nap for the evening ahead, but roadtrippers may want to wander over to 511 E. Calder Way to relax at Nittany Hot Springs.

Before 6 p.m., an hour in the hot tub for two is $12. After 6 p.m., the price is raised to $22. Two additional guests may recuperate for free. The cost for six friends is $25 before six and $40 afterwards. Alcoholic beverages (with proper I.D. of course) and munchies are allowed.

Other dinnertime options include The Diner, a rowdy and cheap student favorite; Babies, a diner reminiscent of the '50s in decor and price; Spats, a jazzy coffeehouse with delicious moderately priced food; and the Tavern—locals' choice for fine dining.

With a P.S. Zoo, Gap, Benetton, and an overload of Greek items, shopping is also a good dinnertime option.

The Penn State party scene supports dozens of bars, hundreds of apartment parties, and over 40 fraternity houses. The antics on the street are also worth taking in.

While State College sports a larger number of hotels than Lewisburg, most are booked a year in advance for football weekends. It's best to know someone on campus or really like the floor of the last party location or the backseat of your car.

Tickets for this wild and crazy weekend can be obtained by calling the Penn State Football Ticket Line starting the Monday before the desired game. The $20 tickets are available on a first call, first serve basis for the Boston College game on Sept. 28th, Rutgers on Oct. 19th, and WVU on Oct. 26th. All games start at 1 p.m. Parking at the stadium is $5 and you steer your car east on Rt. 45 for 55 miles to get there.

Behind the scenes at The Bucknellian

In the past few years, Bucknellians have been fairly lucky. Compared with many schools, there are few significant incidents of criminal misconduct that occur here. When they do happen, it is the responsibility of the campus newspaper to inform the community of the danger posed by the individuals involved.

Within recent memory, The Bucknellian has run only a handful of detailed stories about people who pose a threat to members of the University community. We reported on one student who allegedly carried a loaded handgun around campus without a permit. We told the story of another Bucknellian who reportedly broke one man's jaw and ruptured another's eardrum in a fight after he thought one of them had tried to steal his sunglasses. Another time we reported that a student in Larison Hall had to be forcibly restrained by several safety officers after he attempted to shove the Director of Public Safety down a flight of stairs.

Each of these stories also included the name of the student accused, but the decision to run each name was made individually and was anything but arbitrary. In each case, we determined (after hours of meetings, discussions, arguments, and soul searching) that including the name of the accused student was critical if we were to fulfill our obligation to the campus community; that is, to warn them of potential dangers to their well-being.

The debate centers on the nature of attending a private institution of higher education. Is Bucknell an expensive incubator where students can make their mistakes with impunity, where they can learn in all areas, including behavior and responsibility? Such was the argument of Dean of Students John Dunlop in the April 19, 1991 issue of The Bucknellian. He said, "Historically, the University has taken the position that a student's mistake—behavioral mistake—is a private matter between the institution and that individual."

Or, as Bob Ritter, Associate Editor of The Bucknellian, argued in the same issue, is Bucknell a place where we live and work just like any other? Said Ritter, "Bucknell students often want very badly to be treated as adults. This is how adults are treated everywhere else—break the law and face the consequences. The Bucknell bubble should not shield these adults from responsibility for their actions."

Again this week we have grappled with the issue of running the name of a student accused of a crime. Again we were forced to debate how best to serve the campus community. And again we have decided that The Bucknellian must act like any other newspaper and alert its readers to a possible threat.

That decision was not made lightly.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Student finds Gideons insensitive

TO THE EDITOR:

I'm all for free speech, and as a religion minor, I am interested in each religious denomination, and am curious to hear what each believes. I even accepted the little green copy of New Testament psalms and scriptures from the Gideons outside the Langone Center on Monday without comment, trying to be open-minded. As the day progressed, however, I realized what I was seeing.

Judging by the buzz of negative comments I overheard throughout the last few days, I would venture to guess that a large number of students were not interested in what the group was offering, and some were intimidated or upset by their presence.

I think this is because in their effort to be heard, this particular group was, to say the least, insensitive to their audience. Because of the large numbers of people involved in distributing the scripture books, it was impossible to politely avoid the Gideons. I had to not only refuse the scripture book the second time it was offered to me, but had to push around the man's outstretched arm to continue on my way. This should not have been necessary.

Nor should it have been necessary for people to refuse more than once. I refer specifically to a tour group led by a friend of mine, which happened to include two Jewish families. This tour guide knew two students who were assisting the Gideons. Her group politely refused the books as they entered the library. However, when they exited, the same student assistants asked again if the group would like the "free gift" they were offering. Since the assistants in question obviously recognized the tour group (having known the guide), I think it was out of line to offer the books again. Asking twice was itself disturbing, but was particularly insulting to the Jewish families involved because Monday was the Jewish high holiday Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year. Needless to say, we probably will not see those prospective students in next year's freshman class.

I expect some pushiness from members of missionary religions, but I also expect a certain level of respect for others from any group using this campus as their public forum. Perhaps the Gideons and their Bucknell student assistants were simply unaware of the bad choice of day to be here, but since this is noted on most modern calendars, I would think such an insult could have been avoided. More importantly, no matter what day any group comes to campus to deliver its message, I do not care to be overwhelmed by their presence and made to feel intimidated or uncomfortable because I cannot politely refuse them. This particular event was insulting and upsetting to many students of all faiths because of its inappropriate scheduling and overbearing presence, and the actions of some of the students involved in the effort were absolutely rude. I certainly hope that the next time this group comes to Bucknell, they at least consider that not everyone shares their view or wants to, and I hope they look at their calendar first.

OPINIONS

On my mind...

As I returned to Tri-State U. three weeks ago, I was as curious as anyone to check out the new freshman directory. But while many others were having heated arguments over who was the pick of the litter in the new class of '95, I wanted to see where the incoming 938 students were coming from.

And as always, I found the same results—a huge majority of wide-eyed Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers, and New Jerseyians. Sure, there are a handful from the nearby states of Maryland, Connecticut, and Massachusetts. But once again, the students' demographics are awfully centralized.

Likely the main reason I care about this issue is that as a native Coloradan, I wonder why Mr. Langone and the rest of Bucknell's Board of Trustees enjoy keeping this institution of higher education as just a regional school.

Yes, it is ultimately the decision of the Trustees as to how they want to see this school run and who walks through the halls of Coleman and Dana. The people in power are missing a golden opportunity to raise this University's status a tier or two in comparison to other fine schools in the United States.

I don't understand why University recruiters choose not to inform high school juniors and seniors about what Bucknell can offer them—it appears they stop going south at Virginia and west at New Trier Township High near Chicago, Illinois (which is a fine high school, but we can expand a little further).

Believe it or not, there are some bright kids whose fathers are doctors, lawyers or vice presidents that reside in the West and are able to but I'm also a big fan of diversity. If the University were able to bring in more students from the Sun Belt, Texas, California, and the Rocky Mountain states, the different perspectives they would bring would be a welcome complement to the campus community.

When I first started at Bucknell and returned home during breaks, people would ask me where I went to college. I always said, "A small school in Pennsylvania." Once I realized that I wasn't doing my own part in marketing Bucknell and shouldn't feel embarrassed that I was told that a woman from Penn State (of all places) had gotten the job instead. In this competitive world, it's fine that a woman beat me out for a job, but not one from Penn State. Uh-uh. It made me think that the employer believes Penn State produces a better education than Bucknell. Why?

Well, Penn State is nationally known, and its football coach, Joe Paterno, is famous for having his teams in the Top 10 while stressing academics. But hey, if I knew that certain state schools received more recognition and were held in higher regard to employers, I may have ended up at the University of Michigan, North Carolina, or Virginia. Or I could have saved my folks about $70,000 and attended CU in Boulder, Colo.

But ultimately I think I made the right choice in coming here. I've been impressed by Bucknell, but whether or not it impresses graduate schools and employers across the country remains to be seen.

"Wake up, Trustees! There is more to life than what the Northeast U.S. has to offer. Some intelligent kids are out there - find them."

kick in the $100,000 for a four-year Bucknell education. So why not go after those untapped resources?

Wake up, Trustees! There is more to life than what the Northeast U.S. can offer. Some intelligent kids are out there—find them.

One big complaint here is the homogeneity of the student body. Look at any random Bucknell student, and you'll find the "Three C's": Caucasian, conservative, and career-conscious. I fit those descriptions just as well as anyone here, wasn't going to a nationally-known "name" university, when people ask me the same question now, I answer: "Bucknell. It's a fabulous school in Pennsylvania with about 3400 students."

I enjoy promoting the University back home, but nevertheless I still receive a few setbacks. Two summers ago I applied for a summer internship near my hometown. After the interview I was fairly confident that I had the job, but I received a phone call a week later and

Travis Elliott—The Bucknellian

Travis and Laura travel to the metropolis of Bloomsburg to sample Harry's chicken bam-bam and Buffalo wings.

BY TRAVIS ELLIOTT
AND LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writers

Our never-ending search for fine cuisine—in Central Pennsylvania of all places—took us to a small, yet renowned grill in the heart of exciting downtown Bloomsburg. Harry's Grille, which is located beneath the green canopy of the historic Hotel Magee, offers a relaxed dining atmosphere with just the right touch of class, as evidenced by the dark green marble tables and the brass-railed wooden bar. Requesting the window table is a definite must as it offers a view of charming Bloomsburgians interacting in their native habitat.

Pam, our server for the evening, was polite, although she could have used a little caffeine to speed up the service. For an appetizer, we shared an order of the Buffalo wings ($4.95) served in Frank's special sauce. Why doesn't Harry have his own sauce? He should definitely try spicing up Frank's recipe a little.

For dinner, Laura feasted upon a hefty portion of the special chicken bam-bam ($10.95). The thin breast was layered in barbecue sauce, Canadian bacon, and mozzarella and cheddar cheese. The special was rather yuppie but superb nonetheless and included Harry's standard salad loaded with veggies, and an order of spectacular seasoned wedge fries.

Travis, unfortunately, decided to partake of the beef tenderloin tips ($13.50) which were sauteed in a white wine sauce and served over a bed of pasta. The dish was, in a word, b-l-a-n-d.

For entertainment, the menu includes fifty fascinating trivia questions, including, "What is the capital of New Hampshire?" It was an education.

All and all, Harry's Grille is not a bad place for casual dining although it is probably a bit over-priced.

One of Harry's more reasonable sandwiches might be just the ticket after a long day at the 137th annual Bloomsburg Fair which will open September 21 and run through the 28th. The top notch entertainment of Willie Nelson, Charlie Daniels, or John Denver may provide the perfect opportunity to defect from the bubble for a day and spend an hour or two drinking and dining at Harry's Grille.

The Collegiate Perspective (and other fairy tales)

Peter Lalos

The most striking phenomenon in the college experience has to be that period in which, as freshmen, students discern between what family, friends, and the media tell them university life is supposed to be like, and what it truly turns out to be. Needless to say, all of us have had our fair shares of dispelled illusions over the semesters. What a pathetically stilted intro paragraph this is swiftly becoming. At any rate, in an attempt to capture the inconsistencies between the imagined and actual collegiate experience, I've taken the liberty (daredevil that I am) of presenting excerpts from "A Calendar of Adjustment Issues for Entering College Students" given to me by the University before my first semester of higher education.

Is the following self-help handout, which was adapted from a 1988 brochure from Western New England College, a fair assessment of what we're all undergoing here? Oh, of course not! I mean, that's as plain as the mole on the side of my face, right under my left ear, about an inch down... all the same, just read the rest of the column, because I'm about to go off on a massive tangent anyway. [Direct quotations are italicized.]

First semester highlights:

August: anxiety increases about college

"Anxiety" and "college"? Where the heck do they get off drawing such an inane connection between these two concepts?

September: values testing: students are confronted with questions of conscience, values differences

...drinking limits, methods of birth control, etc. By the way, what's with this "conscience" poo-poo?

roommate negotiations— working out agreements on—

Stop right there. Homey, don't play that. Either roomies get along or they don't; the United Nations this ain't.

dealing with independence

How about "reveling in it"? "Dealing" makes it sound so painful.

October: freshmen may begin to realize a need to set some priorities—you can't do it all!

Well, no duh. That ranks right up there on the obvious-o-meter with the note on the Colgate toothpaste tube reading, "For best results, squeeze tube from the bottom and flatten it as you go up."

the residential honeymoon is over—issues of respecting others' rights and priorities

No, but we do have some lovely parting prizes for you. I think that I must have missed this period of bliss over my first month, probably because there were two brawls, one kicked-in door and a near homicide on my freshman hall during the first weekend alone. Not that it scarred me for life or anything.

November: holiday break may bring out some family issues (hours, values, that new hairdo?)

Yeah... I mean, who knew that fade cut that I got would eventually lead to my parents getting divorced?

December: anxiety, fear, and guilt increase as final exams approach and papers are due

Gracias for the emotional direction, but I believe that we all already know how to feel before such a juncture in the year.

pre-holiday depression, anxiety about returning to 'the nest'

Depressed? About going home for Christmas? You must be on drugs.

Second semester highlights:

January: cabin fever—fewer outdoor athletic activities, sports, more time indoors

And yet, our hardy species somehow survives.

New Year's Resolutions—to do better this term?

To do better at what? That's so vague.... Darn it, I can't do it all!!!

February: winter road conditions make travel more difficult

...Sure. Probably could rank that academically-pressing issue right between G.P.A. and resume-building in a college student's mind at the beginning of the semester.

drug and alcohol abuse increases

You know, because of the road conditions.

March: Spring Break: travel? work?

The Price is Right? Blockbuster Video? I guess I just don't know which one matches up better with my major.

April: spring fever hits

Not, mainly because it's still 29 degrees and snowing in Lewisburg at this point in the year.

roommate selection for next year; may have impact on friendships

Oh, come now. How much can saying, "Frank, I just don't want to see your face when I come home from a long day of classes anymore" do to a relationship? They liken room picks to what happened at My-Lai for a reason, you know.

May: depression possible over leaving campus friends, re-establishing family patterns

Does anybody else get the impression that whoever wrote this calendar had a tragically poor relationship with his or her family, or is it just me?

Now that I've done it death for now, I'll leave you with one parting thought: Toffee tires.

Think about it — you'll be annoyed that you did.

Center Gallery to open new exhibit

BY NICOLE COBBAN

On Saturday, September 14, the Center Gallery will open its latest exhibit titled, "St. Petersburg Realism: The Unbroken Russian Tradition." Featured will be 20 contemporary St. Petersburg artists, all graduates of the Soviet Academy of Fine Arts and trained in the school of realism. The exhibit will have particular relevance considering the recent events that have taken place in the Soviet Union.

Robert Metzger, director of the Center Gallery, began organizing the event several years ago and is amazed at the coincidence that places the opening of the exhibit at the height of the Soviet perestroika. The logo, which features the words 'St. Petersburg' superimposed against a fading 'Leningrad', was designed to represent the changing atmosphere of the Soviet Union since Gorbachev's reforms. However Metzger feels that with the official vote to rename Leningrad as St. Petersburg, the Center Gallery exhibit will be the first to bear the city's new name and he "anticipates national media attention" as a result.

The collection, which contains about 60 pieces, was anonymously donated by a Bucknell alumnus and is unique in that all the artists included are official artists of the Soviet Union, that is, they have been accepted to officialdom by the Soviet Union. The differences between being an official or unofficial artist are few and one of the main goals of the exhibition is, as Metzger puts it, "to dispel some preconceptions about official art."

Christam Night, by Pyotr Ivanovich Merkulov is one of the many paintings to be included in the Center Gallery exhibit.

The pieces submitted to the exhibition are diverse both in subject matter and style. The term "realism" can be misleading since the paintings run the gamut of imagination, stretching from austere, almost photographic paintings of Russian architecture to the fantastical landscapes of the artists' creation. Each painter is unique for his or her individual tastes. Birulya, one of the featured artists, utilizes the Seurat invented technique of pointalism while others lean towards Van Gogh inspired brushwork.

Still some artists revert back to the artistical heritage taught at the Academy. Pyotr Merkulov, whose work Evangelic Subject provides the backdrop for the exhibit's logo, works in very much the style of old Russian masters. His paintings have the sort of quality reminiscent of the Russian icons from centuries ago. Despite the fact that each artist maintains his or her own identity in painting, Metzger adds that, "they (also) have maintained a cultural link with the narrative pictorial language which is deeply rooted in their national history."

It is hoped that Sergei Blumin, the only artist who resides in the United States, will be on hand for the opening of the exhibition. Blumin first began painting with ketchup, toothpaste, and shoe polish. Since then, his paintings have developed into colorful, exciting scenes which owe much to the techniques of the impressionists. Drawing on his real life experiences as a musician, two of his seven paintings revolve around the realm of music while the rest range in themes from literature to architecture.

The exhibit will remain on display beginning September 14 in the Center Gallery, located on the third floor of the Langone Center.

Drugstore Cowboy a good choice at the video store

-MOVIE REVIEW-

Drugstore Cowboy. Matt Dillon plays Bob Hughes, the leader of a junkie gang that robs drugstores to get their drugs, in this overlooked 1989 movie now available in video stores.

BY GREG WEYANT

Bucknellian Film Columnist

Probably one of the least noticed films of 1989 was also one of the best. Drugstore Cowboy, starring Matt Dillon, was highly praised by critics but never enjoyed great success at the box office because of its limited release.

The story, set in the Pacific Northwest in the early seventies, centers around Bob Hughes (Dillon) and a group of young junkies that support their drug habits by robbing pharmacies, not for money but for the drugs. Bob, the leader of the pack, successfully pulls off some nice jobs in the Portland area before the group hits a dry spell which Bob, being extremely superstitious, is convinced was caused when another member of the group mentions dogs (a taboo). The grand hex of all hexes, putting a hat on a bed, is the turning point of the movie. The catastrophe caused by the hat (which I don't want to give away) causes the break-up of the group and sets Bob on the road to recovery. After trying the sober life, Bob finds that it's much more difficult to deal with than his previous life of robbing and dope-shooting. One of Bob's last lines in the picture summed up his feelings about his life. "Most people don't know how they're going to feel. A junkie knows by reading the labels on the bottles."

Dillon has a great cast backing him . Kelly Lynch gives a strong performance as his wife, Diane. Likewise, the supporting cast of James LeGross and Heather Grahm as the other couple in the gang was also strong. Keep an eye out for author William S. Burroughs as a junkie priest. This cast, along with first time director Gus Van Zant's stunning directing makes Drugstore Cowboy a first rate film.

Album Review

Lenny Kravitz laments through his follow-up

BY MATTHEW WOOD

Bucknellian Staff Writer

Lenny Kravitz Mama Said

Not only is Lenny Kravitz a voice from the past, but as you can plainly see from his album jacket, he is truly a vision from the past. Despite the fact that he has arrived more than two decades after the explosive time he personifies, Kravitz proved with his 1989 debut, Let Love Rule, that there is still room today for the sounds that helped shape a dynamic era. His ambient recordings not only captured the musical style of the late '60's and the early '70's, but the issues as well. Dramatic songs about racism, poverty, love, and drugs were the foundation of an album that was sorely overlooked.

© 1991 Virgin Records America, Inc.

It is now two years later and it seems that Kravitz is finally getting some of the attention he should have gotten. Unfortunately, it is for a sugar-coated song, "It Ain't Over 'Till It's Over," that is not at all indicative of his once provocative style. In his new album, Mama Said, Kravitz has abandoned his foreboding social reproach for personal reflection: it is generally uninspiring.

In all fairness to Kravitz, he has been through some difficult times of late. He and his estranged wife, Lisa Bonet (The Cosby Show, A Different World) were recently divorced. The lyrics of Mama Said reveal Kravitz's obsession with this relationship. However, the number of despondent love songs on this album is simply too great. While a few of them are moving, specifically "Stand By My Woman," "More Than Anything In This World," and "The Difference Is Why," these tracks, and a number of others that are not so hot, are lined up in a succession that becomes increasingly monotonous with each lovesick rhyme.

Despite loosing the insight that made Let Love Rule so special, there are still a few gems tucked away in Mama Said that are well worth a listen. "Fields of Joy" is the most carefully crafted track, featuring guitar work by Guns 'N Roses' Slash. The title track "Always On the Run" brings back memories of the Three Dog Night classic "Mama Told Me Me Not To Come." The only song that brings to light social adversity with the emotion of his previous efforts is "What The...Are We Saying." Finally, the sweetest and last melody on the album, "Butterfly," beautifully depicts the image of the forgotten flower child.

These tracks aside, Kravitz's 14 song marathon falls short of its predecessor. One track about poverty, "What Goes Around Comes Around," actually comes out sounding like something you might expect to hear in a 1970's cocktail lounge. It is also a shame that the one song co-written and co-performed by Sean Lennon, the son of John and Yoko, appears as the last of the worn-out love themes.

About the only feature of Mama Said consistent with Let Love Rule is the excellent recording quality. Kravitz's melodies are otherwise about as sparkling as his lost marriage. The only thing that can resurrect his sound is a return to the anger that flowed through his early work. His energy is squandered on heartsick ballads; it should be refocused where his true insight lies, on the travesties of social reality. Lenny, do us a favor, leave the trite love songs for the pop artists of the1990's.

Critical Condition

Sex and Loathing

BY MARC HAIMES

Bucknellian Staff Writer

The bonding vibes were rhythmic and intense and they pushed warmly into all of our deepest hearts uncontaminated by obscenely single-sexed songs of how men are jerks or women are bitches...

But we are moving too quickly. Let us rewind.

It was an August evening all-counselor camp fire. No campers allowed. And we all sat in a hazy circle around the flickering flames thoughtfully fingering the dampness on the necks of our Rolling Rocks. I checked my watch nervously and contemplated the new Wall Street Journal article about the male sexual prime.

Anne mentioned that the centerfold, which she had confiscated from some gawky, pimply-flushed boys in Unit G, was younger than she was. She had never thought of herself as being older than a centerfold.

And when someone mentioned their taste in music, the dialogue began...

"God, it's like nobody even sings anymore!"

"It's because those women flaunt their incredible...."

"All top 40 just like sounds the same."

"...I mean Madonna shows everything. And Janet...."

"I am so sick of rap!"

"...Jackson and Paula Abdul. Oh man, in that "Cold-Hearted Snake" dance...."

"It's all just totally sex anyway!"

"....and that video in the elevator with the camera and the egg noodles and that blond...."

It was wonderful. Our unabashed scorn for the feeble and immature campers had helped us to bond comfortably, completely. It was like that commercial where all those cool partiers in sunglasses and bikinis work together using submarines and helicopters to pry open that gigantic bottle of Beer which towers and glistens in the sun like a sudsy deity.

The older head counselors, who had been at the bench playing Baby Boom Trivial Pursuit, seemed to sense our renewed purpose as we broke into a spontaneous and nostalgic chorus, paying homage to the elegant and sincere melodies of the Reagan era....

"Call Me... For My Love... yeah, yeah... call me, call me... anytime... Call me... JUMP... go ahead and JUMP... might as well... JUMP... yeah,yeah... My angel is the Centerfold... and my blood runs cold... because she's a Centerfold... Naaa, Naaaa, Na Na Na Naaaah, Nu Na Na Naaaah, Nu Na Na Na Naaaaaah.

Note to older people: That final song in our medley should not be confused with the sophomoric and antiquated "Land of 1000 Dances" which goes, "Naaaa, Na Na Na Naaah. Na Na Na Naaaah, Na Na Naaaah, Na Na Naaaah."

Yes, our harmonies barely contained the vitriole and scorn we felt. We were a misunderstood generation slam-danced into the middle... We listen as the ancient and faint whispers of "free" love swim past our brains along with the latest medical reports. And we watch as our younger siblings devour the day-glow sexual McNuggets on MTV while gripping and manipulating their Nintendo controls and giggling like Pee-Wee Herman. "Caught between a rock and a hard place," the old expression goes.

But, as we finished our song and lay languidly around the lingering, ghostly flames, gloomily contemplating the fate of a younger, inferior generation, I finally understood. We had actually reached a new level of maturity. This simple discussion was our cue to shake away those archaic imprintings of youth: A leotard-clad Princess Lea, chained and reclining beneath a fat drooling sloth. A slim-fast Oprah boasting of "Men Who Pour Chevron Motor Oil On Their Mates... And The Women That Love Them."

It was time for us to work together to achieve a contented identity that transcended petty icons of sexuality. We would climb the corporate ladder and make the world a better place! Good pay, good friends, and lots of time to party on the weekends. Saab's for everyone! We had a generational prescription for happiness. No recession was going to stand in our way! It was time for us, like Hamlet, to find ourselves.

It grew late and we got ready to leave. A few of the guys glanced at their own watches. Perhaps they had also seen that issue of The Wall Street Journal. Some of the gang decided to get a few six-packs and rent a movie. Dave mentioned that he had developed a strange craving for egg noodles.

I entered my red Honda Civic and decided not to turn on the radio. I pulled out of the parking lot quickly, enjoying the slight high-pitched squeal of the tires and humming jubilantly to myself, "Naaaa, Naaaaaa Na Na Na Naaaaaah, Na Na Na Naaah, Nu Na Na Na Naaaaaaah..." And I sincerely meant it.

'Some Assembly Required' to play

BY PAT MCCORMICK

Taking the stage at the Bison this Friday at 9:00 p.m. is the improvisational group "Some Assembly Required" who will present "Murder at The Bison." The group, careful to distinguish themselves from the 'traditional' theater ensemble, premiered in the Bison after assembling last year. "We are not actors," says Marc Haimes '93. "Most of us aren't even theater majors."

"Some Assembly Required" is markedly different from other theatrical performance groups in that it extends the stage into the audience, asking them to play a part in the production. The audience becomes involved in games where the performers' behaviors depend on suggestions offered by the audience. "We take their advice and turn it into our own logic. The more challenging the suggestion, the more fun it is for us. Our success rests on an active audience," explains Haimes.

The bond established within the group enables members to encourage one another to take risks in rehearsals. Rather than developing individual performances, working together as a group allows the players to feel uninhibited. "When we get the positive dynamics working, that's when it's really funny," adds Haimes.

Other members of the group include: Hallie Cohon '93, Lee Guzosski '94, Vanessa Jones '95, Alexander Lyras '92, J. Moriarty '94 and production manager Sharon Hong '94. "The real reason 'Some Assembly Required' originated was because there was no improv group at Bucknell," says Haimes, who makes note of the success of improvisational companies on other campuses similar to Bucknell.

The main event of the evening asks the audience to become involved in a murder mystery in which audience input leads to solving the crime. If you attended the production last year, you will not see a repeat performance. The group changes the show from one performance to the next. After all, "Some Assembly Required:" means just that. Only with the audience's help can the chemistry of this unique group emerge. Let's see what we can get them to do.

Bison look for first win vs. 'Nova tomorrow

Bucknell hopes to regroup in home opener after 43-7 defeat to Hofstra; Wildcats on tap at 1 p.m.

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

To most Bucknell students, this Saturday will resemble the Saturdays of past Septembers. After a noon wakeup, Bucknellians will partake of the day's first meal and migrate to Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium to watch the 1991 version of Bucknell's football team.

Again what they see will resemble what they have seen in past years, the grass will still be green, and the bushes at the South end of the stadium will say Bucknell (or something reasonably close to that).

The similarities to the past will continue as the stadium's public address announcer will have his plea to have the students sit in the bleachers at either end of the stadium fall on deaf ears and Bucknell's team will emerge from the locker room in blue jerseys with white pants.

The teams will take the field for the opening kickoff just as in previous years and the P.A. announcer will utter the now-famous phrase "Lester Erb and Dan Scocca deep to receive for the Bison."

But wait, Erb '91 and Scocca '91 will not be there. The kickoff return tandem of Matt Walsh '93 and Kevin McElvene '93 will be as foreign to the majority of Bucknell students as sophomore rush, but the game against the Villanova Wildcats will go on.

The new kickoff duo will be just one of many differences between this years team and the 7-4 squad from last year. In addition to the loss of Erb and Scocca, the Bison also lost record-setting quarterback Todd Hatajik '91, the entire offensive line, and defense captain Mike Augsberger '91.

Despite the losses of these and other key players from last year's squad, the Bison will still be able to fid eleven players on both sides of the field. They will do so against a Villanova team that is ranked in the top ten in division I-AA. It will be a stern test for a young squad.

Bucknell will enter the game with an 0-1 record after a 43-7 loss last Friday at Hofstra. Despite the lopsided score, the Bison looked good in the early part of the first quarter.

Cornerback George Rocchino '92, who would break his leg later in the half intercepted a pass deep in Bucknell's territory after Hofstra had moved the ball effectively. The Bison proceeded to drive the ball down to the Hofstra two yard line.

The drive was kept alive by a number of good scrambles by quarterback Jeff Kelly '92, an 18-yard screen pass to Matt Walsh '93 and a 22-yard run by fullback Jeff Wall '93. Unfortunately, the entire game would turn on the next two plays.

On first and goal from the two, a bad exchange between Kelly and and tailback Brian Henesey '92 resulted in a fumble which Hofstra recovered in its end zone for a touchback.

On the next play from scrimmage, Hofstra's running back Mark Cox broke one tackle in the backfield and went eighty yards for a touchdown.

The Bison never recovered from the fourteen-point swing as Hofstra continued to pressure the inexperienced secondary with a no huddle, run-and-shoot offense. One botched punt and four Hofstra touchdowns later, the Bison limped into the locker room down 34-0.

Bucknell, however, managed to regroup at half-time and put together a solid second-half effort that saw the defense limit Hofstra's quick-strike attack to just nine more points while the offense scored a touchdown of their own.

Bucknell's first score of the season came on a 27-yard pass from Kelly to Dave "Whitey" Berardinelli '93 who made a terrific leaping catch and managed to break the plane of the endzone for the touchdown. The Hofstra players and staff were upset with the call, as they thought that the Bison receiver did not retain possession of the ball as he crossed the goal. Berardinelli had an excellent game, catching six passes for 78 yards and the one TD.

The Bison also received a strong effort from Henesey who rushed 19 times for 98 yards and became only the third back in Bucknell's history to rush for over 2,000 career yards. Henesey needs only 561 yards to overtake Brad Meyers as Bucknell's all time leading rusher.

Quarterback Kelly also performed well completing 17 of 34 passes for 165 yards and one touchdown. He was able to scramble well, showing no adverse affects from the off-season surgery to repair damaged knee ligaments.

Defensively, Bucknell buckled down in the second half behind strong performances from seniors John Spatafore at linebacker and Bob Marshall in the secondary.

The Bison will need a strong 60 minutes from the entire squad to compete with a Villanova team that crushed the University of Maine last weekend by a final score of 48–7.

Fortunantely, the Wildcats will not employ a no-huddle, run-and-shoot offense, but they will feature Tom Colombo, a short quarterback with a big arm, who Bucknell coach Lou Maranzana compares with former Heisman winner Doug Flutie.

Colombo will likely finish his career with one fewer Heisman trophies than Flutie, but he will test Bucknell's defense this weekend.

The Wildcats were also led by the rushing of senior running back Pat Kennedy who gained 113 yards on 16 carries and scored a pair of touchdowns.

Along with the two offensive stars, Villanova will return seven other offensive starters as well as seven on the defense.

Although Bucknell leads the overall series 11—8—2, the teams have only met once since 1945. That game was played in 1988, with Villanova spoiling the Bison's home opener,30—17.

Despite the many changes in personnel from last years squad and this year's rash of early season injuries, the Bison still have quality players and should be competitive in the Patriot League. Bucknell students will have to deal with many changes this year, so handling the new look of Bucknell's football team should not overwhelm Bucknellians.

Lady Bison seek first–ever Patriot League victory at Lehigh tomorrow

BY SCOTT BROWN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's soccer team will be in search of their first win of the season tomorrow as they face Lehigh in their first Patriot League match-up of the season.

The women hope to gain some momentum as they are coming off a pair of losses to open up their year. Tri-captain Shannon Smith '92 agrees that the Bison have some kinks to work out. "We have had a slow start but things are starting to come together."

Last Wednesday the Bison played their first road game as they traveled to the University of Maryland at Baltimore County.

UMBC struck first to take the early lead. But, the Lady Bison battled back to tie the game at one apiece as Lisa Gibbons '95 headed in a Jessica Wrigh '95 pass just 12 minutes into the contest.

The score remained locked at one each going into the second half before UMBC opened up a two-goal lead, 3-1.

Bucknell would answer back as Amy Kanarr '95 took a Kristin Lay '95 pass and connected from about 18-yards out to pull the Bison within one, with 14 minutes remaining.

All of the offense in this contest was provided by freshmen. In fact, there are ten newcomers to the squad. But their effort was not enough as UMBC pulled away to a 4-2 win.

The previous Saturday, the Bison opened its second varsity season against Temple, who was entering their inaugural season at the varsity level. The Lady Owls struck first and looked like they would take a 1-0 lead into the half until Gibbons was pulled down in the penalty box with just over a minute left in the half. But Denise Zitter came up with a big save after all to give Temple the 1-0 advantage going into the break.

Temple continued to control the contest and would tally two more goals before winning the game, 3-0. Temple controlled the contest outshooting the Bison, 43-25.

The Bison goalkeeper Bridget Collins '94 was forced to make 25 saves while the Bison could only put seven shots on net. Her effort ranks Collins as the number two goaltender in the Patriot League's young season.

Smith explained that the onslaught was due to some confusion in the backfield. "We had some trouble marking up because Temple played a different offense than we're used to. Our defense was better in our last game We have been working on that in practice and hopefully it will carry over into Saturday's game."

The Bison take the road again to battle Lehigh tomorrow in the school's home opener. The Engineers are also entering their first season on the varsity level so Bucknell figures that to be a fairly even match-up. The Bison return home next Tuesday to battle under the lights against the University of Delaware. Smith expects it to be a good game.

"We don't know a lot about them. We had a really good game against them last year. We'll be at home and under the lights so we should be pretty pumped," commented the tri-captain.

Water Polo notches initial victory, sinks Harrisburg

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's water polo team began its season by hosting the Slippery Rock University varsity team and two club teams for a tournament last weekend. The tournament provided Bucknell's younger players with some experience that they will build upon for future competition.

The Bucknell men played their first game of the weekend against rival Slippery Rock, against whom they recorded a 12–6 loss. "They played a strong first three quarters," according to Head Coach Jim Harvey, who is beginning his first year in the position. The team kept within three goals throughout those three quarters, at the end of which the score was 8–5.

Co-captain Walter Kelly '92 recorded two goals during those periods, while Dan Brown '92, Chris Retzler '93, and fellow co-captain Kevin Schroth '92 added one apiece.

The Slippery Rock team then overpowered the tired Bison in the fourth quarter and went on to score four more goals, while Bucknell added only one with Kelly's third successful attempt at the 3:33 mark. Veteran goalie John Bradbury '92, who is going into his third year starting for the Bison, recorded 15 saves in the game.

Bucknell's second game, against the Harrisburg Water Polo Club, ended in a 15–8 victory for the home team. The Bison took a 1–0 lead at 5:42 in the first quarter and never looked back. Strong play allowed the team to enjoy a nine-point, 15–6 lead at one point in the fourth quarter.

Bucknell welcomed excellent performances by many members of the team, including Schroth, who netted six goals, and A. J. Zottola '92, who added four. Other scorers were Kelly and Dan Killinger '92 with two each, and Sean Tierney '95, who added one.

Bucknell's fine play during the Harrisburg game carried over to their final match-up against the powerful New York Athletic Club, a team which is nationally recognized as one of the strongest in the East. NYAC boasts numerous Bucknell graduates, and is comprised of members who have been playing together for many years. The Bison once again looked to Schroth for scoring, as he netted five of Bucknell's ten goals during the game. Following a bleak 1-6 deficit halfway through the second quarter, the Bucknell men fought their way to a 10-9 lead in the fourth, with two additional goals by Kelly and one each by Killinger, Tierney, and Steve Benson '92. Bradbury was credited with nine saves for the Bison in their third game, but Bucknell eventually succumbed to a 10-13 loss to NYAC, in what was one of the best contests between the two teams. "The NYAC game was a good way to end the weekend. They finally put everything together that we'd been working on for the past two weeks and played a great game," commented Harvey.

The polo team will travel to Slippery Rock this weekend, where they are scheduled to play the University of Michigan, Slippery Rock, and the University of Maryland. They enter the tournament with a 0-1 record versus varsity teams.

Ursinus is a team of the Hofstra variety, and should prove to be another difficult hurdle for the team to overcome. It should be noted that the coach for Ursinus was formerly the coach for the United States Olympic team. Similar to a state school in many respects, according Averill, they will prove to be a well-balanced team that could pose some problems for the Bucknell.

Having finally won their first game, the Lady Bison are now a different team than they were a week ago. They will look to capitalize on the excellent play of their sophomores, Tricia Way and Baldwin, as well the consistent play of Ward, Amber Baxter '92, and Sue Wells '93. With three tough battles looming around the corner, the team would like to finish next week with a winning record.

12 reasons why you'll love Macintosh

1. It's easy to use.
Bring home an Apple® Macintosh® computer today, and use it to complete assignments by tonight—even if you've never used a computer before.

2. You don't have to speak computerese.
Instead of cryptic MS-DOS commands such as COPY C:\WORDPROC\DRAFT.DOC A:\WORK, Macintosh uses familiar words, such as Copy and Print, and pictures, such as file folders for storing your documents and a trash can for files you want to throw away.

3. You don't have to be a computer science major to set one up.
Just plug everything together, flip the "on" switch, and you're ready to roll.

4. It's a breeze to copy information and paste it into another document.
To copy this chart, simply use the mouse to choose the Copy command.
To place the chart in another document, just choose the Paste command.

5. All Macintosh programs work in the same way.
Learn to use one Macintosh program, and you've learned the basics of using them all. For example, the commands you use, such as Open, Close, Copy, Paste, Save, Cut, Print, and Undo, are found in the same place—every time.

6. It can grow with you.
This week you're majoring in philosophy, next week it's nuclear physics. After all, no one knows exactly what the future will bring. That's why millions of students have found that investing in a Macintosh is a smart move. Because Macintosh can immediately help you do whatever you do—better. And if, come tomorrow, you find that you want to do something different, no problem. It's easy to upgrade your Macintosh to help you rise to the challenge.

7. It's great for college and beyond.
Doing your work faster, better, and more creatively is also a plus in the working world—and that's precisely why Macintosh computers are used in 74 percent of Fortune 1000 companies.* 74%

8. It's got connections.
To connect a printer, a modem, an external hard disk, or just about any other peripheral to a Macintosh, simply plug it in. That's all there is to it.

9. It lets you work with others.
Every Macintosh is equipped with an Apple SuperDrive,™ a unique floppy disk drive that can use not only Macintosh disks, but also MS-DOS and OS/2 disks created on IBM and IBM-compatible computers. With SoftPC from Insignia Solutions, you can even run MS-DOS applications on your Macintosh.

10. It's so easy to network.
Just connect the LocalTalk® cable from one Macintosh to another Macintosh. It takes just a few minutes, and you don't have to buy any additional hardware or software.

11. You can connect to your school's mainframe or minicomputer.
With Macintosh, you can send in assignments, gain access to software you need for a class, and receive lecture notes, class schedules, and other information—right from your own room.

12. It's more affordable than ever.
Macintosh prices have never been lower—especially with the student pricing available from your authorized Apple campus reseller. You may even qualify for financing, which makes Macintosh even more affordable.

These reasons all add up to the power of Macintosh. The power to be your best.®

Athlete of the Week

Brian Henesey '92

Football player Brian Henesey '92 has been selected Athlete of the Week for his performance in last week's 43-7 loss to Hofstra.

Henesey rushed 19 times for 98 yards on Friday. The effort pushed his career total to 2061 yards. Bucknell's leading rusher over the past three years joined Brad Myers '53 and Ken Jenkins '82 as the only performers in school history to rush for over 2000 yards in a career.

The Bison co-captain needs 275 more yards to catch Jenkins for second place and 562 more to reach Myers and take the top spot on Bucknell's all-time rushing list.

The pre-season All-Patriot League selection will lead the squad into its first home game, tomorrow against Villanova.

Women's volleyball rebounds, defeats St. Francis, Robert Morris

By Don Reinhart

Last Friday the women's volleyball team opened their 1991 season in Annapolis, MD against an array of formidable opponents. The Bison fell in five straight matches to top Division I teams such as the University of Delaware, Northeastern, and tournament host Navy. Only three days later, the team showed vast improvement by destroying St. Francis and Robert Morris at Robert Morris.

Although the team dropped five contests at the Naval Academy, they played solid volleyball. Bucknell exploded in their opening game against Navy, winning 15-12 but lost three consecutive games 15-9, 15-10, 15-2. Northeastern dominated the second match, only allowing the Bison 14 points in three games, and later walked away with the tournament championship. In their match against the University of Delaware, Bucknell again showed intensity in the first game by winning 15-11. They lost their spark in the last three games, losing 15-5, 15-1, 15-6. The team dropped the remaining two matches in straight games to Virginia Commonwealth University and the University of Maryland, Baltimore County 15-11, 15-2, 15-10 and 15-2, 15-10, 18-16 respectively.

Head Coach Cynthia Opalski was not disappointed with the team's showing. Bucknell played well considering the competition. They have improved since last year's performance against the same teams. Opalski commented, "the tournament was undoubtedly the toughest competition of the year, but we were playing at the same level as [the other teams]."

Mike Klemen—The Bucknellian

Bucknell's women's volleyball squad regrouped after dropping their first five matches and defeated both St. Francis and Robert Morris in consecutive games.

On a road trip to Pittsburgh the next week, the Bison displayed composure and mental endurance as they defeated Robert Morris and St. Francis in consecutive games. Co-captains Kara Forosisky '92 and Kathleen Sullivan '92 led the offensive attack against St. Francis. Sullivan drove home eight kills in 16 attempts while Forosisky killed six in 14.

Additionally, Sullivan had four blocks, and Forosisky, Meghan Kinney '94 and Joanne Lewis '95 each had four digs. Allowing only six points in each of the three games, Bucknell kept their own tempo while St. Francis played a scrappy game.

The match against Robert Morris was no different. Defeating the host team 15-5, 15-6, and 15-5, the combination of Forosisky and Sullivan dominated the net with five kills each. Sarah Mesaros '93 also had five kills.

Assistant Coach Ann Marie Larese was pleased with the team's performance. She was especially proud of Laura Spinney '95, Joanne Lewis '95 and Amy Wiens '95 who contributed to the victories. The team's all-around performance improved from the last matches, particularly the defense. Larese said, "Blocking was excellent and we were patient."

The Bison Women's Volleyball team looks to improve upon its record as it hosts an Invitational Tournament September 14 and then travel sto St. Francis on September 20.

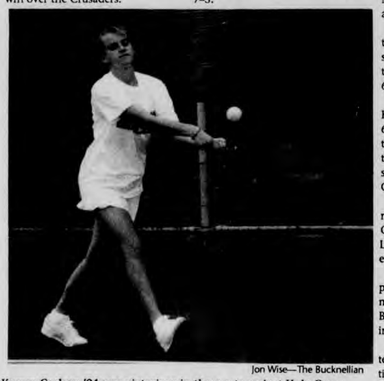
Women's tennis sweeps Holy Cross

Freshman Julia Diaz leads the Bison to a 9–0 win over Crusaders in conference opener

BY BRYAN DEWSBURY

The Bucknell women's tennis team swept Holy Cross last Sunday to win its first match of the year.

Of the six singles and three doubles matches played, the Bison lost only two of 20 sets for an easy 9–0 win over the Crusaders.



Jon Wise—The Bucknellian

Kymm Carlson '94 was victorious in three sets against Holy Cross. Carlson finished last season with an outstanding 11–2 singles mark.

In singles play, Julia Diaz '95 and Mary Ann Benack '92—Bucknell's number one and two seeds respectively—lost only three games each to post straight-set victories over their opponents. Diaz defeated her opponent 6–2, 6–1, while Benack was also victorious, 6–0 and 7–5.

Karen Stagliano '92 struggled early as she lost the first set, but she rallied in the final two sets to win 2–6, 6–4, 6–3.

The victory boosted Stagliano's career record in singles play to 33–6. She is just three victories short of Bucknell's all-time mark set by Michelle Miller '85 between 1981 and 1985.

Kymm Carlson '94 also dropped the first set of her match, but she stormed back by winning the last twelve games to earn a 4–6, 6–0, 6–0 victory.

Rounding out singles action, Kristina Lutter '95 won easily 6–0, 6–1 and Stacy Duffy '95 was also victorious (7–5, 6–4). Bucknell won all three doubles matches in straight sets to complete the sweep of the Crusaders.

With the victory, the Bison are now 1–0 in the Patriot League. Holy Cross drops to 0–2 in the Patriot League after losing 9–0 to Colgate earlier in the week.

Coach Rose Ewan seemed pleased with the results of the first match, but she also stressed that the Bison will face tougher competition in the Patriot League.

"We played nice, concentrated tennis; and you have to be optimistic," she said. "But right now Holy Cross is one of the weakest teams in the Patriot League."

One of Ewan's major concerns about this year's team is the lack of experience that some of her players have. Currently three of the six starters are freshmen.

"You don't know how [the freshmen] will adjust. College tennis is much more intense than high school tennis," she said.

The most positive aspect of this year's team appears to be the dedication and determination that all of the players share.

"This is a super group. They all have a great work ethic and they are very coachable," said Ewan.

The competition in the Patriot League will be stiff this year. Fordham, the defending champions, have most of last year's team back and have added some talented freshmen. Lehigh, Lafayette, and Army have already played close matches against each other and should be strong contenders. Colgate has the defending Patriot League singles champion along with some talented freshmen.

"I would be satisfied to finish where we did last year, but I think we can do better," said a confident Ewan.

This week's schedule will provide a tough test for the Bison. Starting tomorrow, they will play three matches in the next four days, all of which are away. They will play at Army on Saturday and at Fordham on Sunday, before traveling to Lock Haven on Tuesday.

Field Hockey defeats American in overtime

BY JAMIE DIAFERIA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Lady Bison field hockey team opened the season on the road against three perennially tough teams and emerged with a 1–2 record. The team began with a game against Villanova last Saturday in which they were narrowly defeated 3–2. They proceeded to lose a frustrating match against Rhode Island, 2–1, in overtime. It was not until Wednesday that the team was able to rebound with a stunning 2–1 overtime victory over American University.

Villanova came out strong in the first half of the opening game, but, according to Head Coach Jen Averill, the Lady Bison quickly adjusted and were able to keep up with the Pennsylvania powerhouse.

"We played up to their power," Averill noted. "We drew the offensive corners and even outshot them." Unfortunately, their effort was not enough as Villanova was simply too strong a team defensively, and consequently were able to hold on for the victory.

Jim Springer

Patricia Way '94 leads a Lady Bison attack that recorded 28 shots on goal against foe Rhode Islands eight. Way and classmate Almira Baldwin provide a strong foundation for the future of Bucknell field hockey. The squad will play Hofstra tomorrow.

Averill was impressed despite the loss. "It was nice to know we could play at Villanova's level," she remarked. "Our offense really clicked for us, and we got some key performances from Almira Baldwin '94, Jeanne Aurand '92, and Katrina Mueller '93."

Goalkeeper Danielle Ward '93 was equally impressed with the Lady Bison effort. "I think we earned a lot of respect against Villanova," she said. "We surprised everyone in the crowd."

On Sunday the team paired off against Rhode Island in what would become another heartbreaking one-goal loss. In a game that saw the Lady Bison outshoot their opponents 28–8, the team could only look back at the 2–1 loss with a strong sense of frustration.

As Averill remarked, "The team really looked to play in the championship. We came into the game physically fit, but we were completely flat emotionally."

The game appeared to be strongly in Bucknell's favor, with the team drawing 18 offensive corners. However, they were not able to put the ball in the net. This can be blamed, in part, on the new NCAA rule forbidding scrimmages during the pre-season. Without having practiced as much in real game situations, the offense simply has not had the opportunity to hone its skills.

With two losses taking its toll on the team's morale, the Lady Bison looked to break out of their defeated shell and notch their first win. Unfortunately this opportunity presented itself in the form of American University, a team that finished last season with a record of 14-5. To make matters worse, the team had not had a decent practice the day before, and the team's confidence level was running on empty. Averill was deeply concerned about the lack of aggressiveness that was suddenly characterizing her team.

"I knew we had to be the aggressor in the American game. We did just that. In the first half we dominated the game and dictated the pace," she commented. The result was a 1-1 score at the end of regulation play, thus placing the team in the same situation as it was with Rhode Island. Averill took her team aside and, in a thrilling speech designed to generate some life in the team, reminded them of their advantages over their opponent.

After several minutes of overtime play, the team got off the first shot, and eventually drew a corner. Finally, with seven minutes left, they scored, and needed only to hold on to the lead to secure their first victory. As Averill noted, "Those seven minutes took forever." Both Averill and Ward feel that the victory was all-important in relieving the tension that had become all too familiar to the team. "The team feels confident now," remarked Ward. "It is definitely going to spark us."

The Lady Bison will need that "spark" as they will be playing three very difficult games next week against Hofstra, Ursinus, and Holy Cross. The game against Hofstra on Saturday will be a decisive one in that it could set the tone for the next two games. Hofstra is an aggressive team, though the deciding factor will lie in whether or not the Lady Bison will be able to use their own finesse game to their advantage.

"Unsettled" Bison soccer trounced by Temple, 5–0

BY ANDY LABOVITZ
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The defending Patriot League regular season champion soccer team was greeted rudely by a strong Temple squad in the regular season-opener here at Bucknell last Saturday. The Owls, having what Coach Craig Reynolds called "The best Temple team in years," dominated all facets of the game and defeated the kicking Bison 5–0. Temple senior co-captain Itzhak Assor paced the Temple attack with three goals and an assist, while freshman Rick Christie added two assists for the Owls.

Coach Reynolds knew that this would be a tough opener for his inexperienced team which he still describes as "unsettled" in terms of starting positions. One reason for the team's tentative play was a new NCAA rule stating that no team is allowed intersquad scrimmages or games before September 7, the date of the game. Therefore, this was the team's first opportunity to play together in a game situation. The difficulty that this caused was compounded by the relatively large amount of Bucknell players who were getting their first taste of intercollegiate action.

Assor scored the first goal of the game for the Owls at 14:14 of the first half. He tallied again ten minutes later on a nifty volley off of a crossing pass, sending the ball into the lower right corner of the net. Dan D'Angelo '92 declared that "the second goal broke our back." Chris Cotton of Temple rounded out the first half scoring at 31:44. One of Bucknell's best scoring chances was nullified when D'angelo was tripped around the goal box but did not get a penalty kick as the foul was spotted just outside of the goal box line.

Three key second-half injuries hurt a tough but tiring Bucknell squad emotionally, as the Owls rounded out the scoring with two goals, the last coming at 45:09 of the second half. Co-captain Keith Goodling '92 suffered a knee injury midway through the second half and is questionable for this Saturday's game with league rival Lehigh, as is Baird McElvane '95 who is on crutches with a hip pointer. The third injury was suffered by Ryan Bucceri '94, who is expected to be out at least two weeks with an injured knee.

Coach Reynolds feels that this game pointed out a weakness in his team: a lack of speed at the forward positions. The Bison didn't penetrate much, squeezing off only eight shots in the game, compared to Temple's 17. Goalie Mark Wrigley '94 saved ten of those shots. The loss to Temple was Bucknell's only game of the past week, which Coach Reynolds called a "blessing" because it allows recuperation time for the injured players and time for the rest of the team to gel.

Saturday's contest with Lehigh is expected to be a tough, physical battle, as the Engineers beat up Delaware last weekend. Last year, the Bison beat Lehigh at Lehigh 1–0, and this weekend's game will likely be an equally difficult test for the Bucknell squad.

Chemistry building named for Rooke

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Robert L. Rooke Chemistry Building to be dedicated tomorrow will honor a 100-year-old alumnus for more than 60 years of service on the Board of Trustees and for a legacy of donations which have financed the building of the chapel, the swimming pool and the computer center as well as numerous other projects.

The Board of Trustees voted last spring to name the chemistry building after Rooke, an appropriate gesture since the building was financed primarily by the recent $90 million Campaign for Bucknell, to which Rooke was the largest individual contributor.

Describing Rooke as "amazingly sharp and intelligent, with an excellent memory," President Gary A. Sojka credited Rooke as a financier saying that "it is his doing that we have an endowment today." Sojka also commented that "in all honesty, I know of no institution which has ever benefitted more from the care, guidance and generosity of a single person than Bucknell has from Bob Rooke."

Rooke will travel from his home in Westfield, NJ to attend the dedication at 10:30 a.m. in the science center atrium. Following the naming ceremony, a concert will be held in the Charles M. and Olive S. Rooke Chapel, which Rooke donated in 1963 in honor of his parents. The trompette en chamade, a 100th birthday gift from the Rooke grandchildren, will be featured in the presentation.

A native of Winfield, PA, Rooke walked four miles along the railroad tracks to attend classes at Lewisburg High School and later at Bucknell University. During his college years, Rooke joined the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity and majored in electrical engineering, graduating in 1913.

> "In all honesty, I know of no institution which has benefitted more from the care, guidance, and generosity of a single person than Bucknell has from Bob Rooke... It is his doing that we have an endowment today."
> —Gary A. Sojka, President

Rooke spent several years as an engineer with General Electric Corp. and later with Public Service Electric Co. He then entered the world of finance, which he described in an interview for his hometown newspaper last June: "I had just gotten out of the Navy and didn't know anything about finance or stocks, but friends said I might like Wall Street. So I would go to the library at nine and stay there until nine in the night reading books about it."

Hired as a bond salesman for Merrill Lynch in 1919, Rooke was given the company seat on the New York Stock Exchange in 1928. The stock market crash of October 1929 challenged Rooke's financial acumen, but both he and Merrill Lynch emerged successful.

The firm had projected losing $450,000, but Rooke managed to sell off enough shares of the company's losing stocks in the days before the crash to earn Merrill Lynch a profit of $500,000. "From then on," said Rooke, "Charlie [Merrill] thought I was a genius."

Only seven months after the crash, Rooke was elected to the University's Board of Trustees and faced with the task of managing the University's portfolio in an unstable economy. For the next 60 years, Rooke carefully supervised the University endowments: "Board members still solicit Rooke's opinion on financial matters because he has lived through so much history and remembers cycles and events that we can only read about."

In addition to a successful business career, Rooke has maintained his marriage to Alice Withington Rooke, now 101 years old. The couple will celebrate their 70th wedding anniversary this year. They have three children, 13 grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren.

Robert L. Rooke '13, shown here acknowledging applause at a Committee of 1,000 dinner, will be honored tomorrow in a ceremony naming the chemistry building in his honor. At age 100, Rooke remains an energetic member emeritus of the Board of Trustees and gave the largest single donation to the recently-completed Campaign for Bucknell.

Colloquy revives 25 year-old tradition

BY KENT LINDEMAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

"The American Dream: Sweet for Some, Sour for Others," Bucknell's Fall 1991 Colloquy, will be held this coming weekend beginning with a keynote lecture on "The Superyears" by noted author and journalist Richard Reeves, Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Weis Center.

The colloquy is a coordination of programming by numerous campus organizations around a single, general question, "What is the American Dream and whose is it?" Organized by student coordinators Cary Champlin '94 and Phil Elliott '93 along with William Boswell, director of cultural events at the Weis Center, the colloquy will feature several prominent speakers from both academic and professional fields.

Activities scheduled for Friday include a presentation by Charlene Spretnak, author and strong voice in the framing of Green politics, ecofeminist, and women's spirituality movements. She will explore the importance of self-determination for an authentic existence in her talk entitled "Green Politics: The Next Step in the Quest for Democracy." In addition, an afternoon lecture by Dr. Michael Gordon, vice chancellor for academic life at Indiana University, Bloomington, will address the issue of "The Gift of Greekdom."

Slated for the following evening is a program and panel on "Environmental Issues and the American Dream, Locally and Worldwide," with such local and vocal spokespeople as Clyde Peeling and Michael Molesevich, as well as representatives from Greenpeace and USPCI. According to Elliott, who will be moderating this forum, the proposed Union County incinerator will be a focal point of debate. However, he is quick to point out that "we plan to show both sides of the incinerator issue from a scientific and educational standpoint, and not so much a political one."

Jackson Katz, the football player-feminist who has appeared on numerous television and radio programs coast to coast, including "Phil Donahue" will close the colloquy Sunday night by speaking on "Football, Feminism, and Other Contemporary Contradictions." Katz is the founder of Real Men, a political and educational organization of men committed to working against sexism and violence against women. His presentation aims to provide insight into how relations between the sexes have deteriorated to the point where date rape and sexual assault have become major campus problems.

Various intervening activities have been scheduled throughout the weekend. The one-act play "Open Admissions," which deals on a personal level with questions of equal opportunity in education and features student actors Jill Emery '92 and George Hannah '93, will be performed both Friday and Saturday. Other informal discussions and open forums are planned for different venues on campus during the four-day colloquy.

The Bucknell colloquy has become somewhat of a tradition over the past 25 years. It grew out of an idea of Ken Gilbert '66. who sought to invite off-campus visitors to "stir-up things" on campus. That year Gilbert wrote over 200 letters on his manual typewriter to people he had read about in newspapers and magazines, challenging them to offer their point of view in a university setting. As a result, some forty speakers travelled to Bucknell for the first colloquy, entitled "Revolution," which examined a changing American society in the midst of the turbulent 1960's.

Past colloquies have drawn on such themes as crisis, criminal justice, women in society, and "the human potential," seeking to spark controversy and serious thought among its participants. Boswell, who scheduled this year's events, believes that the upcoming American Dream colloquy should be no different in this respect. "Hopefully the topics discussed in the colloquy will challenge the ideas and beliefs that they have previously held," contends Boswell.

Reverend James Hammerlee, University chaplain, has worked closely with the students who have planned colloquies during the past 25 years and believes that they have been a significant part of campus life each year. "The colloquies always deserved attention because it brought together all segments of campus," states Hammerlee. "But more importantly, it told students that it is alright to talk or think about anything and to carry this process beyond the classroom," he commented.

BYOB weekend inspires cautious optimism

BY TIMOTHY AMMAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

This past weekend Bucknell experimented with BYOB parties held under official IFC policies. Lambda Chi Alpha, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Sigma Alpha Mu, and Sigma Chi all had parties conforming to BYOB regulations as well as the regulations of their national fraternities for risk management. Such events will now become the norm on campus as no alcohol will be provided at fraternity events.

BYOB or "bring your own beer" regulations stem from the Fraternity Insurance Purchasing Group's (FIPG) policy. Essentially, this insurance conglomerate, which underwrites 9 of the 12 fraternities at Bucknell, has mandated that fraternity events be held under strict guidelines if houses wish to remain under coverage. These guidelines include provisions forbidding the purchase of kegs as well as alcohol purchases using any house funds. This move was implemented in an attempt to limit the enormous liability which fraternity houses bear during parties by providing alcohol to their guests.

Bucknell's BYOB policy is the product of IFC risk management policies adopted on August 31, 1991. These regulations state that all fraternities must hold BYOB parties and purchase no kegs. Guests may bring up to a six-pack of beer to the door of the house, get a punchcard, leave their beer with a monitor, and drink their own beer in a designated area - one beer at a time.

Overall, the first weekend parties held under this system were quite successful. Ed Dadez, associate dean for residential life, thought that "the weekend went as well as expected for the first time." Although initial signs have been encouraging, Dadez feels that "We need to continue to educate the campus community that fraternities will not be providing alcohol anymore." The ingrained belief that houses would still serve beer was met with clear responses on Friday and Saturday nights when no alcohol was provided.

> "BYOB is the last chance to prove that alcohol belongs on college campuses..."
> —Ed Dadez, Associate Dean for Residential Life

Ryan Hartman, president of Lambda Chi Alpha, stated that "The party went extremely well. Everyone was nervous because it was BYOB, but we had to kick people out at 3 am." Other house presidents echoed this response although attendance was off at some fraternity parties - probably due to apprehension over the new regulations.

Risk management has become the dominant issue for fraternities across the nation in recent years. In fact the number of fraternities has recently been cut in half due to their inability to deal effectively with risk management issues. In regard to this phenomenon, Dadez comments that "BYOB is the last chance to prove that alcohol belongs on college campuses and in fraternities and sororities." He added that in all probability "the pendulum would not swing back" to the policies of the past where loose control reigned.

Congress elects two professors to Board of Academic Review

BY JOHN GODBOUT

The Bucknell Student Government (BSG) held elections for the Board of Review of Academic Responsibility on Sunday, Sept. 15 and appointed two faculty members and four students to hold positions on the Board.

Debra Mathinos of the Education department was elected to a three year term as a regular boardmember. Mathinos has served on the board for the last year and a half filling in an unexpected vacancy. She will also be chairperson of the committee for this year, joining senior boardmember Elaine Williams of the Theatre department.

Richard Waller of the History department was elected to the post of faculty alternate. He asked that the congress consider him only for the alternate position based on his impending sabbatical. Students serving on the board this year are David Fries '93 and Sean McCarthy '94. Richard Gatteau '92 and Timothy Kirk '93 will act as the student alternates. The students will serve single year terms on the Board.

The BSG was scheduled to elect one additional faculty member to a full time position, but due to special circumstances the congress chose to leave one seat temporarily unfilled. Professor Waller will sit on the Board temporarily, should it meet before new elections can take place. BSG president Alex Sherer '93 is hopeful that the position will be filled within the next few weeks.

Chairman of Faculty David Ray delivered a list of five faculty nominees to first vice-president of the BSG Megen Karakelian '93, based on the recommendations of the faculty. One candidate decided not to run at the last minute, and Dan Hoffman, biology professor, failed to attend the hearing that preceded the voting. Hoffman did submit a letter of his credentials in his absence, but his nomination was not voted on.

Sherer said that it was in everyone's best interest not to vote on Dr. Hoffman's letter. "The people voting could not know him well enough to vote him in based solely on his letter. At the same time, we're doing a great disservice to the students of Bucknell if we elected someone to the committee without first hearing from and questioning him," he said.

The BSG will again ask Ray to address the faculty, in the hopes that new nominees will be forthcoming. Hoffman will still be regarded as a nominee, but the BSG does not want to vote him in simply out of necessity. This process could take two weeks or more if no new faculty members are nominated.

Mathinos says the lack of the final boardmember in no way impairs the Board's ability to function properly. "Fortunately, we have Professor Waller; it is the job of the alternate to act in cases such as this one," she said. Mathinos commented that it is entirely possible that the Board will hear cases before the final member is elected.

The Board meets when a faculty member reports an alleged wrong doing to a student's academic dean. The dean then immediately summons the Board to set a hearing with the student in question.

It is the job of the Board to judge the guilt of the student. If he is found guilty, boardmembers must try to distinguish whether the crime was an act of ignorance or an intentional violation of Bucknell regulations.

The Board levies penalties based on this conclusion; all decisions the Board makes are subject to appeal to the dean of the college, then to the vice-president for academic affairs.

"The committee attempts to be educational in giving its penalties. If it is a case of ignorance, they show the student what he did wrong. If it was clearly a premeditated crime, they try to understand his motives and show him the possible long-run implications of his actions. In my year and a half on the Board, I have yet to see a repeat offender," said Mathinos.

Security Log:

Friday, Sept. 13

At 11:45 p.m., Public Safety units were called to Larison Hall as two individuals, one a Bucknell student and the other a visitor, had gotten into a visible argument. Visitor was seen with an open container of alcohol, and upon questioning asked to be arrested. Officers separated the two individuals and dealt with the visitor on his individual charges.

Saturday, Sept. 14

At approx. 2 a.m. Public Safety was dispatched to Smith Hall to investigate a confrontation between two students that occurred earlier that evening. Upon investigation it was revealed that one individual had recklessly endangered the other with a lock-blade knife. Investigation is continuing.

At 11:50 p.m., Public Safety officers were dispatched to Harris Hall on a reported fire alarm activation. Upon arrival a pull station was activated by individual(s) for unknown reason(s). In addition, an officer observed that a fire extinguisher had been discharged, causing a hallway detector to activate. Pull station and alarm system reset and returned to normal status.

Sunday, Sept. 15

At 10:42 p.m., a student came to Public Safety requesting that the Student Medical Service transport the individual to Evan. Student Med Service driver was paged and took the individual to the hospital.

At 4:55 p.m., Public Safety was dispatched to the Fieldhouse upon a student's request. Individual stated that he was struck in the left eye as he was walking from Larison Hall to the rear of Vedder Hall. Investigation is continuing.

At 4:15 a.m., student discovered that someone had stolen her room keys and telephone. Public Safety notified.

Victim reported that on previous evening unknown person(s) had stolen her bicycle seat, which was located in the bike rack behind Hunt Hall.

At 8:30 a.m., occupants of a Bucknell West residence had discovered that unknown person(s) had taken seven black plastic-backed chairs and two coffee tables, which were located outside their back door. Offense occurred between the hours of 1 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. of the same date.

Monday, Sept. 16

A report of a suspicious individual was reported to the Public Safety office. A description of the individual was obtained as well as the vehicle in which the perpetrator was seen. Incident occurred Sept. 11 in the area of the car pool lot and Moore Ave. lot. Investigation is continuing.

It was reported to Public Safety that unknown individual(s) vandalized a room in Olin Science. Door was locked on Sept. 13 and was found unlocked on Sept. 16.

Tuesday, Sept. 17

The Bucknell phones were removed from a room in Carnegie, third floor. A typewriter was also tampered with and a part removed from it. Incident occurred sometime between Sept. 13 and this date.

A student reported to Public Safety that an unknown object had struck her residence hall window in Swartz causing it to crack. No other information at this time.

Wednesday, Sept. 18

An activated fire alarm was responded to by Public Safety officers to find out that unknown person(s) activated a pull station for no apparent reason. All residents were allowed to return to their residence rooms of Vedder Hall. Incident occurred this date at 1:31.

At approximately 9:00 this date, officers responded to Swartz Hall on the report of a fire alarm activation. Again, unknown person(s) activated the alarm for no apparent reason.

While responding to a fire alarm activation in Swartz, it was discovered that unknown person(s) had activated and damaged the detector by soaking it with water. During the investigation, officer overheard a conversation about the "water battle" that had just taken place in that area. Names of individuals involved were obtained and they were advised that restitution for the damage and labor would be their responsibility.

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for some very strong reasons.

"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable has powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Rahmeyer, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.

"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of math education at North Carolina State University.

Berry delivers comic, political address

BY PAT MCCORMICK

Bertice Berry does not have white breasts! Many people may not have known that before her Thursday night lecture in the Weis Center. As Berry told of a college classmate's surprise at learning this about black women, it seemed ridiculous to think that many of us make these assumptions every day about people we know very little about.

Although as funny as the situation may have been, it still seems "shocking" to find that many people still don't understand that people are different, and it's not a bad thing. Berry says, people have learned "in subtle ways that are reinforced" to believe that what they were always told and had always believed was actually true. The misconceptions are still around and are reflected when we fail to challenge them.

Any progress toward changing racist and sexist views have not occurred without a subsequent "growth of the underclass that we discriminate against," says Berry who commented on the public's misperception of an apparent strive toward equal opportunity. But she also expressed her confidence that we can change from perceiving people through a stereotype. "You were always told not to drink, smoke, or sleep around," adds Berry. Some of us have changed the way we think about these things, so we can change the way we look at other people, she said.

Berry advocates that a different perspective manifest in people's minds. She gave her perspective as she recounted some of the ways she had been misperceived because of her race and sex. Tired of being depressed by notions of difference as something that is bad or good, she confronts these attitudes and copes with them by turning to her sense of humor and asking her audience to "confront these situations, experience new places, experience new things... because we can't be free if we have to adhere to other people's ways of being... Different is different," and that's all.

In Berry's 10:30 performance, she challenged the perceptions students have when a freshman, a chemical engineering major, an education major, and a biology major united to perform a unique rendition and recreation of a Tina Turner song on stage. It proved to be the night's biggest slap-in-the-face to all of us who think we know what to expect from a person's major, race, gender, and Greek letters without bothering to truly uncover the qualities hiding behind them.

Higher education in the 1990s: New ways to get things done

The next decade promises major changes in American society, and these changes will sweep through Bucknell and all other institutions of higher learning. As the large "baby-boom" population group gets older, demographers project a time in the near future when over half of the U.S. population will be over 65 years old.

Many schools which grew when the boomers were in college have faced severe dilemmas, and all schools will feel the pinch as the number of 18-year-olds continues to decline.

Colleges and universities must reexamine their entire approach to education if they are to compete. Schools are reexamining the structure of financial aid, attempting to attract older, non-traditional students, and even going into the real estate business to embark on projects designed to enhance their communities and their appeal to prospective students.

These three articles will examine some of these trends both at Bucknell and other colleges and universities.

David Fass—The Bucknellian

As the number of college-aged students decreases, Bucknell and many other private universities may struggle to fill their residence halls. "There's no question the number of 18 year-olds is declining," said President Gary Sojka.

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The aging of America's population, a demographic trend which has hit many segments of society, is beginning to stalk the nation's colleges and universities.

As the college-age population continues to shrink, many schools must look to new and creative sources of funding to make ends meet. As applications decline, costs continue to rise with inflation; schools must work hard to withstand these financial pressures.

Not all of them are making it, as staying competitive in tuition price takes a fatal toll. "Very often the dorms of institutions will be full until the day they close," said Brian Mitchell, president of the Pennsylvania Commission for Independent Colleges and Universities, of which Bucknell is a member.

As the trend continues, many more private institutions in Pennsylvania may be in serious financial trouble.

"In three to four years, we will lose a significant number of private colleges and universities, if we don't change the way we fund higher education," said Galen Godby, director of the Lehigh Valley Association of Independent Colleges, which includes Lafayette and Lehigh.

The underlying problem reflects a nationwide trend: there just aren't as many college-age people, and the numbers will continue to fall. According to census figures, the number of Pennsylvanians between the ages of 18 and 20 declined by 17 percent during the last decade.

"Clearly at some institutions the numbers will be down, and there is some concern that enrollment is down overall," said Mitchell. As the competition heats up, schools must find new ways to survive and compete.

Public vs. private debate

A term usually found in discussion of international commerce has crept into the American college scene: unfair trade practices.

Bucknell and the 75 other private colleges and universities in Pennsylvania receive no state funding, but must compete with state-owned and state-assisted schools.

The tuition at state schools is lower because of the state subsidies, Mitchell explained.

"For the independent sector, the playing field is not as level as we would like it," he said. "We are standing at the bottom of a steep, craggy mountain, and the playing field is somewhere near the top."

President Gary Sojka said, "There's no question the number of 18 year-olds is declining, and the percentage going to private schools versus public schools is declining."

Independents seek fair share

Under a proposal gaining favor within the independent college sector, subsidies to public institutions would be cut in favor of direct, need based grants to students.

Sojka said the plan "could have a positive beneift for schools like Bucknell, if students would come to us with more public money." Mitchell said federal aid is increasing geared toward low income students, decreasing options for students from middle-class families and, increasingly, squeezing them out of schools like Bucknell and forcing them into public institutions.

Noting ten percent of Bucknell's budget is funded by tuition, higher than some schools, Sojka said, "The students pay for this place."

"I am acutely aware how much of a struggle it is for parents to send their children to Bucknell," Sojka continued. "It will be difficult to offload [additional] costs to the consumers."

The plan would work like this: with lower subsidies, public university tuition would rise slightly, bringing it closer to private university fees. High-income students could still go wherever they choose, but they would not benefit from subsidies which indirectly lower their tuition at the state schools.

Lower-income students would get more freedom in choosing where they enroll. The direct grants

Man jailed for drawing gun against student

BY TIMOTHY W. KIRK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A Winfield, PA man was jailed after allegediy drawing a pistol and threatening a Bucknell student during a disturbance at 238 S. 4th street early Sunday morning.

Richard A. Bedosky, 26, was arrested on charges of criminal attempt, aggravated assault, recklessly endangering another person, harassment, disorderly conduct and carrying a firearm without a license. Bedosky allegedly "waved around" a .22 caliber handgun while involved in a confrontation with a 22-year-old Bucknell male.

Officers from Lewisburg, East Buffalo Township, Milton, and Watsontown police departments responded to the scene after Bucknell's department of public safety received a call at 4:15 am Sunday that "a man with a gun" had been seen in the vicinity of S. 4th and St. George streets.

Upon their arrival, they discovered the suspect had already fled on foot. The suspect had been disarmed by two individuals who also "left the area." A search of the immediate area did not locate the suspect.

Police received a call at 7:19 am from a Lewisburg resident stating "a suspicious person was sitting on his back porch." The person left the residence and returned to 238 S. 4th street, where he was apprehended by Lewisburg Police.

Upon apprehension Bedosky was also charged with public drunkenness, criminal trespass and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Bail was set at $40,000 and in default of bail Bedosky was incarcerated in Union County Prison. Investigation is continuing concerning the handgun, which was turned into police Sunday night by it's owner, who claims the pistol was in his vehicle and removed by Bedosky.

Fraternities and sororities undergo hearings with Council on Greek Life

By Nicole Cobban

The Council on Greek Life held six hearings this week and expects to hold its final two early next week in an ongoing procedure to evaluate fraternities and sororities.

Six fraternities and two sororities received word over the summer that they had failed to meet what Dean of Residential Life Gerald Commerford refered to as "minimum standards for continued recognition." All Greek organizations undergo yearly evaluations.

Eight chapters failed to pass evaluations from the 1990-91 school year. At the hearings, five members of each fraternity and sorority have an opportunity to refute the council's charges against them. If after the hearings the council still finds no evidence that a fraternity or sorority has exceeded minimum expectations, it will refer individual chapters to the Committe on Student Conduct, which will determine disciplinary action, according to Commerford.

"Meeting with the fraternities gives them the opportunity to respond to deficiencies, what they're doing and what they've done to address these deficiencies, if in fact they were deficiencies," said Commerford.

The council met with five fraternities and one sorority this week and expects to finish the remaining two hearings by next Wednesday.

The council uses a rating system of one through four. Based on a long list of criteria, including chapter operations, community relations, membership selection, and alcohol awareness programs, the council assigns each chapter a rating.

A rating of one means the chapter exceeded minimum standards; two means the chapter met the standards; three, it failed to meet standards; and four, the chapter has no means of meeting minimum standards.

Each of the eight chapters undergoing hearings had arating of three. No chapter has ever received a rating of four, said Commerford.

Last year, only two fraternities still had a rating of three after the hearing. Although it is not unusual that chapters will start out with ratings of three, Commerford indicated an unusually high number of chapters in this situation. "There's more this year...than there have been" in the past, he said.

According to John Dunlop, dean of students and chair of the Committee on Student Conduct, the committee will often place the offending chapter on a one-year probation. In the past, the committee forced chapters which had ratings of three for two subsequent years to go on retreats with representatives from both their alumni corporation and national organization.

Dunlop suggested that if a chapter received a rating of three for three years in a row, the committee might suggest that the chapter no longer receive University recognition.

Commerford would not disclose the names of chapters receiving failing marks. He did indicate that two of the chapters had also received a three during the 1989-90 year and that there is a possibility that those organizations would be given special consideration in this year's hearings.

The Council on Greek Life is composed of representative students from the BSG, IFC, Panhellenic Council, CCA, as well as one faculty member, three alumni, and two administrators. The period of evaluation begins on March 25 and continues for a period of one year. Although many of the fraternities or sororities conduct activities after March 25, the main target area for the Council is during the specified period.

Allie Zadroga—The Bucknellian

The Council on Greek Life, chaird by Dean of Residential Life Gerald Commerford, described six fraternities and two sororities as failing to meet "minimum standards for continued recognition." In hearings this week, chapters had a chance to refute the ratings placed on them by the council.

How is it that a country that imports almost half its oil can afford to waste it?

When a little thing like keeping the right pressure in our tires would save America over two million gallons of gas a day. Using lower octane fuels-two and a half million. And driving just five miles per hour slower would save still another two million gallons.

Business seminar offered by BU

Bucknell University's Small Business Development Center will be offering a two-part seminar examining the fundamental financial decisions facing business firms for all those interested.

The first session will be held on Wednesday, September 25, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the South Hills Business School in State College. This introduction will offer a framework for evaluating the profitability of a business firm followed by a discussion of the effects of sales growth upon a firm's cash flows and financing requirements.

The second session, October 16, will also take place at the South Hills Business School, and will examine working capital financing. As a conclusion, those involved will discuss the assessment of a firm's debt capacity from the viewpoints of both firm owners/managers and bankers.

George Kester, an associate professor of finance at Bucknell, will lead the seminar.

All those wishing to attend are required to pay a $20 registration fee. The class is limited to 35 members, and the registration must be received prior to September 22. For more information, call (717) 524-1249.

Scholarship available to Juniors

All Bucknell University juniors interested in a career in government service at the federal, state, or local level are invited to apply for the 1992 Harry S. Truman Scholarship.

This scholarship is designed to provide opportunites for outstanding students in the United States with potential leadership ability to prepare for careers in government service.

Up to 92 scholarships may be nationally awarded by April 1992. Bucknell University can nominate up to four students for the upcoming competition. The schoarship award covers eligible expenses up to $3,000 for the senior year, and potentially $13,500 for each of two years of graduate study.

To be eleigible, the entering student must be a full-time junior working toward a baccalaureate degree, stand in the upper third of the class (3.2 at Bucknell) and be a United States citizen or United States national considering a career in government.

Those interested should contact Dean John Pyper, 113 Marts Hall, no later than October 7.

Bucknell Receives NSF Grant

Bucknell has recently received a grant for $187,000 from the National Science Foundation in support of a research project involving herbivorous insects.

This project is directed by professor of biology Warren Abrahamson, and will involve former Bucknell postdoctoral fellow John Horner, Texas Christian University, as well.

The project is designed to lead to an improved understanding of the interaction between host plants and herbivorous insects, and the experiments will probe how new species of plant-eating insects form and the role of host plants in insect speciation.

Crop Walk to be held in Lewisburg

The Lewisburg community will be holding a "Crop Walk" on Sunday, October 20. This event, now in its ninth consecutive year, attempts to combat world hunger by combining global outreach with direct assistance at the local level. Ten percent of the contributions will be donated to the Eastern Union County Supplemental Food Program.

Sponsered by Church World Service, the Crop Walk affected 1800 communities nationwide last year, which involved 2.86 million people.

The donations are used in more than 70 countries to provide food and relief supplies, refugee assistance, preventive health care, and improvements in food production and water development techniques.

The Crop Walk will begin at 2:00 p.m., with registration opening at 1:45 p.m. Those attending are asked to promptly arrive at the New Covenant Church, South 14th Street, Lewisburg.

Ballroom Dancing offered in area

There will be four hours of real ballroom dancing to live music offered to the public on Sunday, October 6, from 5:00 to 9:00 p.m. at the Masonic Temple, Mill Street, Danville.

This "Harvest Moon Dance" is being sponsored by the newly formed Susquehanna Valley Chapter of the United States Amateur Ballroom Dancers Association, and is the chapter's "kick-off dance" for succeeding monthly dances.

Admission will be $5.00 for members and $7.00 for non-members. New members who join the Chapter at the dance will be admitted free. Annual deeus for social members is $12.00.

Rutgers legalizes beer kegs

Rutgers University's Cook College has announced that beer kegs will soon be allowed again at some parties in the dormitories.

Opponents to the new decision complain that the new policy goes against a nationwide trend away from campus kegs, noting that Princeton University banned kegs last week.

Under a trial run to take place on October 1, a single half-keg of beer, the equivalent of 6.75 cases, will be allowed at Friday and Saturday night parties in 32 apartments for seniors. The keg will then be stamped to identify it as the only barrel to be allowed at the party.

Offices of student and residential life present University policies to freshmen

By Micki Hamilton

In a series of one-hour discussions with students living in first-year residence halls, representatives of the offices of student life and residential life explained the University's expectations of appropriate Bucknell student conduct.

These talks are based on a brochure distributed to all students on campus entitled, "Let's Say It Up Front; The Sky Is Not The Limit!"

Dean of Students John Dunlop, who created the brochure during the summer with suggestions from a number of administrators and students, told the group that this is the first time the University has felt a need to publish a booklet about expected student behavior. He said that students often break rules because of what they claim to be 'ignorance."

Dunlop hopes that by speaking with freshmen and distributing the brochure campus-wide, students will become aware of the University's policy.

One often-overlooked policy has been in effect for an entire year, according to Dunlop. The University's alcohol policy is clearly defined in the pamphlet.

"Underage students should realize that being present where alcohol is available or consumed by those of age is the same as 'possessing or consuming,'" the pamphlet states.

Other topics addressed in the brochure include individual and group conduct, assault of authority figures, sexual harassment and assault, off-campus behavior, conduct regulations, the disciplinary system, and the purpose of discipline.

All freshmen attended the policy discussions this week. These meetings about regulations will be conducted on a yearly basis so that every incoming student will be versed about acceptable behavior on campus.

Even though the student handbook specifies the policies in the brochure, Dunlop believes that students should receive direct instruction on the matter to avoid any misinterpretation.

In talking to freshmen violators, Dunlop said students who violate University regulations usually offer one explanation: an ignorance of University regulations and expectations. Most are misinformed about behavioral expectations.

Dunlop mentioned that upperclassmen are not an example to follow because many are also unclear about the policies. He said, "Freshmen in the last several years have professed to be unaware and the upperclassmen can't provide good guidance."

History dictates that student offenders often tell Dunlop that the University does a good job of portraying Bucknell as an "academic Camelot" but neglects to mention what will transpire should a student fall into trouble. Dunlop said, "Bucknell is not a bubble in the sense that it is a protected place where there aren't any consequences." The brochure and the discussions with first-year students are an attempt to correct that flaw.

would lower the cost for these students wherever they study, whether the school is public or private.

"If tuition went up and a lot of it went back into financial aid, you end up with a fairly progressive tax," concludes Edward Gramlich, professor of economics and public policy at the University of Michigan.

Plan would benefit Bucknell

Sojka said the funding plan could benefit Bucknell both by encouraging diversity and lowering the strain on Bucknell's own financial aid programs.

"Each is part of a broader plan to make Bucknell a broader educational experience so we can continue to be attractive to a large number of students," he said, explaining that increased diversity "makes Bucknell more attractive and valuable for all of its students."

Roughly 30 percent of Bucknell's students are Pennsylvania residents who might be eligible for such funding if they meet financial criteria.

While some private colleges face application declines, interest in state-owned institutions continues to grow.

Last fall state universities received nearly 65,000 applications and accepted 46 percent of those students. In 1983, nearly 36,000 applications were received, with a 77 percent acceptence rate.

Mitchell believes the state schools are popular because public subsidies artificially lower tuition.

"The way we're going we are putting the private schools at risk," said State Rep. Edward Krebs.

Krebs, an economist and former professor at Lebanon Valley College, said the last quarter-century has seen a shift, as more higher-income students go to the cheaper publicly funded schools, where tax dollars lower the cost of their tuition. Bucknell's comprehensive fee for the current academic year is $19,475, while the cost for attending Penn State University is less than $8,000.

The draw of the publics is even stronger now, as during any recessionary period. Mitchell said the "psychological perception" of bad economic conditions will lead more students "to at least start out at a public institution.

"We have to demonstrate we are cost-effective," he said.

As many states confront severe fiscal problems, they may join Pennsylvania in considering new, more efficient approaches to higher education.

Times may be a'changing

The vehicle for such fundamental change in Pennsylvania may be the state's five-year plan for higher education, now in the preliminary stages.

The completed plan, which will set the course for the state's higher education funding, will be approved next summer. If more direct grants are included, they could be available for the 1993-94 academic year.

The independent colleges' funding plan, if recommended by the Department of Education, would certainly face strong opposition from the state-owned schools and powerful lobbies such as Penn State and its alumni.

The urgency of the danger facing independent colleges and universities may help bring about such radical change.

"The question," Krebs said, "is can we afford not to look at it now?"

Dunlop explains new alcohol policy

By Tara Gilligan and Mark Abrahamsen
Bucknellian Staff Writers

With the many changes in University alcohol policy, students most assuredly have many questions in regard to the new stance by the Offices of Student Life and Residential Life.

John Dunlop, dean of students, has offered an explanation that should help eradicate any questions that students may have. A pamphlet prepared by Dunlop explains that "underage students should realize that being present where alcohol is available or consumed by those of age is the same as 'possessing or consuming.' Even though the underage person is not in possession of, or consuming alcohol himself/herself, merely being physically present is a violation of University alcohol policy."

This policy, which has been in effect since last fall, is an attempt to alleviate problems which arose when the University rewrote its alcohol policy in 1989 to meet the standards of Pennsylvania's Act 31.

Dunlop said that "there were huge room parties on the freshman halls. The RA's [resident assistants] were instructed to I.D. the people at the party. Eventually, some people would be charged by Residential Life."

Students charged with being present at these parties in the past could easily get off the hook by simply explaining that they had not been drinking. "I think it's necessary to try to play fair to all our kids. Instead of letting the hosts and a couple of people who are forthright take the rap and everyone else beat the rap, I think it's fair to take this position," he said.

The policy is intended to deal with parties in residential halls. Dunlop said that any type of environment where alcohol is being consumed and visitors are present constitutes a party.

"It's a funny kind of fairness," said Dunlop. "Everybody gets caught in the net, but everybody receives the same sanction. It is not so harsh that it borders on unfair, excessive, or outrageous."

Dunlop continued, "We don't assume that everyone is consuming or possessing alcohol...Ideally Bucknell students know state law and that the University's policy is based on state law.

"If you are in the presence of persons breaking state or University law, you could get in trouble. In one's best interest you should not stay in an environment or setting where people are breaking state law or University policy...You're not supposed to be present when a crime is being committed."

The office of student life has outlined guidelines of punishment for first-time offenders: 1) Official reprimand; 2) Educational project; 3) $50 fine or ten hours of work for the Physical Plant.

Dunlop concluded, "Nobody's comfortable with it...We don't think it is the ideal solution. But in the long run, it seems the most equitable."

Student with baseball bat chases freshmen

By Brian Stolarz

Charges were filed against a 17-year-old Bucknell freshman who allegedly threatened and chased other students with a baseball bat while intoxicated during the late evening of Sept. 7 and the early morning of Sept. 8.

The charges of disorderly conduct and drinking under age, both summary offenses, were issued by the Lewisburg Police Department. Immediately after the incident, Dean of Students John Dunlop placed the student on temporary protective suspension from the University. The suspension has since been waived at the suggestion of the Committee on Student Conduct.

During the late evening of the Sept. 7, the student allegedly chased two other students from the entrance of Smith Hall to the Langone Center. One of the two students who was being pursued claims, "He chased me and promised to beat me if he caught up to me."

At approximately 1:00 a.m. on Sunday, the student accosted a second student who was heading in the direction of Smith Hall. The assailant threatened the second student with the bat and asked for money. The student had no money but instead gave the offender a bag of Oreo cookies which he had just purchased. The offender ran off with the cookies and at some point dropped the bat at an undetermined site.

The Lewisburg and East Buffalo Township police were notified and, with the help of a group of twenty students from Smith and Vedder Halls, located the offender on the porch of the Kappa Sigma fraternity. After questioning the student was released in the custody of his roommate. The student reported to the police station on the evening of Sept. 8 where he was officially informed of the charges against him and "apologized" for his actions.

Residence halls cater to students and adults alike as they convert from dorms to hotel rooms

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The custodial staff of Bucknell cleans for two different types of clients. From June to August, the staff readies residential halls for those adults and campers who rent the rooms for a few days or weeks. The other nine months, the staff caters to students who treat their dorms (for better or worse) as home.

The Days Inn and Best Western may be booked months ahead for Parents' Weekend and Homecoming, but during the summer months, the residence halls of Bucknell University become the "motel/hotel operation" of choice. According to Robert Millward, head of the Physical Plant, "bankers, Baptists, and sports camps," book the dorm rooms for their accommodations while attending conferences and clinics held on campus.

Joan Ross, a Bucknell custodian for four years, helps with the transformation from dorm room to motel room each June. She says, "After finals, before commencement, the rooms are housecleaned. We then make up beds and put towels, washcloths, soaps, and tumblers in the rooms." Parents of graduating seniors are typically the first clients of the summer.

These parents, like the other customers, enjoy the golf course, tennis courts, and indoor swimming pool which are a part of their "motel" facilities. One might say that with these luxuries, Bucknell is the Ritz-Carlton of Lewisburg.

While the summer months may seem like a welcome break for the staff from the messes that the students can create, Millward says the custodians can be overheard grumbling, "Gee, I wish the students were back." It's only on Monday mornings "after the kids trash the place," that the staff regrets that comment.

Ross agrees, "At times it would help to maintain the bathrooms over the weekends-just to come on Saturday mornings and touch-up. Monday mornings are the worst."

Despite these aggravations, Ross prefers cleaning a residence hall to an academic building. She likes working with the students.

Millward is quick to point out that the custodians' attitudes "really depend on individual good people."

The staff's dedication to their jobs can especially be witnessed on weekends when special people such as parents, prospectives, alumni, and trustees visit. Before these weekends, the custodians clock extra hours pulling weeds and making the outside of the buildings look better in general. They do these things regularly, but place extra emphasis on maintenance of major buildings before the visitors arrive.

Whether summer or winter, the custodial staff tries to keep the residence halls as five-star accommodations.

What band will play next on campus?

BY JOYCE DOLLINGER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

College students have always been known to be passionate about their music. They listen to their favorite CDs and tapes tirelessly and anxiously wait to hear the groups live.

For the Bucknell Concert Committee, picking a band to play on campus is a tough job. There are thousands of bands from which to choose, and the committee's budget is tight.

The Bucknell Student Government elects the members of the Concert Committee. The organization has two chairs, a treasurer, and ten members. This year the committee wants to expand so that it will have more help in bringing the best bands to Bucknell.

One might ask, "Where do the Concert Committee's funds come from?" The process starts when the committee chooses a band or artist. The committee then outlines a budget of all the money needed, which includes everything that has to be done before the band arrives on campus. Next, two or three people from the committee approach the Appropriations Committee, which is in charge of awarding the Concert Committee the money for the event. Last year, Little Feat cost the committee $20,000. A lesser-known band, like Pandora's Box, which performed on Saturday, September 14, cost the Bucknell Activities Council $1,500.

Some of the money that the BSG gives to the Concert Committee comes from each student's $100 Student Activity Fee, which is included in the yearly tuition. The Concert Committee is one of a few organizations that brings musical entertainment to students.

The committee books bands through promotional organizations such as Concert Ideas and Pollstar. Concert Ideas helped to locate singer/painter Denny Dent for last year's Earth Day event. Pollstar, a new resource for the committee, gives bands a list of colleges at which they can perform. Bucknell is on the list, but most bands prefer to play at large state schools since more people are exposed to their music there. Fortunately, Pollstar also provides the committee with a list of up and coming bands which will play for smaller audiences. The Spin Doctors is an example of such a band. They were unknown last spring when they performed at Bucknell, but are now one of the "hot" college touring bands.

This fall, the Concert Committee will be distributing surveys in the Langone Center mall to find out what types of music and kinds of musical events the Bucknell student body would like to see on campus.

Popular bands on the college music scene today include Jesus Jones (at $10–12,000), Blues Traveler ($10–15,000), and C&C Music Factory ($20–25,000). An established group like Morrisey costs $50,000.To bring bands like this to campus, the committee is considering a tri-university show, which would be sponsored by Bloomsburg University, Susquehanna University, and Bucknell.

Puns And The Pecking Order

The entire echelon of literary order has been shattered! Shakespeare used puns! I know this astounding fact is true, because my English professor says so, and he ranks as a genius among literary scholars because he once used the words bombastically, microcosm, and largesse in the same sentence! Although some may find this shocking news revolting, I'm wired up!

I have always thought puns were cool, but have been rather frigid in using them after a traumatic experience when I was just a puny, little sixth grader. The class was required to do an essay on Smokey the Bear and fire-fighting, and I decided to add some pungency to an otherwise stale-smelling paper...

"Smokey has done his best to quench an unbearable situation that could become grizzly. Personally, I'm choked up over his scorching efforts, and find the current plight of our forests to be em-bear-assing. Should we do something about it?... Does a bear pee in the woods?... Well obviously not, cause then we wouldn't have a problem now wood we?"

I thought the paper was perfect, but my punctilious pundit, Mrs. Sfernly, hated it. She handed it back to me like I was a punk who deserved punishment and barked, "Your feeble quips only prove that you revel disgustingly in your own pseudo-cleverness. Puns are the lowest form of humor, and their only purpose is to allow the writer to pat himself on the back. These 'textual banana-pratfalls' are narcissistic and completely UNappealing."

But now I have proof, PROOF that Shakespeare, the man on the top notch of the literary ladder, used puns that rung out through all his works. Even Romeo and Juliet, in their final tragic suicide scene, (where Romeo drinks poison and Juliet punctures herself with a puncheon) made use of puns...

Romeo: (Lamenting Juliet on her grave) Juliet, Juliet, why art thou yet so fair. 'Tis unfair that the fairy from the far forest forces you to ignore my four poor fares. I must ferret out thy fairest forest like a choleric collier with a collie on his collar and shun thy cool milky-cauldron for as long as one dares. But alas, 'tis better that I bet my butter that your batter 'tis bitter and not better than your budding bustier best that buttresses my heaving breast and separates the two lovers from all the seeping, sleeping rest. (Romeo drinks the poison)

Juliet: (Waking) Say what?

Of course, my professor did mention that the words also functioned as dualistic insights into the oxymoronic nature and astral perimeters of the dramatic-subtleties in the textual ironies. But take away that fact, and you still have puns with a lot of mettle.

So now, the next time I milk that joke about the cow who has an udderly moooving experience, I won't feel like I'm being cheesy, or just skimming the surface of real comedy. Puns have leapt ahead in the humor hierarchy and surpassed the likes of Art Buchwald, Doonesbury, or even Family Circus. I just regret that I didn't discern the superior status of puns sooner. Perhaps then things would have turned out differently at my junior high school "Under The Sea" dance...

As Michael Jackson's "Beat It" blared in the background, I nervously floated near Mona Minnowski trying to fish up the courage to take the plunge. Finally, I dived over to her, held out a cup of aqua-green punch, and said, "gugllesh not."

My heart sank, and I turned green around the gills. Now, had I known about puns back then, I could have wittily said something like...

"Hey babe, I don't mean to stare goggle-eyed, but you got the best two knees at this "Under The Sea" party. You're a regular two-knee fish. Why don't we dance, just for the hal-i-but, ha ha. We'll have a whale of a good time!"

Instead, I watched silently as the 6'4" stocky, behemoth Jack Sharkly sauntered up to Mona and crabbily told me to, "beat it, shrimp." He timed his words to the music.

"Oh Jack," Mona exclaimed, "you're so clever!" They walked off, hand in hand, and I was left floundering with my cup of aqua-green punch.

Now could it be that clever quips could have won Mona's heart? Or maybe Jack's sheer enormity had me outclassed, and no matter what I said, I would have bombed bastically and felt like a microcosm as the couple walked away, and left me staring at Mona's slender back and Jack's largesse.

Don't be called apathetic. Volunteer!

Bucknell joins in the national college drive to increase students' community involvement

BY COLLEEN RUSH

Are college students the apathetic group of socially unconscious and uncaring people that society has made them out to be? Into The Streets, a national outreach, recruitment, and education program, has been formed to increase the quality and quantity of college students involved in community service and community problem-solving. On November 2, Bucknell will participate in this national effort to escalate social awareness.

To encourage participation, Matt Liephart '92, and Jennifer Shore '92, are coordinating a campus-wide volunteer day. Campus Outreach Opportunity League (C.O.O.L.), an organization designed to raise interest in volunteering, is working to make knowledge of Into The Streets more widespread.

Volunteer organizations at and around Bucknell are many and varied. Activities range from dealing with the young and old to the disabled and distressed. The following is a condensed list of the numerous volunteer possibilities available to help you to do your part in the community.

-WORK WITH THE YOUNG-

A popular program on campus is the Bucknell Big Brother/Big Sister organization, a volunteer opportunity that matches students or adults with children of various needs. The Big Brother/Big Sister is encouraged to spend five hours per week with his/her "Little." The program is an excellent chance for students to strengthen the growth and development of a child.

Project Diploma is an organization designed to inspire youths academically. Tutors, as well as recreational advisors, are needed to stimulate interest and concern in the lives of young scholars.

-ASSISTING ELDERLY-

For those who enjoy working with the elderly, the Buffalo Valley Lutheran Village and Rhodes Mere offers students the chance to help and entertain nursing home residents. Students perform a variety of tasks, such as bingo calling, driving, delivering mail, shopping, and assisting in church services. Volunteers are also encouraged to display talents, such as poetry reading, singing, or playing an instrument.

Eva Szreniawski '93, David Soll '93, and Beth Vincent '93 hug their "littles," who are real life brothers and sisters.

The Lewisburg United Methodist Home is another nursing home open to caring individuals who enjoy the company of elders. Students are encouraged to become involved as visitors, chair exercise leaders, card players, outing assistants, wheelchair pushers, laundry folders, and other assistant-required activities.

-MEDICALLY ORIENTED-

Students interested in working with patients and/or performing office duties are welcomed by the Evangelical Community Hospital. Assignments are flexible and can be made to fit any schedule. Orientation and training are provided.

The Geisinger Medical Center gives students the opportunity to gain valuable medical experience in several areas. Students may volunteer to work with patients, non-patients, or families and visitors. Each area includes various activities, ranging from magazine and mail delivery to physical therapy and emergency room help.

-HISTORICAL INTERESTS-

Students interested in Art History or other aspects of the historic world are invited to work at the Slifer House Museum. Volunteers are trained to give guided tours of the local historic museum. Students gain not only experience, but also knowledge of the history of Lewisburg and the Susquehanna River.

-HELPING THE MENTALLY RETARDED-

Volunteer opportunities for students who wish to help individuals with mental retardation are available at the Laurelton Center. Assignments range from actual treatment of patients to creating innovative equipment fitted to residents' needs. Schedules can be fitted to the students' specifications.

-AIDING THE DISABLED-

Inspired and motivated students are wanted at the North Central Center for Independent Living, an organization designed to help disabled citizens become self-sufficient members of society. Volunteers are involved in helping to give these individuals the pride, knowledge, and willpower to take the first steps toward independence.

-ANIMAL LOVERS-

Equestrians and animal lovers are needed as volunteers at the Random Canyon Riding Program. This organization is a therapeutic program that promotes health and exercise for disabled people through horseback riding. Volunteers are needed to help in sidewalking, lead lining of horses, preparing horses for lessons, and fund raising events.

-FRATERNAL-

As a national service fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega ushers in a pledge class each semester which is dedicated to helping the community. The group carries out different service projects each month.

-OTHER-

Additional information on these organizations and various others is available in the Office of Student Activities (O.S.A.) Human Services Directory and through the Bucknellains Interested In Serving Our Neighbors Volunteers Program.

BY LAURA GRISIN AND MARIA GLOD
Bucknellian Staff Writers

Tired of having pizza delivered to their door, Laura and Maria decided to try Skip's—Lewisburg's latest in delivery and take-out.

Early Friday evening, they gave Skip's a call, hoping that Skip's could deliver in less time than it took them to study the 176 - item menu. Skip's offers everything from spaghetti and subs to chicken and chimichangas. Since they have just opened, however, their Mexican entrees are not yet available.

Upon placing their order, Maria and Laura were told the wait would be about half an hour. Sure enough, the delivery person appeared at the doorstep only 35 minutes later, with appetizers, dinner, and dessert.

Laura and Maria wasted no time and started on the "General Alarm" Buffalo style wings ($2.79). Unfortunately, they were far from alarming, and there was more skin than meat on the bones.

Undaunted, they took a shot at the French Dip ($3.95), roast beef on an Italian roll served au jus for dipping. Delivered warm, this sandwich was delightful.

Inspired, they moved on to the charbroiled chicken breast sub ($3.49), a "lite" sandwich served garden style. Though the chicken itself was good, it was hard to find, smothered in all that lettuce. Nevertheless, Laura and Maria recommend it for the health-conscious (or the not very hungry).

Maria was daring enough to try the beer-battered zucchini slices ($2.79). If you happen to be a zucchini lover, this item is a must. If, however, you prefer beer to zucchini, these will disappoint you.

Since Skip's is the only restaurant in the area known to deliver ice cream, Laura and Maria decided to indulge in the Dusty Road and Black Bart sundaes ($1.69). Surprisingly, the ice cream had not melted, and both sundaes were scrumptious.

If you are hungry but want something other than pizza brought to your room, give Skip's a try. Delivery is free from 5 p.m. until closing. There is sure to be something on the menu to tempt any palate. On a scale of five bison, Skip's gets three bison.

EDITORIAL

Should basic American tenets apply here?

"Innocent until proven guilty"

Our judicial system is based primarily on those four words: "Innocent until proven guilty." The U. S. Constitution complements that ideal: "Nor shall any person... be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."

Here at Bucknell, however, the world is upside down. Bucknell policy, as interpreted in the recently-released pamphlet "Let's Say It Up Front," empowers University authorities to charge and punish students of any age merely for being present at an event where alcohol is being served (see related story, page 5). There is no state or local law that requires such action, nor does any mention of this policy even appear in the 'University Alcohol Policy Relating to Students and Student Organizations' on pages 55–59 of this year's Student Handbook.

Where, then, did this policy come from? Dean of Students John Dunlop claims the policy is fair, but "it's a funny kind of fairness." More than that, we think it's an unfair kind of fairness. Students present at a social event where alcohol is being served are in jeopardy even if they are not imbibing or violating any other University policy themselves.

What about the administration's claim that non-drinkers are sanctioning the event with their very presence? Rather, we believe that those students abstaining from alcohol are presenting alternative role models for other students at the party. More such behavior should be encouraged!

Instead, the current policy stifles such diversity of thought and action. "The old system didn't work," claim administrators. "It was more unfair than this one." Perhaps. Perhaps some truly guilty students escaped sanction. But at least the original policy did not run the risk of indicting an innocent student. Innocent until proven guilty must apply to University regulations as well as to U. S. law.

Thus, the agents of the University and the enforcers of its policy must work assiduously to clearly ascertain who is possessing and who is consuming alcohol in violation of state law—and only those people can be charged.

While we implore students to be moderate and responsible, they should not fear a University which threatens to penalize them when they are guilty of no greater crime than socializing with their peers.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Skelton outlines regional diversity

TO THE EDITOR:

I am compelled to attempt a response to the OPINIONS piece written by Mark Abrahamsen, not only because it reflects lazy journalism and shoddy research, but because it ignores the fine work completed by an energetic and dedicated admissions staff.

The facts: Bucknell admissions staff members visited and offered presentations in more than 170 high schools in Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oregon, Tennessee, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, Puerto Rico, and the American Virgin Islands during the 1990-91 academic year.

The facts: The Bucknell admissions staff members participated in more than 70 college nights and college fairs in all the states listed above, and in a college information tour which included Singapore, Bangkok, Hong Kong, Taipei, Seoul, and Tokyo, also during this past academic year.

The facts: 1991-92 admissions travel schedule reflects a modest increase in school visits, college nights, and college fairs outside the Northeast.

The facts: Bucknell alumni represented Bucknell at 200 college nights, half of which were at schools in states other than the Northeast.

The facts: For the class of 1985, 7.8% of the entire applicant group, or 493 applicants, were from states other than the Northeast (and I have included Virginia among the Northeast group); for the class of 1995, 14.8% of the entire applicant group, or 873 applicants, were from states other than the Northeast. For the class of 1985, 9.7% of the class, or 77 students, were enrolled from states other than the Northeast; for the class of 1995, 13.7% of the class, or 124 students, are from states outside of the Northeast.

> "For the class of 1995, 14.8% of the entire applicant group, or 873 applicants, were from states other than the northeast."

The facts: While individual members of the Board of Trustees may have opinions about where recruitment efforts should be directed, in my 28 years as an admissions officer, no trustee has been involved either directly or indirectly in the admissions travel and recruitment planning.

While I concur with Mr. Abrahamsen that we are not as diverse geographically as either he or I would prefer, neither are we as diverse ethnically, racially, economically, culturally, or religiously as most Bucknellians would prefer. An admissions staff must serve a wide constituency including primary markets with which we have had success, and secondary and developing markets with which we are experiencing slow but steady progress. The office of admissions must use staff, student interns, and volunteer alumni assistance intelligently and responsibly, and with attention to the realities of the budget. The willingness of students such as Mark Abrahamsen to speak about his positive Bucknell experience with members of his home community is an important part of spreading the Bucknell word. We have organized a Bucknell admissions student volunteer effort (Bucknell U. S. Outreach); Mr. Abrahamsen was invited to the organizational meeting last year, but was unable to attend. We repeat the invitation, Mark!

I have chosen to respond because Mark Davies, the director of admissions is in the Los Angeles and San Diego areas visting more than 20 high schools and participating in several college nights this week.

DEAN OF ENROLLMENT PLANNING

Student lambastes Bucknellian's ethics

TO THE EDITOR:

Who do you think you are kidding?

Your (September 13) editorial defending the decision to print the name of a Bucknell student accused of a crime is appalling.

As a former Bucknellian staff member I was exposed to the moral fervor of the staff when any student was accused of a crime. A "let's get that bastard" mentality was the rule on the staff. If memory serves me correctly, there was never an instance in which a student's name was witheld if it was available.

> "A 'let's get that bastard' mentality was the rule on the staff."

Nonetheless, you, a group of self-appointed student demagogues are making high and mighty decisions that could ruin an individual's life on campus. Although the story seemed to be fairly written, the mere mention of the individual's name convicts him in the courtroom of public opinion, regardless of the outcome of the criminal proceeding. You may be legally entitled to print everything you can get your hands on, but that does not mean you are correct, or even responsible by doing so.

This particular case is particularly troubling. The editorial ends with the lofty, but empty defense: "That decision was not made lightly." That decision was made last Spring. I remember how jubilant the staffroom was when word came that one of the editors of the University Messenger, the chief competition of the Bucknellian, had been arrested. While you may claim that such jubilance did not enter into your decision, I find it extremely interesting that another, less prominent, Bucknell student was sentenced to jailtime for theft of university property. Was this news too unimportant to report?

The next time you allow your freedom to outstrip your responsibility, at least do a better job of covering your collective ass!

Does Bucknell cultivate respect for diverse individuals and cultures?

BY DEBORAH ABOWITZ

For the last six years I have been, all things considered, proud to be a member of the faculty at Bucknell. While pride may be considered by many a "sin," I have nonetheless been proud to be associated with a university with such innovative programs, with a real commitment to increasing the diversity of the faculty and student body, with what I felt was a warm and open student body, and yes, with a beautiful physical campus. But events of last week and this have forced me to seriously reevaluate this position. For the first time, I feel both a sense of shame for some of the people at BU and I have also been made to feel truly unwelcome in this "community" for what I am—a Jewish American.

On Monday, September 9, the first day of Rosh Hashanah (the second-holiest day of the year for Jews—of whom there are several hundred on this campus), the Intervarsity Christian Fellowship, a BU-recognized organization on campus, and people from Gideon International (here under the sponsorship of IVCF) set up tables outside the Langone Center and the Library and started to hand out, in addition to their usual New Testaments, special pamphlets with the Star of David on them. This material, published by InterVarsity Press (part of their national organization), is expressly for and about the conversion/evangelizing of Jews to Jesus. It is aimed at no other racial or ethnic group or people. While freedom of speech protects their right to say what they want to in this matter, it is also the case that Bucknell is an educational institution whose very mission statement says that "students are encouraged to cultivate respect for other individuals and cultures, enhancing in the course of this pursuit their own moral sensitivity.."! While IVCF has made some noise about an apology for their incredible lack of "moral sensitivity" in holding this event on one of our two High Holy Days, there is still a nagging and persistently deep sense of personal hurt and unwelcome remaining for many Jewish students and myself stemming from this episode on this day.

> "I feel both a sense of shame for some of the people at BU and I have also been made to feel truly unwelcome in this "community" for what I am—a Jewish American."

For us, it was something akin to a Bucknell-recognized white supremacist group demonstrating legally in front of Edwards House or Seventh Street House on Martin Luther King Day. I hope that analogy helps these students (who planned this event without the knowledge of their faculty advisor) understand just how offensive their timing was! The material brought onto campus by this group, moreover, tells us we are not welcome here for who and what we are—Jewish Americans. It indicates a fundamental lack of respect for the goals and meaning of cultural diversity and the aims of this University.

In addition to these events, the Panhellenic council scheduled Fall Rush events on both Rosh Hashanah, last week, and on the eve of Yom Kippur (when our holidays start), this week. This occurred despite attempts to alter the days for Fall Rush by the Kappa Alpha Theta president and my attempts to reach the Panhel president over two weeks ago (phone calls were not returned) to discuss the matter. When the matter was brought to their attention by the Theta president, their arguments for having the events on the eve of Yom Kippur (which is our holiest day of the year) were that the holiday doesn't start until sundown (true) which they were told was 8 p.m. and they would be done by then. So they assumed that everything was "kosher"? These women should think again—seriously. If they had bothered to be responsible individuals and checked with either an observant Jew or an active member of Hillel (the campus organization for Jewish activities), they would have been told quite clearly that services begin at 7 p.m. (they have to begin before sundown) and are preceded by a ceremonial meal (at 5 p.m.) to mark the beginning of a 24-hour fast. This information was freely available from Hillel and some of the information was on DATEBOOK too! Nonetheless, they scheduled their events so that no Jewish woman could both rush and observe the beginning of this Holy Day.

For that, I am ashamed for them! They merely paid lip service to a serious issue. I am the faculty advisor not only to Hillel, but also to a sorority (Theta) and have never before found the groups' goals to be in conflict. My experience this last year with the chapter has been terrific and I will be forever touched that this predominantly Christian group of women went out of their way to send me a Jewish New Year card to mark my holiday! But the lack of caring and sensitivity by the Panhel leadership when this matter was brought to their attention makes me wonder about how "open" the system is to peoples of other races, creeds, etc. Would Rush have been scheduled on Christmas Eve? Or during the Easter Vigil?

In addition to supporting the sorority system for the last few years (in the face of growing opposition), I have also happily and willingly worked with the Admissions Office here on recruitment. As faculty advisor to Hillel, I get many calls and visits from prospectives who are Jewish. They (and their parents) ask about how easy it is to be Jewish at BU, or if there is any real anti-Semitism, or if Jewish students are welcome in the fraternities and sororities. In the past I have responded to these questions in a positive vein—and was able to do so openly and honestly.

MY QUESTION TO BOTH THE INTERVARSITY AND PANHEL TODAY IS, WHAT DO I TELL PROSPECTIVES NOW?????

Editor's note: Deborah Abowitz, associate professor of sociology, is advisor to Hillel and Kappa Alpha Theta.

There are 932 Freshmen. At a time when less students are graduating from high school than in years past, it seems Bucknell should be under-enrolled. Instead, singles have been turned into doubles and lounges have become bedrooms. Why? This year Bucknell accepted around 57% of those who applied. A few years ago, only 40% were accepted. More students are accepted now out of the fear that a smaller percentage of those accepted will enroll. This phenomenon has occurred at many schools but it hasn't happened here.

The result, over-enrollment, is damaging to the university. There are already larger classes and far fewer residential social spaces. Presumably there will be less one-on-one student to faculty interaction. As we all know, many students come to Bucknell because of the excellent facilities and the small classes. Students enjoy and pay for the personal attention and accessibility the professors provide. In each of the last four years, the size of the incoming freshman class has increased and I fear that continuing down this road any longer will compromise the very character of a Bucknell education.

How can the tide be turned back? Common sense. Every year the Admissions Office has to make an educated guess concerning what percentage of accepted applicants will enroll. It seems that they have consistently overshot the goal. In fairness, I'm sure this is by design. If the university is going to err, it is better to do so on the up side so that all the beds are filled and the cash flow continues. We have now reached the point, however, that it would be better to gamble on getting a few less students next year than expected. The university needs to get the student population down to a level appropriate for a school of our size with our facilities. It is disheartening to see Bucknell lose its selectivity unnecessarily. The excellent facilities, accessibility to professors and small classes are a few things that make Bucknell one of the best institutions in the country; they are too important to sacrifice.

Hammock missing; owner upset at loss

TO THE EDITOR

I'd appreciate it if the person or persons who took the red and white hammock from between the spruce trees on St. Catherine Street would have the decency to return it. The hammock doesn't have much monetary value, but it does have a lot of of sentimental value for me. Taking it was plain and simple theft.

Thank you.

Citizenship in the Academy

Part One of Three

BY MATTHEW D. FRENCH

The pluralization of institutions has invaded every facet of our lives, and higher education, one of the last remaining havens for the Old Way is no different. Factions, subdivided, mutated offspring of higher orders, are as evident on America's campuses as they are in any other setting, and they are weakening academia. Let it be noted now that this is by no means a call for homogeny or conformity, for homogeny is the nourishment for academic stagnation, and conformity is the executioner of creativity.

Instead it is an appeal for understanding, an exploration of academic discourse, and a scrutinization of the way we, as citizens of the Academy, must conduct ourselves in order to maximize our education while celebrating our unique perspectives.

America's colleges and universities are infected with a devastating, if not critical, virus. This virus is a competitive nature which has already claimed most of modern civilization. College students often speak of the world as being divided into two parts: college, (being the sphere in which we presently travel), and "The Real World," referring to everything else, but most especially the job market, being a "grown-up," and having to take on the responsibilities which come with being a Citizen of Society.

This "in here/out there" mentality promotes a feeling of safety; the last secure setting one can hope to live in before being thrown out into the Big, Bad, Cold, Cruel, Heartless, Evil, Desolate World which is adulthood. The defenses we will learn which will enable us to better survive in the "rat race" our civilization has created are supposedly not needed in the secure, nurturing environment of academia. But that is not the case, it seems.

It appears that the filth of our society's cut-throat competitiveness has tainted our arena of learning; a forum where mistakes will be made, conflicting opinions will be expressed, and ignorance will and should manifest itself. After all, those are some of the foundations upon which higher education is based, and as there are responsibilities for citizens of Society, so are there responsibilities for citizens of the Academy.

Competitiveness cannot excuse citizens of the Academy from their responsibility to each other. Competitiveness is not necessarily a bad thing. It fosters a drive for excellence. Academia should not, however, strive to emulate the competitiveness which is evident in today's society. "Win at all costs" is not as productive or rewarding as "learn at all costs" in the Academy.

Civility is not a weakness. The constraints of living in a society are difficult for the criminals, but for most part, the laws of society promote the common good. In his recent confirmation hearings on Capitol Hill, Judge Clarence Thomas spoke of a higher law, a "natural law" which takes precedence over the laws of man. The question is: is there a higher law which governs a "society" of individuals devoted to learning? Should that setting be different that the setting at large?

We as citizens of the Academy must acknowledge that academia has become a political arena. The political melee which is present in the "outside world" has infected our world. Consequently, the corruption, illegalities, and confrontation which manifest themselves so frequently in the "real world" are evident in academia. The factions in academia are as destructive to academic discourse as the factions in politics are to political discourse.

We must, therefore, strive to reverse this process of "factionalization" by recognizing and adhering to two basic premises which are vital to the survival of the Academy and mandatory for its membership: first and foremost, civility towards each other. Your fellow citizens in the Academy are not to be viewed as hindrances to your progress, but aides in your accomplishments. Second, not only must you allow fellow citizens to express themselves, you must respect what they have to say.

Remember "respect" and "agree" and not the same, and well they shouldn't be, for that would stifle competition. Respect, however, is vital to learning, and no matter how trivial or contrary something might seem, if you as a member of the Academy dismiss it, the Academy will fall to the same fate as Society, and then all will be lost.

StreetBeat: What do you think of the new BYOB policy?

T.J. KEEN '93

"I think that the BYOB policy should be up to each fraternity based on their own insurance policies and concerns. If the BYOB policy were designed for each fraternity it would be more effective."

ERIC LYON '92

"It is further evidence of the decay of our society through needless legislation, due to the failure of individual acceptance of responsibility."

JOHN YACKEL '92

"I feel that the BYOB policy is a reflection of the deteriorating social atmospere at Bucknell. The social responsibility of the fraternities may also deteriorate with this policy if it is enforced."

SONDRA BURKE '92

"The BYOB policy is a nuisance and is forcing people into town, creating more off-campus parties and further town problems."

JOHN DUNLOP
DEAN OF STUDENTS

"It will be very problematic. It will take a lot of getting used to. We will all be on a long shake-down cruise. It may go on longer than my tenure here at Bucknell."

JAY NIEBUHR '92

"It goes against the policies of the university by segregating students. It cuts fraternity costs, but creates problems for both fraternities and the university by the garbage it creates. Basically it sucks."

Alumna returns as resident poet

BY DANIEL GONZALEZ
Bucknellian Staff Writer

It's not getting any easier being a poet. Unfortunately, the hours are long and the pay is lousy. And if these problems don't seem enough for you, the matter of talent remains. It takes a rare and special gift to dive beneath the surface of everyday life and come up with the stuff of poetry. With these dim prospects looming large before the young poet, it's especially gratifying and rewarding to be able to meet and listen to those who have struggled with and surmounted some of these obstacles.

This semester's Poet-In-Residence, Deirdre O'Conner, is just such a voice. With her first reading in Bucknell Hall last Sunday, O'Conner officially reintroduced herself to the Bucknell community, from which she graduated in 1985. Upon her graduation, O'Conner taught English in a small province in Japan and then returned to the States to pursue a master of fine arts degree from Penn State, where she has taught frequently. During her summers, she has worked on campus in both the Younger Poets and Japanese Teachers programs. Clearly, she is no stranger to Bucknell or the Lewisburg area.

While many of the poems she read Sunday evening dealt with themes of family here, a few spoke specifically of her experiences overseas. For instance, O'Conner mentioned that being forced to speak Japanese taught her to see just how verbally oriented her life is. She also remarked that extensive contact with a foreign language has rekindled an interest in her native language.

Of her own poetry, O'Conner cites the influence of Emily Dickinson and Irish poets such W. B. Yeats and Seamus Heaney. She also speaks of the need for poets to have other people they can show their work to for criticism and help. O'Conner includes Bucknell's own Karl Patten and Jack Wheatcroft among her earliest teachers and as friends who still offer valuable advice.

And while the direction of much modern literature and theory may seem increasingly removed from the problems of day-to-day life, O'Conner's poetry seems to speak directly to those problems, ranging from a poem about suicide to one recounting a trip to a fortune teller.

O'Conner's poetry is epitomized by the reaction of a few nurses in the audience who approached her after the reading to tell her how much they enjoyed the poems she had read about nurses.

Over a cigarette and a can of Diet Coke, Deirdre O'Conner smiled when she remembered their kind words and said, "That's not a poet telling me that...that's a real person." And with her remark, you realize that maybe it's this sort of youthful vigor and refreshing honesty that make Deidre O'Conner's homecoming this fall so welcome an event.

Star Trek celebrates 25th

Space... the final frontier. These are the voyages of the Starship Enterprise...

BY CHRIS BIRD

On September 8, 1966, Americans across the country heard these words for the very first time. They sat down in front of their televisions to watch a group of men and women "boldly go where no man has gone before." They probably chuckled at the "guy with the pointed ears" and teenage girls swooned over the dashing Captain. Who then would have guessed that this show would become one of the biggest phenomena that the entertainment industry has ever seen?

Star Trek has become more than just a television series. It is a part of both entertainment and American history. There has been a hit television series, thousands of conventions worldwide, nearly 100 novels (including 28 consecutive best sellers), five motion pictures (the sixth, Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country is scheduled to be released on December 13) and millions of fans worldwide from at least two generations.

When most shows reach the age of 25, the event is but a minor note on Entertainment Tonight, but the silver anniversary of Star Trek is quite different. Currently there is the Star Trek 25th Anniversary convention tour, a special on the FOX network, the fifth season of Star Trek: The Next Generation, and a ceremony celebrating DeForest Kelley's star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. Many see the show as a waste of time, but die-hard fans (known as Trekkers) know that Star Trek has made a greater impact on American society than some may think.

Star Trek is the brainchild of Gene Roddenberry. Born in 1921, Roddenberry was the son of a cavalry officer stationed at Fort Bliss, Texas. He majored in engineering at UCLA and later joined the Army Air Corps, fighting 89 missions in Guadalcanal during World War II. After the war, he became a commercial airline pilot and studied literature at Columbia University. A near-fatal plane crash in 1949 ended his flying career and Roddenberry moved to Los Angeles and joined the Los Angeles Police Department while writing scripts for television on the side. He sold his first script in 1951, and his first science fiction script the next year. Roddenberry went on to use his law enforcement background to write for Dragnet and other police series as well as other shows such as Dr. Kildare and West Point. In 1960, he was given his first television show, The Lieutenant, about life in the peacetime Marine Corps. It was during this time that he began to develop his idea for Star Trek.

In 1964, NBC gave Gene Roddenberry $20,000 to write three scripts for his new series. One of these scripts became the pilot, "The Cage." The pilot was sent to NBC's offices in February 1965—and was rejected. However, NBC already had a large investment in the show and commissioned another pilot, the first "second chance" in television history. Most of the original cast was replaced by a multiethnic cast of mostly unknown actors.

Canadian-born William Shatner was chosen to lead the crew as Captain James T. Kirk; Leonard Nimoy was First Officer Spock, a half-Vulcan, half-human; and another former WWII airman, James Doohan, played Chief Engineer Montgomery "Scotty" Scott. This pilot, entitled "Where No Man Has Gone Before," starred Gary Lockwood (later in 2001: A Space Odyssey) as a crew member who gains tremendous ESP powers. The pilot did well and the show became a series.

Changes were made with the addition of DeForest Kelley as the irascible Dr. Leonard "Bones" McCoy, George Takei as Chief Helmsman Hikaru Sulu, Nichelle Nichols as Communications Officer Penda Nyota Uhura, Grace Lee Whitney as Yeoman Janice Rand, and Majel Barrett as Nurse Christine Chapel. Barrett later went on to marry Gene Roddenberry in 1969.

The series did well in its first season and added Lieutenant Pavel Chekov, played by Walter Koenig, for its second season. The series was to be canceled after the second season, but a massive letter writing campaign brought the show back for a third and final season.

It was during this season that Star Trek again made history. During an episode entitled "Plato's Stepchildren," Kirk and Uhura are forced by an alien race to kiss—the first ever inter-racial kiss on network television. This incident is considered by some to be a major step in the fight for equal rights. A young girl, living in a poor black neighborhood saw Uhura and realized that black women can be successful. This young girl grew up, and in 1990, Whoopi Goldberg won the Oscar for Best Supporting Actress for Ghost. She has also played Guinan, the alien bartender in Ten Forward, for the past three years on Star Trek: The Next Generation.

After its third season, the original series was canceled and the cast went their separate ways. The series was a positive step for both the cast and guest stars, many of whom went on to greater fame. Diana Muldaur guest starred twice, and later went on to play Dr. Katherine Pulaski during the second season of Star Trek: The Next Generation and Rosalind Shays appeared in L. A. Law. Joan Collins of Dynasty fame played a 1930's social worker in the award-winning episode "City on the Edge of Forever." Vic Tayback, Mel, the cook on the sitcom Alice, played a gangster in "A Piece of the Action," and Ricardo Montalban, Mr. Roarke on Fantasy Island, played Khan Noonian Singh in the episode "Space Seed," a role he later repeated in the film Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan.

In 1973, Star Trek returned to television as an animated series. Most of the original crew returned to provide voices for the characters and the series lasted one season of Saturday mornings. The original series went into syndication, where it has become even more popular than during its original run. Indeed, it is still enjoys a late night spot on many television stations.

Movie Review

Lynch's Wild at Heart: brilliant, bizarre film

BY GREG WEYANT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

After seeing a few of writer/director David Lynch's films like Blue Velvet, Eraserhead, and now Wild at Heart, I am convinced that he is the most bizarre person in the film industry today. His unique style coupled with his great eye for directing helped Wild at Heart win the best picture award at the Cannes Film Festival. Ironically the brilliant film critics of TV Guide thought, in their infinite wisdom, that it was only a two star picture.

The movie is based around two lovers, Sailor (Nicholas Cage) whose character seems like Elvis' evil twin, and his girlfriend Lula (Laura Dern) who are on the run, it seems, from just about everyone; the law, Lula's mother, her boyfriend and even a hit man hired by Lula's mother. The whole plot is difficult to explain in just a few sentences. The rest of the cast is nothing short of brilliant. Diane Ladd as Lula's crazed mother (who is Laura Dern's mother in real life) is really spectacular. Excellent performances were also turned in by Willem Dafoe and Harry Dean Stanton.

Wild at Heart can't be put in one category but it's an excellent movie, definitely four star (unless you care to side with TV Guide). It's a hilariously funny, sexy, violent, comedy, love story, drama. Go ahead and give it a shot.

Album Review

Don't overlook "alternative music"

BY CRAIG BITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

For a majority of people, the rather nebulous definition of "alternative music" conjures up images of discordant, pulsating, nerve-smashing, bile-slinging, electronic noise. In reality, there are many new recordings on the cutting edge of the music industry that simply cannot be placed into the conventional categories of "rock," "jazz," "new age," etc. These recordings commonly fall under the heading of "alternative music" and due to the nature of the corporate music industry, they go unheard and unnoticed.

At the top of the WVBU playlist this week is the new album by Carter U.S.M., 101 Damnations. Carter is a British band with an unmistakable U.K. sound. The youthful bellowings of Carter's lead singer are strangely reminiscent of the vocal entourage of EMF, yet the words and music are quite different. Songs such as "Sheriff Fatman" and "Midnight on the Murder Mile" contain strong social and political commentary concerning homelessness and drug-addiction in urban underclasses. Carter U.S.M.'s sound is very innovative with great extremes in stylistic differences. Some songs are hard and raunchy with an early '80's, punk-rock, Ramones-type flair, while other songs are more melodic and tell stories in a ballad-type fashion. Utilizing an appropriate combination of guitar and electronic synthesizer sound, Carter U.S.M. is able to create a very powerful and compelling album. I recommend it very highly.

Another new album by Chris & Cosey, entitled Pagan Tango, is part of the new Wax Trax label line-up. Wax Trax, which in the past has been primarily associated with industrial music, now takes a great leap of faith by producing an ethereal, melodic, conceptual-type album. Sounding much like a cross between Lush and Dead Can Dance on stimulants, Chris & Cosey provide a subliminal sound with pulsating, driving, dance-beat undertones. Yet the musicality of the album has not seen sacrificed to the bass-line. Songs entitled "I Belong to Me," "Take Control," and "Feel to Me," exemplify the importance of the emotional impact of this album. To fully appreciate this album requires a loud stereo, a dark room, and a state of mind.

© 1991 Waul Mr. Modo/Big Life Records

The third album I am reviewing is somewhat of a disappointment. Nitzer Ebb's new CD single release, As Is probably should be taken just that way. The first track, "Family Man," billed as the best song on the album, is feeble at best. Nitzer Ebb seems to have lost the potency of earlier releases such as "Getting Closer" and "Lightning Man" from the album Showtime. This greatly anticipated release is really not worth searching for. However, if you are a big Nitzer Ebb fan you may want to add As Is to your collection since the production and distribution of this promises to be limited.

My final review is perhaps the most stunning new release I have heard in a long while. A band entitled The Orb has a new album out called, The Orb's Adventures Beyond the Ultraworld. This is a unique concept album only slightly similar in style to Enigma's release early this year. The songs are fun and happy yet simultaneously strong and meditative. The Orb's sound is traditionally British with musical roots in the modern acid-house sound prevalent in the late '80's. The popular track, "Perpetual Dawn," with traditional dance-hall reggae beats, has even broken through onto commercial air-play at some progressive radio stations. To the average listener, The Orb may seem abstract and foreign, however, it deserves a closer examination. The strangely meditative qualities of the album are seen-forced with powerful samples taken from nature, random speech, and even Dennis Hopper from his character in the film Blue Velvet. The Orb's Adventures Beyond the Ultraworld, is quite simply an excellent "alternative" album.

One important word of warning...Warner Bros. (a very corporate label) has released a Lollapalooza CD - Don't buy it. All the tracks are studio versions taken from previous album releases. It is a fine compilation, but definitely not a concert album.

Comedy group gives splendid performance

BY CARL WALKER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

For many years now, Bucknell has provided an adequate outlet for talented student musicians, but what about talented student comedians? Of course there has been comedy at Bucknell, but always by professional comedians. Now there is Some Assembly Required, a student-run comedy group that performed a raucous show for a packed Bison last Friday night.

To call this group "amateur" would be an injustice, which is why I label them "professional-amateurs." How else could one describe the smoothness of the improvisation? Or the maturity of the response? Or the comfort with which the comedians performed?

Founder Marc Haimes believes that the key to Friday night's success was the raw energy captured by the spontaneity of the moment. He believes that "The best things come from deep down inside ourselves." And everything was indeed within themselves. The group went on stage with nothing: no script, no direction, just the feeling of the moment and the audience.

But it isn't correct to say that the group was unrehearsed. In fact, they spent long hours honing their improvisational skills. Haimes believes that a major component of their development was "finding new ways to shock each other, keeping each other on their improvisational toes."

And it was the cohesiveness of the unit and the playing off of each other's strengths which provided the smoothness of the transitions; they are good friends, and that rings through their show.

Some Assembly Requiredhas a definite vision too. For them, the Bison is the just the tip of the iceberg. The comedy group would like to perform in different settings around campus, including the untrodden ground of the fraternities. They would like to develop a structure analogous to that used by the popular TV show "Saturday Night Live," to focus their satirical energy. Also, the group hopes to incorporate stand-up comedy in to their program.

It is a healthy trend to explore new avenues of expression, especially the expression of the students. Some Assembly Required is a group completely accessible to the students; they will hold auditions for two new members later this semester.

Old favorites open Coffee House season

BY CARL WALKER
Buckneliian Staff Writer

Two veterans of the Bison Coffee-House Series opened up the season with a bang. "Out on the Tiles," featuring guitarist Dave Stuntz and vocalist Jeff Pennington, served up standard acoustic tunes, as well as other rock songs adapted by the duo for the acoustic setting. The band, though plagued by technical problems, including a faulty left speaker that worked only toward the later portion of their show, showed a tightness and rapport usually only achieved by a solo performer. Dave and Jeff also play in the campus hard-rock band Chequered Past.

Enter singer/guitarist/composer Chris Williams, Bucknell icon for the acoustic movement. Chris, after coming off of a spectacular outdoor show at the beginning of the year, featured his original material, now widely known throughout Bucknell and the surrounding community. Chris, through his years of constant playing, has achieved a mark of professionalism and a stage presence that has gained a large following. This was shown in the capacity crowd he drew in the Bison—some forsaking chairs for a closer seat on the floor in front of the stage. We can only look for more of his poignant voice and his dynamic playing in the remainder of Chris's career here at Bucknell.

Editor's Note: Look for a feature article on Chris Williams in next week's Arts and Entertainment section.

Football routed by Villanova, 40–0

Bison to open Patriot League play tomorrow at Fordham in N. Y.

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

For the second straight week, Bucknell's football team took it's lumps both literally and figuratively. A 40-0 loss to the Villanova Wildcats was marred by injuries to several key players on the squad. The shutout marked the first time in five years that the Bison were held scoreless in a game.

The Wildcats are one of the top teams in division 1-AA and they played as if they wanted to justify their ranking dominating play from the opening kickoff and proceeded to march 66 yards on 11 plays for their first score of the game.

The Wildcats were sparked on the drive by quarterback Scott Culombo, who showed his prowess as both a scrambler and passer on the drive which was capped by an eight-yard run by running back Pat Kennedy.

Villanova added another score down in the first quarter as running back Vernon Smith finalized a seven-play, 51-yard drive with a six-rard run. Bucknell struggled throughout the first half offensively due largely to its inability to mount any sort of ground game.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Tailback Matt Walsh '93 advances the ball against the Villanova defense in Saturday's 40–0 loss to the Wilcats at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium. Walsh is currently ranked among the League leaders in kickoff and punt returns.

Tailback Brian Henesey '92 led all Bucknell rushers with 50 yards on 19 carries, but that was not enough to keep Villanova's defense from keying on the pass. With a 14-0 lead, Villanova's defensive line pinned its ears back and attacked the Bison's young defensive line and quarterback Jeff Kelly '92 recording eight sacks on the game. Kelly managed to complete five-passes on nine attempts for 26 yards before the Villanova pass rush got to him late in the first half, bruising his shoulder.

Kelly was replaced by Greg Coverdale '92 who completed four passes for 37 yards in mostly third quarter action. Late in the third quarter, Coverdale turned the reins over to freshman Travis Kopp. Kopp, in his first collegiate appearance, had an auspicious debut completing his first pass to David "Whitey" Berardinelli '93 for 54 yards. Spurred by the long completion, Kopp led Bucknell on its longest drive of the day.

However, as Bucknell drove into Villanova territory, the Wildcats took out the second string team who had played for most of the second half and brought back in the first string. Bucknell stalled on the six and relinquished the ball on four downs. That would be the only threat Bucknell would muster all day.

Things should be considerably less difficult this week against Fordham. If there is such a thing as an easy trip to the Bronx, its to play the Rams football team.

Fordham made the jump from Division III to IAA last year, were 1-9, and were winless in the Patriot League. They competed in the first Patriot League contest of the season losing 32-7 to Lehigh. However, it would be foolish to take the game for granted.

Bucknell will send a squad to New York that has been dessimated by injuries. Kelly is, still feeling the effects of the shoulder injury, and is questionable. Offenensive tackle Eric Rutter '93 is also questionable-with a knee injury.

The losses are even greater on defense where senior standout Bob Marshall will try to hold together a secondary that has really been crushed by injuries. George Rocchino '92 is out for the year, and Matt Sniegocki '93 is out indefinately with a neck injury.

However, Marshall led a gutsy effort by the secondary against Fordham with six tackles including a blocked two-point conversion attempt.

Bucknell will also rely on a solid group of linebackers which includes the team leader in tackles, John Spatafore '92, as well as Hew Woodward '93 who recorded ten tackles last week.

Coming off tough losses in the last two weeks, the Bison must regroup this week against Patriot League nemesis Fordham in order to continue the standards set by last season's squad.

Peter Ho —The Bucknellian

Captain Brian Henesey turns the corner against the Wildcats. The senior lead the Bison with 50 yards rushing on 19 carries and is ranked fourth in the league in rushing with 74 yards per game.

"P.A.T.'s"

Lester Erb '91, last season's outstanding receiver and all–time touchdown reception leader, has been named the offensive receivers coach at Hobart College in Geneva, New York...

Tailback Brian Henesy has 2,111 career rushing yards. The Bison co-captain needs 225 more yards to catch Ken Jenkins '82 for second place, and 512 yards to reach Brad Myers '53 total and take over the top spot on Bucknell's all-time rushing list...

Scott Mitchell '94 has withdrawn from Bucknell for undisclosed personal reasons. Mitchell had been the back-up QB all year.

Bison soccer split pair of games with Lehigh and Susquehanna

BY ANDY LABOVITZ

The men's soccer team had a roller-coaster week last week, suffering a tough loss to Patriot League rival Lehigh in overtime on Saturday before defeating an inferior Susquehanna team on Tuesday. The victory over Susquehanna was the team's first of the young season.

Last Saturday, here at Bucknell, the Bison opened the Patriot League season against the Lehigh Engineers. The game was expected to be a close, hard-fought battle, and that is exactly what it was. The Bison drew first blood, as Greg Beatty '95 headed the ball past a badly beaten Lehigh goalkeeper 16 minutes into the first half. The assist was from Dan D'Angelo '92, for Bucknell's first goal of the season, and the first goal of Beatty's intercollegiate career. Even though that was the only goal of the first half, the Bison dominated the rest of the half, as most of the time was spent with the ball on Bucknell's offensive end of the field.

The second half was almost a mirror image of the first half, as Lehigh's offense controlled play, forcing Bucknell to play on the defensive for most of the time. The Engineers got a break when Scott Tardibuono '93 was tripped in the goal box before he could get off a shot. The referee didn't think that a foul was warranted, so no penalty shot came from the play. With Bucknell clinging to a 1-0 lead and time running out on the Engineers, Bo Fifer '94 was called for a foul in the goalbox on a Lehigh breakaway, and the Engineers had a chance to tie the game with only 91 seconds remaining in the game. Lehigh striker Evan Stein blasted the penalty kick past a diving Mark Wrigley '94, who had an excellent game, saving 15 Engineer shots.

After this deflating goal, which had a "negative psychological impact" on the team, according to coach Craig Reynolds, Lehigh struck early in the overtime period, as Scott Chintz scored the game- winning goal only five minutes into the 30 minute overtime period. The rest of the game consisted of the Bison trying desperately to mount an effective attack, but falling just short and losing the game by a 2-1 score.

Goalkeeper Mark Wrigley '94 punches the ball from a Lehigh player during Saturday's 2–1 loss to the Engineers. Wrigley recorded 15 saves in the game.

Coach Reynolds said that he was pleased with the first half that the Bucknell squad played because they showed more intensity than they had in the previous week's game against Temple. However, he was disappointed that the team "mellowed out" too much in the second half and "got sloppy defensively, giving Lehigh too much time and spacewith whichto work.". He said that the win "would have been a real confidence builder, but it is definitely a step in the right direction."

The Bison got their first win of the 1991 season Tuesday at Susquehanna with a solid 4-2 victory. Beatty again tallied first for Bucknell with a goal 11 minutes into the contest. Seven minutes later, Bo Fifer, who had a hard-luck week, headed the ball past his own goalkeeper, Wrigley, that tied the game at one apiece. The stunned Bison allowed another Susquehanna goal just three minutes later, putting them at a 2-1 disadvantage. The teams went back and forth the rest of the half, neither of them able to tally.

During halftime, Coach Reynolds told his team to go to a "one-on-one" strategy to take advantage of Susquehanna's lack of team speed. This strategy paid off, as the Bison blitzed Susquehanna for three goals in the second half, led by Beatty's third goal of the season and second of the game just six minutes into the half. Jon MacKenzie '93 scored the first non-Beatty goal of the season for the Bison with tenminutes remaining, and Leon Hayduchok '94 finished the scoring for Bucknell fiveminutes later. The Bison dominated all facets of the game with good bench strength and by playing possession soccer, outshooting Susquehanna 23-5 on the day, hardly testing the talents of Wrigley. Coach Reynolds was "proud of the way the team kept their poise," but is "still not comfortable with the starting lineup." He is looking for consistency, and promises changes if the starters cannnot produce, especially since he has been pleased with the play of some of the non-starters such as Hayduchok.

The kicking Bison take on the Holy Cross Crusaders here at Bucknell on Saturday afternoon, with both teams looking for their first Patriot League victory of the year. Bucknell defeated Holy Cross in Worcester, MA last year 3-2.

Women's tennis slams Fordham and Lock Haven

BY MIKE MARKOVICH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Lady Bison tennis squad rebounded from a tough Saturday loss to Patriot League adversary Army, and finished last week's action with two big wins, versus Lock Haven and defending Patriot League champs, Fordham.

The women started off the weekend on a sour note with a closely contested 5-4 loss to league rivals,Army, at West Point. The persistence of the lower ranks of Army's squad paid off as it edged out the Bison with a single match advantage.

Bucknell's top singles seed, Julia Diaz '95, came back from being down a set to take the match 1-6, 7-6, 6-2. But the Bison's only other singles victory came from another freshman, Kristina Lutter '95, playing at the number five spot. These two victories, in addition to vicotries at the top two doubles spots, provided Bucknell with its four points on the final scoreboard, one less than Army's five.

The three doubles matches were all three set affairs, with Diaz teaming with Kymm Carlson '94 to take the number one match 1-6, 6-2, 7-5, and Karen Stagliano '92 and partner Mary Ann Benack '92 combining for the number two win, 6-2, 4-6, 6-1. The Bison missed the doubles sweep as Lutter and Stacy Duffy '95 dropped their match 6-4, 4-6, 6-3.

But the women appeared unfazed as they travelled to the Bronx the following day to meet defending Patriot League champions, Fordham, for what promised to be another close battle. However, the match proved to be anything but close as the Bison picked up a valuable league victory in downing Fordham 6-1.

The match was as lopsided as the score indicates, with only Diaz needing a third set to beat her number one singles opponent. The only loss suffered by Bucknell on the afternoon was at number two singles, where Carlson was defeated by Fordham's Kelli Flanagan 6-0, 7-6 (7-2).

The remaining singles matches, with Benack at number three, Stagliano at four, Lutter at five, and Duffy at six, were all straight set performances.

With the final outcome decided after the singles matches, the only doubles match played for points, at number three, was another Bucknell show, as Lutter and Duffy won easily 6-2, 6-1, to round out the day on a decisive note.

Coach Rose Ewan continued to be pleased with Bucknell's performance. "The team is definitely young, with three out of six starters being freshmen, but they're playing very nice tennis. I think that if everyone stays healthy, they'll prove that they can hold their own in this league."

Coming off of that strong performance, the squad had a well-deserved day off before yet another away match, this time at Lock Haven. As if to prove that the young team's previous performance wasn't a fluke, the women repeated their season-opening dominance of Holy Cross with another 9-0 victory, now using Lock Haven as their punching bag. No match went to a third set, and Bucknell, using the same lineup as Sunday's, posted nine love sets to prove the point.

Especially outstanding was the play of Kristina Lutter at number five singles and number three doubles. Of the twenty-five games she was involved in on the day, incredibly she lost only one of them, taking her singles match 6-0, 6-0, and receiving help from Duffy to take the doubles match 6-0, 6-1.

Also of note was co-captain Stagliano's victory at number four singles. With that 6-4, 6-0 victory, she moved her career dual match singles record to 35-7, within one victory of tying the Bucknell record held by Michelle Miller, who went 36-15 during her 1981-85 career.

The Bison look forward to a similar schedule next weekend, again with matches on Saturday and Sunday, and then closing the week's action this time on Wednesday. However, only two of the matches are away this week, Drexel on Saturday and Bloomsburg on Sunday.

The Bison enjoy the luxury of hosting fellow Patriot Leaguers, Lehigh, in Lewisburg on Sunday, when they will look to gauge the difficulty of competing with the Lehigh team, to whom Coach Ewan gives the slight nod in this year's Patriot League Tournament strictly because they will play host.

"This league is so tight this year that I can't see one team dominating. It will come down to a combination of the draw and who has the momentum going in. But there will definitely be some unseeded women around who are going to be spoilers."

Lady Bison stun Hofstra in 3–0 shutout

Stephanie Carfley '93 leads Field hockey squad with two goals, collects Patriot League player of the week honors

BY NATHAN WOLAVER

Last Saturday the Lady Bison field hockey team evened their record to 2-2, as they shut out Hofstra in a stunning 3-0 victory.

It was sweet revenge for last season's heartbreaking 1-0 loss to Hofstra on a penalty stroke. Hofstra had begun the season with a rough start, but were stronger than their record showed. Both teams matched up well, however, Hofstra had some key impact players who could have swayed the game in their own favor.

The two rivals were stalemated at nothing apiece fifteen minutes into the game, when Laurie Blue '94 broke the ice by scoring off a broken corner.

To Head Coach, Jen Averill, this came with a sigh of relief. The Hofstra goalie had been acting like the Berlin wall, stopping seventeen shots let loose by the Bucknell offense. The goal pumped up the Lady Bisons and infused a new spirit into the team.

At half-time Coach Averill told the team, "to come out strong." The team took her words to heart dominating all phases of the game in the second half.

Laurie Blue opened the scoring in the second half with the team's first field goal. Stephanie Carfley followed up six minutes later with a goal of her own. This was her second goal of the week to go along with one assist. She combined these stats with superb all-around play to earn "Patriot League player of the week" honors.

Averill was very impressed with the teams win. She had praise for all members of the team. "We were generating the offense we needed," she said. "Our solid play at defense resulted in great offense." Leading the steel curtain of defence was senior Co-captain Amber Baxter and junior Katrina Mueller.

Alison Arth '93 agreed with Averill, saying, "We are fortunate to have strong players this season like Stephanie Carfley, Amber Baxter, and Danielle Ward. We seem to be getting stronger every game."

Unlike the win against American University last week in which most of the play took part at midfield, the Lady Bison were able to keep the ball on Hofstra's side of the field.

This game was key for the team. After two close losses and one overtime win the team was mentally drained. Saturday's game replenished the winning attitude into the team. "Last year we were playing not to lose. We've overturned that feeling."

Remarked Averill. "In the beginning, middle and end of last season we were searching for a win. Now were 2 and 2, but, by no means content with it."

Up next for Averill's team is a big home game against Holy Cross. Last year Holy Cross came in tied for second place in the Patriot League.

"Holy Cross has a lot of depth." Averill noted. "No disrespect towards Hofstra, but, they are more of a threat than Hofstra because of their depth."

The field hockey team continues to improve under the tutelage of Coach Averill. Although Thursday's game was cancelled due to inclement weather conditions, the Lady Bison feel they are ready for Ursinus.

With two victories under their belt, the squad is beginning to gain the confidence necessary to compete successfully in the Patriot League.When asked about the future of the team Averill said, "I just want them to be successful, then the wins will fall into place."

Water polo heads to Navy for tourney

Bison lose second straight to Slippery Rock, defeat two club teams during shaky week

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's water polo team returned from Slippery Rock University last weekend with two more victories against club teams. Unfortunately, the Bucknell men also suffered another loss at the hands of Slippery Rock, the number one collegiate team in the East, bringing their varsity record to 0-2.

Similar to their initial, home-tournament game against Slippery Rock, Bucknell played a very strong first three quarters before succumbing to an 8-14 loss. Co-captain Kevin Schroth '92 scored the first goal of the game at 6:33 in the first quarter. He then went on to score two additional goals, while goalie John Bradbury '92 kept Slippery Rock to only two points during the quarter. "It was a different game from the first because we came out flat at the home tournament," said head coach Jim Harvey. "This time we came out strong and held the lead for a while. Unfortunately, Slippery Rock used their 'home court advantage' in the end to come up with the win."

Slippery Rock held Bucknell scoreless in the second quarter and went ahead 5-3 by the end of the period. Early in the third quarter, Dan Brown '92 scored two goals to bring the game to a tie. Slippery Rock went on to score three more goals before co-captain Walter Kelly '92 scored at 2:06. Schroth then added another with one second remaining in the quarter.

The fourth quarter saw Slippery Rock outscore Bucknell by five goals. Bucknell's only goal of the period came at 2:23 by Steve Benson '92. Assists for the game were credited to Schroth, Brown, Kelly, Benson, Dan Killinger '92, A.J. Zottola '92, and Sean Tierney '95, each of whom had one.

Bradbury also accumulated an impressive 14 saves throughout the game. "The final score is not indicative of how well we played," Harvey said of his team's performance. "The guys are only getting better each time they play Slippery Rock, and they learn a lot even from a loss."

Victories for the Bison during the tournament were against teams from the University of Michigan and the University of Maryland. The 23-11 game with Michigan and the 15-3 game with Maryland gave the younger members of the Bucknell team ample playing time to gain needed experience. On another positive note, the Bucknell "B" squad, which consists of many of the younger, less-experienced players of the team, tied the Slippery Rock "B" squad 6-6 in one of their games during the weekend.

This weekend, the Bison travel to Navy for a tournament featuring all the major varsity teams in the East. They are ranked eighth behind, in order, Slippery Rock, Navy, Brown, University of Massachusetts, Harvard, Iona College, and Princeton. The Bucknell team is scheduled to first meet Navy and then either Princeton or Brown, where they are looking forward to playing in a regulation, all-deep pool. If the men win their first game, they also stand a chance of meeting rival Slippery Rock once again.

Cycling club competes in Milton Festival race

BY JAMIE DIAFERIA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bison Cycling Club began the new season last weekend with a successful showing in the 25 mile Milton Harvest Festival race.

The young group saw four of their seven-man team finish in the top 25, as Lee Lefkowitz '93 grabbed the number two spot with an exciting sprint to the finish line.

Despite the obvious handicap of being a club team, the Bison managed to turn in a markedly better showing than varsity squads from schools such as Bloomsburg, Lock Haven, and Susquehanna.

This solid showing by Bucknell was due mainly to the phenomenal finishes from classmates Tim Peterson '93, Greg Tall '93, and Oliver Hasse '93.

Peterson notched the 14th spot in the 120 person field with a time of 59:18. Tall was a bicycle wheel behind Peterson as he finished in 17th place with a time of 59:19, while Hasse finished 25th with a time of 59:22.

This solid 1-2-3 combination kept the Bison in the race despite the near-loss of one member due to a flat tire.

Mike Maestas '92 was able to overcome his mechanical difficulties and eventually finished 106th, as he just barely escaped a disqualification.

The final two members of the team, Jim Ruiz '95 and Jill Schuyler '93, were also able to put in respectable times for the Bison.

Ruiz grabbed 48th place with a time of 1:02:58, while Schuyler finished fourth in the women's field with a time of 1:16:50. The first-time racer also received a trophy for a second place finish in her age group.

The Bison now look towards their next race, a 75-mile long test of the team's endurance. This race will be held in Berwick on October 7th.

As Lefkowitz, the president of the club, stated, "We'll take it as it comes. The competition won't be easy since it will be (post-collegiate) people we will be racing. That will make it tougher."

Though the team is still searching for new members, they are confident that this will be a varsity-caliber season.

Men's Rugby shuts out Penn State, 24–0

BY MITCH BENTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's Men's Rugby Club began the 1991 fall season by defeating the Nittany Lions of Penn State 24–0, on the strength of a powerful first half of play.

The squad began the scoring early in the contest when Greg Dorr '93, playing at the fly-half position, took a pass out of a maul and eluded a number of defenders for the season's first score. Fullback Howie Fetzer '93 added the extra points to give the All–Blacks a 6–0 lead.

The next score came soon after as inside center Emre Sapci '95 surprised Penn State by picking up the ball off of a penalty and sprinting for the corner of the try zone. The tactic proved very successful and after a missed kick, Bucknell had a commanding 10–0 lead.

The first half scoring came to a close as outside center Mark Spina '92 took a pass on the wing and outran a number of Nittany Lion defenders to the try line. Once again, Fetzer delivered the points after and Bucknell had their half-time lead.

Although the team was tiring in the second half, they continued to keep the pressure on their opponents. Scrumhalf Bob Moore '94 scored the first points of the half with a try midway through the twenty–five minute period (Rugby is usually played in forty-five minute halves but time constraints forced the reduction). Fetzer rounded out the match's scoring by placing down a try late in the period, leaving the final score at 24–0.

Captain and club President Chuck Gabler '92 was obviously happy with the outcome but was obviously concerned with his team's play. "I thought we played them extremely tough, but we certainly weren't playing against Penn State's best squad. I thought our defense looked good, but we were tired near the end, and had it been a regulation match, the score might have been different."

Penn State also had an Eastern Invitational Tournament to compete in and many of their best players were not able to participate in the Bucknell match.

Match Secretary Dorr echoed the president's concerns. "Although the score was lopsided, I hope that our team doesn't put to much weight in this win. We start playing league teams next week and I think that they will offer tougher opponents then today."

The All–Blacks, who compete in the Eastern Pennsylvania Rugby Union, begin their league play at home tomorrow against East Stroudsburg.

The match will offer the team a chance to redeem itself from last year's disappointing loss. Playing in East Stroudsburg, the All–Blacks had a 16–0 first half lead, but ultimately lost the match 24–20. This year's contest will be held at 1 p.m. on Swartz Field.

Women's soccer defeats Lehigh, 3–1

Class of '95 lead Lady Bison to first League victory of the season, Holy Cross next up

BY SCOTT BROWN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's soccer team rebounded from a slow start this past week as they earned their first win of the 1991 season. But the Lady Bison failed to hold momentum as they dropped the following contest.

The Bison began the week last Saturday as they travelled to Bethlehem, PA to take on Lehigh in their first Patriot League match-up of the year.

It was Lehigh's first intercollegiate game at the varsity level and their inexperience showed early as Jessica Wright '95 scored on a penalty kick to give the Bison an early 1-0 lead that they never relinquished.

Sara Pitiro '95 opened the gap by scoring the team's second goal on a pass from Mandy Head '92 to give Bucknell a 2-0 halftime advantage. The pass from Head was the first time this season an upperclassman had been involved in a Bison score.

Both teams tallied once in the second half. The Bison received their score from the foot of Lisa Gibbons '95 as she netted her second goal of the season to lead the Bison to a 3-1 victory and a 1-0 record in the Patriot League.

But the win proved to be a costly one as Kim Fekel '93 separated her shoulder, leaving her out for two to three weeks. She was the fourth-rated goalkeeeper in the Patriot League to date with a .823 save percentage.

But she leaves the goalkeeping responsibilities on the able shoulders of Bridget Collins '94, who has an impressive .833 save percentage, good enough for third best in the League. Collins shared time last season, but is recovering from a knee injury.

Bucknell returned home Wednesday to take on the Fighting Blue Hens of Delaware. Last year Delaware controlled the contest, outshooting the Bison, 18-4 in their 3-1 win.

This year was much of the same story as Delaware outshot the Bison 24-12, requiring Collins to come up with 18 saves. The Blue Hens were able to take the early lead as Karen Roeber, Delaware's leading scorer last year, scored just 14 minutes into the game. They extended their lead to 2-0 on a Kelly Osmond goal ten minutes later.

The nature of the game remained the same into the second half until, with just over 13 minutes left in the game, Gibbons led a break down the middle of the field. She drew the sweeper in and sent a pass to a streaking Megan Coyne '95 who was subsequently pulled down in the box.

Wright took her second penalty kick of the week and nailed it past the flat-footed Delaware goalkeeper. Her goal gave her the team lead in scoring as she has two goals and an assist in the first four games.

From that point on, Bucknell kept the intensity but nothing materialized for the Bison as they succumbed to Delaware, 2-1. The Bison dropped to 1-3 and Delaware's record increased to 3-1-1.

Bucknell must try to regain momentum as they travel tomorrow to Massachusetts to take on Holy Cross in a Patriot League match-up. Holy Cross began their season off strong as they defeated UMBC, who beat Bucknell 4-2 last week, 3-2 in two overtimes. All three of the goals were scored by Jessie McManmon, who was making her first collegiate appearance. The freshman forward received the Patriot League's "player of the week" for her efforts.

Against the Crusaders, Bucknell will look to take their second ever Patriot League victory, Lehigh was the first for this second-year squad.

The Bison return home next Wednesday to battle the University of Pennsylvania.

Cross-Country avenges last season's loss to Connecticut

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

It was exactly 365 days since "The Streak" had been snapped by the University of Connecticut Huskies.

Bucknell's men's cross country team had won 167 consecutive dual meets. Since October 5, 1974, 41 different schools had fallen victim to the Bison's dominance. The Huskies, however, refused to contribute to The Streak, defeating their hosts 22–36.

This past Saturday at Van Cortland park in upstate New York the Bison were given the opportunity to avenge that bitter setback. Bucknell, UConn, Manhattan College, Rutgers University, and UNC–Charlotte all trekked northward for the contest. The latter three schools were just out for the exercise as the real focus was on Bucknell and the top 10-ranked Huskies.

With over 10 members of last year's team returning, both expectations and optimism were high. UConn had the meet's top finisher but Bucknell took six of the next nine spots.

Matt Deardorff '92 and Bob Kelly '92 both finished less than six seconds behind the winner to finish second and third respectively.

Jeff Loomis '92, who finished seventh, summed up the team's attitude by stating: "After last year, we had some unfinished business to take care of."

Fellow seniors Tom Wuchenich, Jason Cahilly, and Jeremy Herneisen placed in the top 15 as did Judd Jarden '93. Jim Farrer '93, John Lewis '93, and Eithan Tabak '94 each finished among the top 25.

> "After last year, we had some unfinished business to take care of."
> —Jeff Loomis '92
> Bison runner

When it was all said and done, the Bison had compiled a perfect 4–0 record as mighty UConn fell 24–34. The Jaspers and Scarlet Knights each succumbed to 15–50 scores (identical to last season's results). The team that ventured north of the Mason-Dixon line fared only slightly better, losing 18–43.

Bucknell has over a week before it welcomes the Pittsburgh Panthers to Lewisburg for its next dual meet.

When you notice one of these guys running by your window or golf ball and ask yourself "who's chasing him?" the answer is a pack of huskies, all with their tails between their legs.

Women's Volleyball places second in B.U. Invitational

BY DON REINHART

The Bucknell women's volleyball team emerged from last weekend's home tournament with high expectations and a dynamic outlook on their potential as they completed a four–game winning streak, the longest of any Bucknell women's volleyball team in the past seven years.

The Bison held a weekend invitational tournament of eight teams. The hosts competed in the first pool of the tourney with Iona College, Canisius College, and powerhouse James Madison University.

The second pool saw action from St. Peter's College, Cleveland State University, St. Francis College, and the University of Pennsylvania. Bucknell finished second in their pool to tournament champions JMU.

In their opening match, the Bison came out strong. They defeated Iona in four games, 17-16, 15-12, 12-15, 15-8. Senior team captains Kara Forosisky '92 and Kathleen Sullivan led the offensive attack with eleven kills each, while Amy Miller, '95, and Meghan Kinney, '93, kept the defense alive with nine digs a piece.

Head coach Cindy Opalski was very pleased with the team's transitional play from defense to offense. Opalski stated, "Good defense creates offense. We're limiting the other team's offense."

The second match proved Opalski correct. Bucknell committed only eight attacking errors and 17 reception errors in four games, while tallying 23 digs and a remarkable 42 kills.

Forosisky repeatedly proved to be a force at the net with ten kills, but Laura Spinney, '95, was the ultimate threat. On ten attempts, Spinney killed nine balls with no errors. Miller again led the defense with six digs as Aubrey Schneggenburger '95 contributed five more.

Colleen Conway '94, like Opalski, was pleased with the play of the Lady Bison. "This past weekend we were strong contenders in the tournament," she remarked. "We really came together as a unit, and we worked together as a team. We have a very young team and we have high expectations for ourselves because our number of wins far exceeds last season's total."

The Bison lost some fire in their final match against JMU. Intimidated by James Madison's reputation as a hard-nose scholarship program, Bucknell was off to a slow start but finished well. They dropped the contest in three straight games 6-15, 2-15, 11-15.

Although the match was a loss, Opalski saw some good effort and superior play which whet her appetite for Patriot League competition. She commented, "It elevates our game to play against quality teams and helps our future."

After a road trip to the St. Francis Invitational Tournament next weekend where the team is expected to do well, they open their league schedule on the 27th.

Conway likes her team's odds, stating, "Our practices have been really good." With a current standing of four wins and six losses, the Bison hope to enter the conference with a winning record and menacing reputation.

Lady Bison top George Mason, lose to UConn and UNC–C

BY CHRIS DROWNE
AND DAVID MURRAY
Bucknellian Staff Writers

This year's Lady Bison cross country team has already surpassed last year's dual match victory total. After finishing the 1990 campaign winless in two dual meets, the women, like their male counterparts on the course, had the opportunity to avenge one of last season's defeats.

George Mason University, the University of Connecticut, UNC–Charlotte, and Bucknell all met in Van Cortlandt Park. George Mason, which won last year's head-to-head contest by a narrow 29–27 margin, fell to this year's squad 24–35.

UConn and UNC–Charlotte received strong performances from their top runners which enabled them both to defeat Bucknell, 18–41 and 24–32 respectively.

Kristen Opdyke '93 who placed fifth, was the top finisher among the Lady Bison. Gina Abraham '93 was the next to finish for Bucknell crossing the finish line four spots behind Opdyke.

Head Coach Art Gulden, in his eighth season, leads a young team featuring three juniors, two sophomores, and five freshmen, with no seniors. Of the two sophomores, Kathy Wurster placed 14th while Beth Muehl finished 27th.

Among the many rookies, Jessica Wilhelm '95, Kristie Robson '95, and Bonnie Turner '95 all finished in the top 25. Falling less than five minutes off the pace were Kris Deardorff '93, Megan Idell '95, and Kim Sheaffer '95.

One week from tomorrow the Lady Bison will host the Lady Panthers from the University of Pittsburgh in hopes of evening their season's dual match record at two.

Judge William M. Hoeveler, a member of Bucknell's class of 1947, is the presiding judge in the jury trial of former Panamanian president Manuel Noriega.

Hoeveler earned his bachelor of arts degree and then went on to get his law degree in 1950 from Harvard Law School. After obtaining his law degree, he worked for a private firm in Philadelphia. Hoeveler moved to Miami, where he was a partner in the law firm of Knight, Peters, Hoeveler, Pickle, Niemoeller, and Flynn. Currently he is a federal judge in the U. S. District Court of Miami.

The BKN: How do you think Bucknell prepared you for your job?

Hoeveler: It really prepared me well for law school.

The BKN: What stages did you have to go through to become a judge and do you think that it was a difficult process?

Hoeveler: There really are not stages. I was in private practice for twenty-six years, doing mainly litigation work (trial work). In 1976, there was an opening on the Federal Bench here in Miami. The commission that supervises the process, asked for inquiries and applications of those who were interested in becoming a federal judge. I expressed my interest and the commission selected by the senators went throughout the selection process and I was one of the names sent up for evaluation. The two senators at the time, Senators Chiles and Stone, picked me for the position. Then they submit the name to the President and the President (Carter) decides whether to submit the name to the Senate. Then the Senate has its own process. First there is a hearing and then it goes before the whole Senate for its Advice and Consent. Then if the Senate approves you, the President is advised of the Senate's actions and he issues the certificate and appoints the judge. It takes a while. I was advised by the senators in January of 1977 of their nomination. Then there is an investigation by the F.B.I and the Judicial Department. I was finally told in April after the Senate hearing that I was approved by the Senate. I was actually invested on May the 26th, 1977.

The BKN: Do you feel that it is too cumbersome a process?

Hoeveler: I think that it is a good process.

The BKN: What do you think of Judge Thomas?

Hoeveler: I have not really studied him, but from what I have heard he is a good man. He certainly seems to be qualified.

The BKN: Do you think there is a lot of political favoritism in the selection of judges today?

Hoeveler: I do not think that there is a lot. Obviously the senators are going to nominate men and women who are qualified, but perhaps share their same feelings about politics. Generally the process works pretty well and I think that in most cases the appointments are made according to ability. I have considerable respect for the great majority of judges whom I know.

The BKN: How much influence do you think that press has on fairness of trials today, for example William Kennedy Smith?

Hoeveler: They will have an influence on the fairness of the trial only if the judge permits it. Generally the court can prevent the press from having too much influence by proper instruction and by picking a jury that is free of that influence. Obviously the press is going to have some influence and the William Kennedy Smith case is a good example of

Elections to Board of Review spark interest in academic discipline

BY JOHN GODBOUT

The recent elections to the Board of Review of Academic Responsibility have renewed interest in the possibility of Bucknell adopting an honor code, replacing the system the University has used since 1956.

Richard Waller, assistant professor of history and international relations, introduced the idea to the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) in his statements to the congress before his election on Sunday, Sept. 15. A similar proposal was defeated in 1987 via student referendum.

"It would seem to be a lot less trouble for both the faculty and the students to get away from this police-like attitude," said Waller.

Under an honor system, a professor would give an exam, and students would sign their names to a statement on the exam asserting that they had not cheated. If the professor suspects a violation the case would be brought to an Honors Council, which would be closely monitored by the student government.

"The good thing about an honor system is that it presumes that students wouldn't do things they ought not do. Before coming to Bucknell, I'd always worked with an honor system," said Waller. "In my years at those institutions, I never had a student violate the system."

Registrar Bruce Freed sits on the Board as secretary, a non-voting position, and is less optimistic of this sort of "cure-all" solution. "You can't push an honor system from the top down; from the bottom up is the only way it will work," he said.

John Cooper, a professor of chemistry who was a member of the Committee on Instruction when the honor system was last proposed, concurred. "The principle is that an effective honor system requires positive support from the students. Everyone at the top tried, but the bottom said they didn't want it," said Cooper.

Maureen Murphy, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, believes responsibility lies with the students. "I'd like to see students imposing an honor system within themselves, in addition to the system we have now. But students don't like their peers running around tattling on them," Murphy said.

While the student body ultimately defeated the 1987 referendum, a strong core of students did support the cause. The BSG researched the idea extensively and submitted the proposal based on its findings.

"There are students that know they're being cheated and are angry, but if they are the minority of the student population, I guess nothing will happen," said Cooper. "Presently we have an academic policy that doesn't function as well as it should. As it is now, unless you are really stupid about cheating, nothing will happen; you've got to mess up in a major way."

"The [present] system is very effective for those who get caught; the penalties are adequate. There is a lot of care given to the emphasis on education, so that the student knows what he did was inappropriate," said Trudy Cunningham, associate dean of engineering.

In total, the Board heard 75 cases in the 1990-91 school year. While 41 were related to one common incident, the numbers are still dramatically higher than in the early eighties.

This trend of dishonesty is nationwide and has been blamed on the competition for graduate school acceptances. "These are difficult times to implement an honor system because of the emphasis on grades. Students are terribly competitive and they all want the same end," said Dean of Students John Dunlop.

"The system works for those who get caught. The ones I fear for are the students who get away with cheating here, and then go outside the Bucknell community and find themselves in much deeper trouble," commented Trudy Cunningham, associate dean of engineering, on Bucknell's current academic review process.

Lawmakers challenge privacy act

Senate proposal would permit universities to release crime reports for publication

BY TRAVIS ELLIOTT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

For the past 18 years, the legal ramifications of divulging protected information about a student has prevented educational institutions from releasing crime reports naming student perpetrators or victims.

However, that is likely to change as a result of legislation which is now before the Senate.

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), sometimes referred to as the Buckley Amendment, denies federal funding to any educational institution "which has a policy or practice of releasing, in any form, any personally identifiable information contained in personal school records" without the permission of the student.

The Education Department has interpreted the law to include campus crime reports, and as a result, some colleges have refused to release incident reports. Others, like Bucknell, have released edited incident reports which do not divulge the names of criminal perpetrators who are also students.

The Education Department announced early this July that it would propose a bill to amend FERPA to explicitly state that colleges are allowed to release campus crime reports to the public.

However, the department still maintains that FERPA, as currently written, prohibits the release of crime reports when they include the names of students.

Mark Goodman, executive director of the Student Press Law Center, praised the department for changing its policy, but he added that it would be better for the department to reinterpret the current law to permit the release of crime reports.

FERPA was initially enacted by Congress in 1974 to protect the privacy of students and their parents by limiting access to student educational records maintained by an educational institution.

But recently the Education Department and student groups have been divided over the appropriate definition of "educational records."

Last March, U.S. District Judge Russel Clark, ruled that "nothing in the legislative history of FERPA refers to a policy or intent to protect campus law enforcement unit records which contain student names or other personally identifiable information."

Judge Clark found the Education Department's interpretation of FERPA to be erroneous, but his decision applied only to the specific case at hand and did not require the department to revise its interpretation.

> "Nothing in the legislative history of the FERPA [Buckley Amendment] refers to a policy or intent to protect... student names or other personally identifiable information."
> — Russel Clark
> U. S. District Judge

The department announced in June that it will not appeal Judge Clark's ruling.

In May, two weeks before the Education Department announced its policy change,Senator Tim Wirth, a Democrat from Colorado, also sponsored legislation that would amend FERPA to permit the release of crime reports

Wirth noted that many colleges are required to release crime reports under state open-record laws while department regulations prohibit such action.

Goodman noted that if both Wirth's legislation and the Education Department's bill failed to become law, then students would "be no better off."

If either proposal does become law, then colleges will no longer face the threat of losing federal funding if they release crime reports naming individual students.

The original intent of the law was to prevent the release of inaccurate information in records, but many university officials claim that the law applies to the release of names in campus police and security records, and the U.S. Department of Education jumped into the fray on their side.

Homecoming committee plans week-long Mardi Gras

BY JENNIFER REEB
Bucknellian Staff Writer

This year's Homecoming celebration promises to be much more than a parade and football game.

According to Stacie Bershak '92, homecoming coordinator, the festivities will begin Monday night and continue through the weekend. "We have an exciting theme and a lot of new and innovative ideas that we hope will start a tradition," said Bershak.

The Homecoming Committee has designated Monday as float-building night from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m. During this time, the ten elected homecoming hosts and hostesses will be visiting each float-building site and distributing candy to the workers.

In keeping with this year's Mardi Gras theme, jazz music and free curly fries will be featured in the Bison on Tuesday night.

The Lewisburg community will participate in Wednesday night's block party, to be held from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Market St. The Chequered Past, a campus band, will play in the parking lot of Northern Central Bank.

Most Lewisburg merchants will remain open for business until 10 p.m. and W. L. Donehower's will rent roller-blades for half-price all evening.

The committee has planned a freshman lip sync contest to be held Thursday night on the freshman quad. The panel of hosts and hostesses will judge this event and award prizes to the top three acts.

The weekend kicks off Friday evening with an interdepartmental poetry, drama, and dance performance entitled "Toward a Better Life," in Tustin Gym. Fireworks will follow the traditional parade and football game on Saturday.

In an attempt to cater to all returning alumni and to undergraduate particpants, the committee sought to integrate both new and traditional events.

"There will definitely be something for everyone," said Bershak.

the consuming interest of the press and public. I think with proper handling, the judge can reduce the influence of the press so that it does not affect the fairness of the trial.

The BKN: Do you think that it is right for the government to withhold information by declaring that it is secret and vital to national security?

Hoeveler: If something has been classified as secret, then obviously you may have national security at stake.

The BKN: How would you define national security?

Hoeveler: I am not sure, but that is really for others than myself. That is for the political arm of the government to determine what is in the interest of national security. There could be an occasion that would arise where I would have to determine whether a piece of evidence even though classified as secret was essential to the defendant's case. If that happens as it did in the North case, the government may have to make a decision as to whether or not to produce it or suffer the consequences. That did happen in the North case, but has not happened in our case and I do not know if it will. You have got to respect the government's position on the question of whether or not something is secret, but that position must be balanced against the demands of fairness and a defendants right to a fair trial.

The BKN: What do you think should be done to ease the backlog of cases in the court today?

Hoeveler: We need more judges, more support (staff), probably new methods of dealing with overloads which methods the courts are always working towards perfecting. New methods are always being devised and computers are now in judges offices and they will help. There is constant study about the problems in the courts. The principal problem in the federal courts is the overload of criminal cases. That is hard to deal with, in view of our speedy trial act, because we have try so many of those. The sentencing guidelines have also compounded the problem, because more cases are going to trial than before due to the requirements of the guidelines.

The BKN: Is the litigious (suing) nature of our society a part of the problem?

Hoeveler: It is clearly part of the problem.

The BKN: Do you have any further advice for Bucknell students?

Hoeveler: In this day and time, it is very important that they prepare well. Our society has become very competitive. They should prepare well, but is also important to keep in mind the moral aspects of our society. One of our big problems is the changing morality of this society. We have lost touch with our fundamentals, with religion, and the basic morality which springs from those concepts. We have to get back to our traditions. Young people do not feel the same way about traditions both ethical and religious as we did when we were going through college. We must go back to basics and that will hopefully change the direction in which our society is moving at the present time; which is not a particularly good direction. Crime, drug use, corruption in the marketplace, and in public office is on the increase. All these subjects have got to be addressed by the students that are coming out of schools like Bucknell, which incidentally I think is a great university. The future is in the hands of the graduates. Hopefully those hands will guide us in the proper directions.

Murphy feels that "the reason that students cheat is not that they can't do the work. Towards the end of the semester, they're under a lot of stress and it's just a clinch at the last minute."

Freed felt that the referendum failed because "the students voting were raised in the [existing] system and didn't want to get hurt. A more effective route to an honor system would be to have the incoming students vote on it."

The problem is more than a simple matter of cheating and penalizing. It is the loss of trust between the professors and their students; a trust necessary to maintain a basic teaching relationship.

"Professors place a lot of trust with their students, and it really hurts when that trust is violated," said Freed. "As a professor, you don't want to behave like a warden at the state peritentiary, constantly peering over the students' shoulders. Of course, as a student, you don't want that either."

Cooper concluded, "I don't think that tinkering with the system in the absence of the firm support of everyone will make much of a difference. It won't solve the problem we're seeing."

"I think our policy as it stands is a very strong one. We really try to respect the rights of the person accused by giving him a hearing in front of a student elected committee," said Murphy. "The weakness in our system is not the penalties, but it is the cheating that never is detected."

"The system works for those who get caught. The ones I fear for are the students who get away with cheating here, and then go outside the Bucknell community and find themselves in much deeper trouble," said Cunningham.

Higher education in the 1990s: Bucknell braces for changes ahead

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Part two of three

As the college-age population in the U.S. continues to decline, colleges and universities everywhere must find new ways to keep their classrooms and dormitories full, as institutions compete for students from a shrinking pool.

At Bucknell the administration and the Board of Trustees have considered several policies designed to help the University weather this decline in the 18- to 24-year-old population. These actions, which range from examining tuition costs to attracting non-traditional students, together will help to map a strategy for Bucknell's future.

Barry Maxwell, vice president for administration, said the decline in the college-age population is expected to bottom out in 1994, as the numbers will begin to increase on the national level. However, that increase will not be seen in the Northeast, where Bucknell draws most of its students, Maxwell warned.

Instead, the University must position itself for a longer, more profound decline reflected in the long-term population shift from the aging industrial areas of the Northeast to growing communities in the South and West.

"There's no question the number of 18-year-olds is declining, and the percentage going to private schools as compared to public schools is also declining," explained President Gary Sojka. He also said the six northeastern states, from which Bucknell draws the majority of its students, have the most rapid rates of decline.

"We have to be looking down the road," Sojka said. The goal, he said, is not simply to attract enough paying customers. Instead, he explained that every action "is part of a broader plan to make Bucknell a broader educational experience, [so that] it continues to be attractive to a large number of students."

So far, Bucknell appears to have been successful in its plans. "Quite a number of private institutions are having financial difficulties," Maxwell said, "but Bucknell has been fortunate we have not found ourselves in that situation."

The increase in financial aid needs of Bucknell students has begun to strain the University's budget, according to Director of Financial Aid Ronald Laszewski.

Tuition increase curtailed

The lowest tuition increase in 28 years, mandated by the Board of Trustees because of the slumping economy, has made Bucknell more competitive while also raising concerns about the University's long-term stability.

The 4.5 percent increase sparked heated debate last year, as administrators sought a larger six percent increase to keep pace with rising inflation.

"Most people [now] believe it was probably the most prudent course of action," Maxwell said last week of the conservative tuition hike.

"We continue to remain prudent in how we manage our resources," he said, "and we continue to be very tuition-driven." Bucknell has felt the pinch, however, as academic departments were forced to cut their budgets for the current academic year.

"We are essentially in a cut-back year, said Sojka, who is among those skeptical about the wisdom of such spending cuts.

"In terms of value we compare extremely well" with our frame of reference schools, Sojka said, "but how long can we do that before the quality erodes? That worries me."

He said the additional increase requested by his administration "would have made a lot of difference [on campus], but I'm not sure how much more attractive it makes us to our consumers."

However, Sojka believes additional, unlimited tuition increases

Student arrested for activating fire alarm

BY MARK ABRAHAMSEN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A Bucknell student has been assessed three charges by the Lewisburg Police Department after activating a fire alarm on the first floor of West Vedder Hall near midnight on Friday, September 6th.

Jeffrey Mangel '94, of Syracuse, NY, has confessed to setting off the pull station while two other University students, Michael DeCastro '94 and Daniel Spector '94 were also present with Mangel at the time the incident occurred.

Mangel faces the following criminal charges: one first degree misdemeanor for activating a false alarm and two summaries for disorderly conduct and criminal mischief.

If found guilty of the misdemeanor, Mangel faces a maximum of five years in prison or a fine of $10,000.

In response to the incident, Mangel stated, "I thought I was doing the right thing by turning myself in, but I think Bucknell is just trying to make an example of me."

According to Mangel's testimony, he was checking the alarm to see if there were ink in it when suddenly the station was activated, thus making the incident an accidental occurrence.

Public Safety responded to the call, and the responding officer was approached by a Vedder resident. The freshman subsequently identified the three students, who were walking toward Harris Hall. After the witness agreed to make a positive identification of the perpetrators and an accompanying statement, the officer requested that the witness would stay by the security vehicle while he sought the alleged perpetrators. Upon the officer's return, the witness had left the scene.

The ensuing investigation was conducted by the Office of Residential Life and the Department of Public Safety. Dean of Students John Dunlop and/or the Committee of Student Conduct will handle the internal charges through the University.

A decision has been made by the Lewisburg Police Department to charge only Mangel.

This incident has been representative of a continual problem in the freshmen halls, as Public Safety has been summoned on numerous occasions for false alarms.

Vince DeCerchio, director of public safety, noted, "These actions [of pulling fire alarms] are an area in which we do not intend to compromise because it is a very serious issue. People in the University will have to realize that.

"Last year we had a really bad problem with false fire alarms, and that seems to be continuing this semester," DeCerchio continued. "Pulling an alarm is considered a very, very serious act and a dangerous one. We will prosecute."

may be impossible. "We are acutely aware how much of a struggle it is for parents to send their children to Bucknell," he said. "It will be difficult to off-load increasing costs to the consumer."

Concern over financial aid

Any tuition increase places additional demands on student financial aid, one of the University's most costly and most delicately balanced expenses.

Over the past few years "the number of students who apply and qualify for financial aid has steadily increased," according to Ronald Laszewski, director of financial aid. He said at least 60 percent of undergraduates receive aid from some source, and around one third receive scholarships or grants directly from the University, for a total of $17 million.

"In the minds of many," he said, "Bucknell has become financially reasonable to a larger number of students."

Laszewski said "we've made a real commitment the last few years" to meet the needs of all students, "and we've really had to use general operating revenue. We're doing a lot ourselves, and its straining the resources of Bucknell to do that."

"The increasing allocation to financial aid continues to be a concern," said Maxwell, who noted that financial aid has been the most rapidly rising segment of the University budget.

"It causes us concern," Maxwell continued, "but we will continue to make a major commitment."

Admissions efforts increase

With the population decline in the Northeast and Bucknell's continuing efforts to increase student diversity, the office of admissions has stepped up its efforts to draw from outside of the Northeast.

"We have traditionally tried to reach out geographically," said Richard Skelton, dean of enrollment planning. "We have had moderate success in some areas, such as the far West and Midwest, but in the South and Southwest we have not gotten the response we had hoped for."

Skelton said the number of high school visits by admissions counselors is increasing, along with the number of interviews conducted by Bucknell alumni. The University is also developing a new video for use by high school guidance departments; filming is scheduled for next month.

"Anyone who is willing to play a pat hand and not be aggressive...is not wise," Skelton said, while describing the mood on the admissions front as one of "optimism coupled with increased activity."

"Inquiries are up and interviews are up," he said. "I think we have a lot going for us."

Seeking non-traditional students

The University is also planning for the future by increasing efforts to attract non-traditional students, people past the usual college age who often have children.

The largest effort in this area has been the Student Transfer Enrichment Program (STEP) program, which gives non-traditional students from economically disadvantaged areas of Philadelphia a chance to study at Bucknell.

The two-year old program, financed through a Ford Foundation grant, has brought 25 Community College of Philadelphia students to a special summer session at Bucknell; ten of those students transferred to Bucknell the following February. This summer 20 more students studied at Bucknell; those students will be eligible to transfer next semester.

These students are a small segment of the growing number of non-traditional students on campus.

Kathy Pino '94, a transfer student from the STEP program, discovered "there are a lot more of us [non-traditional students] than I thought at first."

Pino and other STEP members are in the process of forming a Non-traditional Students Organization, which will foster community among the students, work with administrators to address their special needs, and educate the rest of the campus. She also believes the group may encourage additional non-traditional students to come to Bucknell by offering advocacy and community support.

Debate concerning the construction of an incinerator by USPCI heated up as USPCI appealed the recent Department of Environmental Recources rejection of their plan to build a $100 million facility in nearby Gregg Township.

In the appeal, USPCI accuses the DER of "unreasonable, arbitrarily, capriciously, and unlawfully rejecting" USPCI's Phase I application according to an article appearing in the September 26th edition of the Lewisburg Daily Journal.

USPCI and the DER continue to debate over the reclassification of soils in the proposed incinerator site. USPCI claims that it was unaware that the Soil and Conservation Service had updated the soil zoning while USPCI was finalizing their application.

Currently, 20 acres of of the proposed incinerator site are zoned as Class I agricultural land. "DER's exclusionary criteria specifically prohibit construction of a hazardous waste facility on such property," said DER Hazardous Waste Siting Team Leader Karl Scheaffer.

USPCI is also arguing that the incinerator is only one part of their development plan, and that "at least they could have approved the other portions and given USPCI time to modify the rest," according to the Lewisburg Journal

USPCI is concerned about this rejection because it is facing a deadline to have a Phase I application approved in Pennsylvania by July 1992.

Honor rule found controversial

The University of Virginia has traditionally expelled those students violating the honor system, but students have begun to protest against what they feel is an unfair system, biased against blacks and athletes.

The UVA's honor system is student-run, and this student Honor Committee will gather in three campus-wide meetings this month to consider the changes. James Lyons, former dean of the student affairs at Stanford University, was the principal consultant to the report, recommending that the committee adopt a more flexible honor system.

In the following weeks, the Honor Committee will discuss each of the report's recommendations, and will then vote on proposals regarding the implementation of those recommendations.

Cultural diversity classes mandatory

Courses in cultural diversity will soon be required for students attending Bowling Green State University in Ohio. This new decision has been made due to the increasing need for promotion of cultural awareness.

The students at BGSU are already required to take eight courses from general deucation disciplines, and beginning with the year's first-year students, one of those required courses must be in cultural diversity.

Approved last October by the University's Faculty Senate, the requirement will be implemented along with the conduction of an evaluative survey of 600 students.

Gays Rights Advocates disruptive

Student Gay Rights Advocates disrupted the September 6th meeting of the University of Wisconsin board of Regents in a protest against the Reserve Officers Training Corps by playing Twister, spraying Silly String, and shooting confetti.

The Ten Percent Society, a student lesbian, gay, and bisexual organization, claim to have protested to convince the Board to end the school's ROTC program, which they claim is discriminatory.

The UW-Madison ROTC program follows the Department of Defese policy which prohibits homosexuals from holding scholarships or becoming commissioned officers.

The Regents have previously voted against terminating the ROTC program, and decided to lobby at the national level for reforms in the military's policies toward gays and lesbians; consequently, the demonstrators say the goal of the protest was to place the ROTC issue back on the agenda.

District court rules against CUNY

A U.S. District judge ruled on September 4th that a City College professor, Michael Levin, had his constituational rights violated when the school investigated him for his assertions that blacks are less intelligent than whites.

The philosophy professor, rules the court, cannot be censured for his views that blacks are held back in society by their inferior intelligence rather than by discrimination.

RIT president resigns

The president of the Rochester Institute of Technology announced his retirement last week, due to the criticism he received for taking a sabbatical at the Central Intelligence Agency.

President M. Richard Rose has been president of RIT for 12 years, and says he has been planning to retire long before the institute's ties with the CIA sparked controversy.

He has been informally accused of helping the CIA gain undue influence over the academic programs at Rochester.

President Rose says he was "confident" that the impending panel would find that he had not compromised RIT's academic integrity.

Tom Petty remains hot in third decade

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

How does Tom Petty do it? He has reworked the same chords and harmonies countless times over. His singing would be better described as a nasal whine. Let's not forget his unlikely looks, which rank right up there with rock's ugliest. These tures the precise interplay between music and lyrics that has become Petty's trademark. The second single and title track, "Into the Great Wide Open," is presently doing very well on the charts. Its humorous examination of a wanna-be rock star is in keeping with previous social criticisms like those heard in Full Moon Fever. Other promising tracks include the inspired "Kings Highway" and the peace pushing the whole that is Tom Petty. In the past ten years plus, few artists have achieved across-the-board acceptance like he has. In fact, it seems as though the aforementioned shortcomings only add to the lustre of this magical songwriter. His new album, Into the Great Wide Open, only serves to strengthen his position as one of rock's most durable mainstays.

Hot on the heels of his most successful album, Full Moon Fever, Petty has rejoined his long-time backing band, the Heartbreakers, whom he worked without the last time around. The product of their revitalized union, with the aid of Jeff Lynne and Roger McGuin, is a carefully crafted album that bears a slightly different tone than Full Moon Fever. Fortunately, the quality of the music has been preserved.

The first single, "Learning to Fly," is one of those Petty classics that flows right through you. It feapeculiar insight and flare that have become recognizable in Petty's music.

What is so great about Petty is that none of his songs are truly bad. It is a realistic ambition to listen to a Tom Petty album from start to finish and enjoy all that you hear. His listenability is his greatest asset and it continues with Into the Great Wide Open. Only one track, "All the Wrong Reasons," sounds suspiciously like an old song, in this case the hit "Free Falling." For the most part, however, Petty comes out sounding not only consistent, but remarkably non-repetitive for an artist who has recorded such a large amount of material.

As a listener, you will appreciate the music and messages that appear in Into Great Wide Open. Tom Petty remains one of the few artists capable of breaking the monotony of pop culture and yet fitting into it at the same time.

Star Trek zooms ahead at warp speed

BY CHRIS BIRD

During the mid-70's, there had been several plans to bring Star Trek back as a new series. Scripts were written and the series was cast, until it was realized that there were no networks interested in taking a chance on the follow-up. However, the next best thing was done—Paramount made a movie. Star Trek—The Motion Picture featured the original crew, with the additions of Stephen Collins as Commander Willard Decker (son of Commodore Matt Decker, who sacrificed his life in the episode "The Doomsday Machine") and Persis Khambatta as Lieutenant Illia, a female Deltan. The Enterprise is sent out to stop a destructive entity that is approaching Earth. The movie did well at the box office, but many fans found it laborious.

Four more movies have been released since 1980, each with the "original seven:" Kirk, Spock, McCoy, Scotty, Uhura, Sulu, and Chekov. Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan introduced us to Kirk's son (Merritt Butrick, who died of AIDS 3 years ago), brought back Ricardo Montalban as Khan, and marked the death of Spock.

In Star Trek III: The Search for Spock, the crew is on a personal mission to bring Spock's resurrected body from the planet Genesis and return to him his mind, which he transferred to Dr. McCoy just moments before his death. Kirk's son is murdered by the Klingons and he is forced to destroy the Enterprise in a ditch effort to save the crew.

The best of the motion picture adventures, Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home has the crew going back in time to the year 1986 in order to bring two, now extinct sperm whales into the future. They are the only creatures capable of communicating with a probe that is destroying Earth (the novel Probe, which is the sequel to Trek IV, will be released in January). The movie offered both a humorous and critical look at our society and issued a warning against the annihilation of endangered species.

© 1991 Paramount Pictures, Inc.

In Star Trek V: The Final Frontier, Kirk and the crew meet Spock's brother Sybok (Laurence Luckinbill), a Vulcan with emotions who is on a quest to meet God.

The crew of the Enterprise has done more than just Star Trek. The third and fourth installments of the Star Trek saga were directed by Mr. Spock himself, Leonard Nimoy, who also directed Three Men and a Baby and the critically acclaimed film The Music Box. William Shatner directed Star Trek V: The Final Frontier, has done the TV series T. J. Hooker and Rescue 911, and is now a best selling author with the books Tekwar and Teklords. Nichelle Nichols has gone on to help NASA recruit women and minorities for the space program. Walter Koenig has also done some writing and toured across the country with Trek co-star Mark Lenard (Spock's father Sarek) doing a play about a conversation between an older Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn.

In 1986, there was discussion of a new series, featuring a new cast and a revamped Enterprise. Fans were outraged that the writers would even try to replace the old crew. Roddenberry worked closely with the new producers, and the result was Star Trek: The Next Generation. Premiering in September 1987, the show featured a new Enterprise and crew that existed 83 years after the original mission.

The new crew is made up of Captain Jean-Luc Picard (Patrick Stewart), a Frenchman, Commander William "Number One" Riker (Jonathan Frakes), Chief Medical Officer Beverly Crusher (Gates McFadden), Lt. Com. Data (Brent Spiner), android, Chief Engineer Geordi LaForge (LeVar Burton), Counselor Deanna Troi (Marina Sirtis)—a Betazoid who can read people's emotions, and Lt. Worf (Michael Dorn), a Klingon whose alien race was the sworn enemy of the original crew and still a volatile force in the new series.

The show has done extraordinarily well, garnering numerous Emmys and having the highest ratings for any hour-long show in syndication. The cast and crew of the new show celebrated its 100th episode with the finale of the fourth season. As the crew blasts off for its fifth season, there is a special surprise in store. Leonard Nimoy has agreed to portray Spock for a two-parter to be shown during November. Spock's father, played by Mark Lenard, will also return.

There have been many rumors floating around about the future of Star Trek after the sixth motion picture is released. At a recent convention in Buffalo, Marina Sirtis (Counselor Deanna Troi of The Next Generation) said that Star Trek VI will be the final movie with the original crew. Paramount Studios has set aside enough money in their budget for seasons five and six of The Next Generation, at which point they may cancel it, reason: each one hour show costs around $1.3 million to make. After the sixth season, the crew of the new Enterprise may begin big screen adventures.

Anderson to open Weis Center season

BY LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

"The best thing about 'performance art' is that it's so ambiguous. It includes just about anything you might want to do," said Laurie Anderson, speaking on the art that she virtually invented. Her multimedia performance, "Voices from the Beyond," will open the Weis Center season on October 5 at 8:30 p.m.

First presented at the Museum of Modern Art in New York in January 1991, "Voices from the Beyond" is a politically provocative blend of theatre, music, visual art, comedy, and hi-tech wizardry.

"Her innovative combinations of pointed anecdotes, striking imagery, original music, inventive electronics, and singular stage persona have made her one of those rare artists respected and loved by audiences as mixed as her media," said William Boswell, director of cultural events.

Called "disturbing" and "politically pointed" by The New York Times, "Voices from the Beyond" will include Anderson's commentary on censorship in art, women in America, and the Persian Gulf War.

Though her performance is sure to be unique, Anderson herself does not consider her work to be avant-garde. "I'm just a storyteller, the oldest profession of all," she explains.

Anderson is perhaps best known for her epic "United States I-IV," a seven-hour multi-media event that she described as a "big performance portrait of the country." She also attracted international attention when her song "O Superman" reached number two on England's pop music charts in 1980.

"Anderson is an engaging and influential front-runner in the contemporary art scene," said Boswell. "She is one of the best, and we are lucky to have her performing at the Weis Center."

Tickets are still available and may be purchased at the Weis Center box office this week or at the door.

Academic dishonesty and/or an honor code

"I pledge my honor that I neither gave nor received any assistance on this exam."

Will such words become commonplace at Bucknell? They will if Assistant Professor of History Richard Waller has his way. Waller proposed such an honor code to the Bucknell Student Government in remarks made as he was elected to serve on the Board of Review on Academic Responsibility — the campus body primarily charged with adjudicating cases of academic dishonesty.

The debate on implementing an honor code at Bucknell is as old as cheating itself. An honor code for students was last discussed seriously in 1987 when a campus-wide referendum caused the proposal to be dropped. The idea has been bantered around yearly since then, and a serious proposal has once again surfaced.

A traditional code of academic responsibility includes two significant clauses: (1) students will not cheat, and (2) students will report any fellow student they suspect of cheating. If such a code is enacted at Bucknell, we'd like to add clause (3): professors will sign a similar code pledging that they too will report any student they suspect of academic dishonesty. This final clause is essential if we are to avoid the situation at the University of Virginia. There their honor code promises immediate, unconditional expulsion for any case of academic dishonesty, however insignificant. Thus, many professors reportedly ignore cases of cheating to save their students from being expelled.

In this case, our campus must consider one key question: What is the significance of implementing an honor code? We believe a code would serve primarily as an excuse for the enaction of more stringent penalties against students convicted of intentional academic dishonesty. Why not just enact those penalties now, and clarify the existing system at the same time? The element of an honor code need not be introduced.

Indeed, more important is a revamping of the existing system for dealing with academic dishonesty. The present Board of Review on Academic Responsibility, to which Professor Waller was just elected, is a well-designed group whose talents are called upon far too infrequently. We recommend that the board meet monthly, or more often if necessary, to hear each and every case of academic dishonesty brought against a student (the current system allows an academic dean to adjudicate cases instead of the full board).

Further, we strongly urge the board to make convictions on charges of intentional academic dishonesty part of a student's permanent record. The dealings of the board are far too secretive as it is. The serious offense of plagiarizing another's work is certainly more serious than the disciplinary charges for misbehavior which are already added to a student's permanent record.

In issues like this one, consistency is critically important. We recommend a University-wide education program on academic responsibility, much like the current "Let's Say It Up Front" program on behavioral expectations. Then, once all students and faculty know the rules, we must play by them. Faculty should be required to forward any and all suspected cases of academic dishonesty to the deans of their respective colleges. When members of the faculty deal with cases of cheating individually and independently of official procedure, all students are done a disservice.

With clearly defined expectations, consistent enforcement, stringent penalties, and permanent repercussions, students who cheat will be not only dishonorable, but stupid as well.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Panhel responds to rush controversy

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing on behalf of the Panhellenic Council in response to Professor Abowitz's article, Does Bucknell cultivate respect for diverse individuals and cultures? The purpose of this letter is two-fold. I want to apologize for what has been perceived as a lack of concern and disregard for diversity. I would also like to explain the situation which Panhel faced this particular year. After speaking with Professor Abowitz I believe that both Panhel and Hillel have learned how to better communicate and avoid such conflicts in the future.

First of all the Panhellenic Council wishes to apologize to the sisters who were unable to attend the voting sessions which followed Tuesday's party due to Yom kippur. It was an unfortunate compromise which the Council felt needed to be made in order to expedite the informal rush period. Secondly, we would like to extend our apology for the original rush schedule which conflicted with Rosh Hashanah. The Panhellenic Council had assumed that the approval of the Committee on Complementary Activities (CCA) and the Council on Greek Life (COGL) would have brought such conflicts to our attention. Thus the lack of awareness and education on the campus has unfortunately left misconceptions and ignorance with many organizations. Finally, the original rush schedule was cancelled due to an insufficient number of registered women. The Panhellenic Council, as well as each sorority, were involved in drafting an informal rush procedure. This proposal is the one which we, the Panhellenic Council and all eight of the sororities thought was the best option. Unfortunately, the Jewish sisters felt a conflict of interest. I have started to work this semester with Professor Abowitz to help avoid conflict next year.

"Thus the lack of awareness and education on the campus has unfortunately left misconceptions and ignorance with many organizations."

In order to explain the difficulties faced, it is helpful to understand that the Panhellenic leadership is not responsible for most decision-making involving the sororities. Any changes or processes involving the sororities must be taken back to each chapter, voted upon, and then brought for a vote before Panhel. A two-thirds vote is needed to pass any proposal. The National Panhellenic Council is concerned with the rushee first and foremost. When rush was cancelled, the rushees were informed that they would need to wait at least another week. To delay all the rushees for another week for a holiday which affected only a few would have been unfair and disheartening to the majority of the rushees. After personal conversations with the rushees it was concluded that the holiday only affected two women, who did not feel that splitting parties would be difficult. Neither of them mentioned missing the ceremonial meal at 5:00 as being a conflict so we were not made aware of the meal.

Along with the two-thirds approval needed to institute this informal rush, the sorority presidents, representatives and the Panhellenic executive board needed to insure that the rushees affected by the holiday would be handled compassionately and fairly. This was done through the Rho Chi (rush Counselor assigned to each rushing woman.) The Rho Chis met with their women and stressed the importance of telling the Rho Chi if there was any conflict. These women would be excused, allowed to write letters or to split parties similar to the way sports, classes and occasionally holidays or religious services have been handled in the past. This system worked and the rushees affected by the holiday told their Rho Chi how they wanted to handle it. Each sorority president was responsible for insuring that their own chapter handled these special cases with care.

The council was forced to make many last-minute decisions. Our mistake was in not contacting Hillel about the ceremonies occurring before the official holiday. We believed that we had not overlapped the holiday as far as the rushee was concerned. Due to the time constraints and our concern for protecting and expediting the rushee's experience we felt there was no better communication and understanding between the groups. This communication began during the drafting period and will continue with Professor Abowitz's assistance for next year. The Panhellenic Council is always open and willing to discuss the actions and policies we follow to anyone who is confused, misled or simply curious.

IVCF offers apologies

TO THE EDITOR:

For the past several weeks, we have heard bits and pieces of rumor, assumption, and reaction toward the Bible handout/book table sponsored by InterVarsity Christian Fellowship and the Gideons. After several of us participated in what we consider to be a very positive meeting with several Hillel members and their advisor, Professor Deborah Abowitz, we wanted to clarify what actually happened on September 9, to state what our intentions were, and in so doing, to communicate our perspective as followers of Christ.

Some members of Hillel apparently believed that September 9 (Rosh Hashanah) may have been deliberately chosen by InterVarsity as the day to have the Bible handout. The fact is, the Bible handout was originally scheduled for Wednesday, September 4. The date was changed at the suggestion of Bucknell administrators, who felt that the excessive L.C. traffic at that time would pose a problem. At this point in time, neither InterVarsity nor the Bucknell administration recognized that September 9 was Rosh Hashanah.

Neither InterVarsity members nor Gideon representatives handed out any sort of booklet to anyone; this includes members of the Jewish community. A booklet with the Star of David on it, written by a Jewish Christian, which explains Christ's claims from a Jewish perspective, was available along with at least six other booklets at our book table in the Langone Center. These booklets have been available at our book tables for the last several years, as they are on most college campuses.

The library incident as recorded in The Bucknellian two weeks ago in actuality happened as follows: One of two students offered the tour participants a Bible as the tour went into the library. A third student joined the first two outside the library and consequently, not realizing that the tour participants had already been offered a Bible, offered them a Bible upon their exit from the library.

The Bible handout day was intended to give all students an opportunity to own a Bible. We always strive to share our belief in Christ in a sensitive way which avoids personal grief and anger. We were sorry to realize that some people's perceptions of our actions were so different from our intentions. We in no way wanted to make Jews or anyone else feel unwelcome at Bucknell nor to personally offend them.

As the discussion progressed at our recent meeting with Hillel, we better understood the feelings, difficulties, and hurts of Jewish members of the Bucknell community. We express our regret and sympathy to those Jews and others who may have been unintentionally hurt by our actions on September 9.

Let's stop harrassing each other

BY MELISSA SKELTON

Each time I read a "Skena's Prescription" or an "On My Mind" or a news article about a faculty motion to remove some student organization, I really have to wonder when "checks and balances" became "uninformed opinion forum."

This campus has a terrible disease. I would call it the "I-know-better-than-you-how-to-do-your-job" syndrome. We are all anxious to have and proclaim our opinions about every topic on the campus, and I admit, I am the first one to ask questions and complain about something I don't understand. But that's the key: Ask questions first, complain later. Never have I witnessed such an overabundance of "let me tell you what would be better."

" ...Let's go to the real root of the problem and discourage irresponsibility... "

Students are especially guilty of it. Granted, I have a particular bias against Bucknell-bashing. I have been at Bucknell virtually all of my twenty years because I live in Lewisburg, and am the daughter of two Bucknell alumni, one of whom is a Bucknell administrator. However, because of this overwhelming Bucknellness in my life, I have also been able to meet most of the administrators, know many of the faculty outside of class, and have met students and alumni all my life. There are problems with the University and its inner workings; there always have been. However, not all of us are qualified to criticize each area of deficiency. Although every department needs a check on its operation, that should not mean open season for "let's get each other."

Dave Skena and Mark Abrahamsen seem to think the admissions office doesn't do its job very well. I think Mr. Abrahamsen's concerns were well addressed last week, and I would invite Mr. Skena to read Bob Ritter's series of articles about enrollment—you might find it enlightening, Dave. I would also invite other authors who are skeptical about how a particular department does its job to go to that department and ask questions. Find out about the programs and the people there. Sign on to help their efforts; most of those programs depend on student volunteers and I think you would be hard-pressed to find a department that doesn't welcome a little volunteer help. Try to work with the areas where you find deficiencies. Then, if after being involved and asking all the right questions you are still dissatisfied, by all means, write a newspaper column and open it up to public review.

To be fair, this is not a student-only disease. I think we all remember George Jenks' motions to remove the Greeks and the ROTC program. As a student, many years ago, Mr. Jenks' was directly involved with those organizations. In recent years as a faculty member, however, I wonder why he felt it necessary to recommend their abolition. Although many faculty members notice problems in their classes that involve students in Greek organizations, sports teams, or other activities, I am curious to know why some faculty members assume that all students in those organizations are therefore hurt by them. I have watched plenty of students skip class, turn in late work, and fall asleep in class who are not Greek or on an athletic team. Pressure on this campus can be found in every student organization, every class, and within the students themselves that cause problematic behavior, despondency, and conflict. Let's not lay all the blame on the organizations; let's go to the real root of the problem and discourage irresponsibility, encourage support systems, and target prejudices that can be turned into open-mindedness. The departments of student and residential life are doing a great job in those areas.

Most importantly, let's stop harassing each other. We accomplish very little when we have to take time out to respond to unfounded accusations and uninformed complaints, and when we spend valuable energy doing the complaining instead of volunteering to make changes. Let's keep in mind that whether students or staff, we all have busy schedules, limited budgets, and a lot of work to do in what seems like a very short time. We're all adults here, and educated ones at that. There is no reason for spouting off the top of our heads without fully investigating the problem first. There is a need for a system of "checks and balances" but not of "seek and destroy."

To the faculty and administrators: appreciate what the students are saying to you; they experience firsthand the consequences of your decisions, and more often than not, under the sarcasm lies a legitimate concern. And to the students, take time to really look around you—you'll never have it this good again.

On my mind...

As the University's Board of Review on Academic Responsibility ponders what new measures to take (if any) with students who are caught cheating, plagiarizing, and the like, I asked myself why people cheat. Is it because they are simply morally bankrupt individuals, or is the pressure to perform at Bucknell just to great to handle? Are students too competitive for their own good? A simple solution was difficult to find.

I was on the third floor in the library a few days ago, when a student came in and wheezed under his breath, "Welcome to Cutthroat Central." Amused, I looked around the room to see if anyone had shot him a nasty glare. But no, people kept on studying as if he wasn't there.

The last time I heard the word "cutthroat" (or simply "throat") with any regularity was two years ago as a freshman. Back then it seemed that those who did "books" in the Bison had some sort of attitude problem, were anti-social, or throats. Apparently the term has stuck around.

It appears to me that at Bucknell there are three basic types of students. There are those who: (A) study by themselves in a quiet atmosphere; (B) those that cram with friends the night before an exam; and (C) those who don't study and simply do not care.

You can usually find the first group in a room designated by the words THIS IS A QUIET STUDY AREA. PLEASE RESPECT THE RIGHT OF OTHERS TO STUDY. DISTURBERS WILL BE ASKED TO LEAVE. There are a few hard-core individuals in this group. But the vast majority of Bucknell students are in the second group and can be found in the Bison having a two-hour lunch. The third—well, who knows?

"So characterizing Bucknell as cutthroat remains an individual decision, but I'm under the impression that competition is healthy for students..."

Many criticize Bucknell for being a cutthroat school. I find that a fine line has developed between being a throat and simply working competitively. The former tries to dominate others while the latter consistently puts forth a strong individual effort, without paranoia that John Smith or Mary Jones might be blowing the curve. Everyone knows the stereotypes here: engineers are fierce, management majors are too competitive, and liberal arts students do all their assignments as community work. So characterizing Bucknell wholly as cutthroat remains an individual decision, but I'm under the impression that competition is healthy for students—if college life is supposed to prepare us for the real world, then a Darwinian notion such as "survival of the fittest" is a beneficial addition to a student's mind-set.

As it stands now, I see too many guys not busting their tails here because they know they can receive a decent entry-level job after graduation working for a corporation where mom or dad is a senior vice president. I also pass by too many women who are only determined to earn their "MRS." degree and relocate in Long Island or Boca Raton.

The fact of the matter is that the U. S. provides a fiercely competitive society. Even Cheers' Norm Peterson has mentioned, "It's a dog-eat-dog world out there, and I'm wearing milk-bone underwear." It would be disappointing to see Bucknell graduates turn into the Norms of the world.

It's safe to assume that every generation's collective wish is to have their kids do better than they did—to make society better, to be more successful, etc. It's vital that the college-aged students continue to strive to become better than their parents; studies have indicated that our generation will become the first in our nation's history that is expected to be less successful than our predecessors.

Doesn't that wake anyone up—or at least pull them away from watching Days of Our Lives every afternoon? Maybe, maybe not. Either way, the complacent attitude shown on campus by a significant number of students is sickening. It appears that the goal is to do just enough to get by, rather than be willing to face challenges with optimism and to excel.

And while we're thinking about our own motivational desires, what philosophy are we going to pass along to the next generation after us? Will our children look to us as bums or role models?

Citizenship in the Academy

Part Two of Three

BY MATTHEW D. FRENCH

The Academy was born of Society. Consequently, and not surprisingly, the hierarchy of the Academy mirrors that of Society. The elites, the intellectuals, and the masses are all represented on America's campuses. Unfortunately, the "defactionalization" of America's campuses, in order to create a "kinder, gentler" academia, is further hindered by the fact that the power structure on the American campus invites conflict. It is part of its very nature. Or is it?

The elites on America's campus are policy makers, and like most policy makers, they appear to formulate policy which serves them best. Many times it seems as if the "Academy" is being used as a shield; a defense against accusations of policy reflecting the "will of the few" instead of the "interests of the many." Although policy is seemingly not best for you individually, it is claimed to be best for the Academy. What the myopic administrators sometimes fail to realize is that the Academy is made up of individuals, and those individuals are being misunderstood, if not ignored.

"Power corrupts, and absolute power..." makes for an administration which is insensitive to the needs of a faculty which is waging a war each day and a student body which feels compelled to cut their colleagues' throats at any opportunity.

The power structure on American campuses is top-heavy and distant. It speaks a different language than the masses. It speaks in tongues of liability and lawsuits, monetary well-being and petty politics. It is so removed from the ideals on which the Academy should function, that when the Academy begins to cease functioning, the elites will not know soon enough to stop it.

In contrast to the power elite, there are the masses of students who feel insecure, violated, lied to, and manipulated because the Academy of Learning has become a Den of Iniquity. What are Higher Education's priorities? Is it simply to prepare for "out there", or is it to expose and challenge? The masses must resist being railroaded through the last haven of thought and intellectual discourse they are likely to encounter. "Question authority" is not a battlecry for chaos, instead it is a plea for renewed curiosity. A member of the masses is a watchdog for his kind.

In order to learn, one must be allowed to learn, and in order to be allowed to learn, the masses must be allowed to fail, since failure is a inevitable step in the learning process. If the elites allow us, will we dare to fail, knowing our colleagues will be there to help us up? Or will the Power Elite scare us into a vortex of mediocrity? The insatiable thirst for knowledge seems to have been quenched in many a student. Can this be true?

And what of the intellectuals, those who guide yet have no guidance; those who crave power yet have none. They are in "power purgatory;" absolute power over the future of the masses, yet unable to change policy to affect their own. They play a game by someone else's rules, yearning to mold and create something other than thoughts. They are mistreated by the masses, ignored by the elites. But they are the foundation of the Academy, and without them, the Academy would be no more, and the elites would be Kings of Nothing, Lords over empty buildings and deserted ideals.

So interdependence, by rule of thumb, should dominate our thinking. Hang together or hang separately takes on new meaning when the Academy is at stake. Do not use one another in order to further your own ends at the expense of others in your situation.

Moreover, do not use those of a higher or lower status if it suits you, for the good of the Academy should be your priority, for through the prosperity of the Academy shall you prosper.

The Academy has a vital role in Society, and there is much more at stake here than the picayune squabbles between those who should be exploring together. As for the environment of exploration? The policy is in the hands of the elites; pray the mission of the Academy outweighs all else.

The masses, however, are the most mercurial of the variables in the Academic equation. On their shoulders rests the responsibility for harnessing the power that is within the Academy and distilling it so that the Academy can fulfill its vital responsibility to the Society at large.

The Craft Shop offers inexpensive candle, tie-dye, beaded jewelry, and cooking courses.

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Chicagoans find funky knitted mittens and their favorite batik shirts at The Laughing Iguana. In Philadelphia, lovers of multi-colored, incensed candles and tie-dyes return regularly to Critters. The Village in New York City is filled with successful shops specializing in clothing and decorations made by local artists. Travelling to Central Pennsylvania, one can discover pottery, tie-dyes, beaded jewelry, and candles in the basement of Hunt Hall at the Craft Shop. The best part about this shop is that you can design and make all of your favorite things inexpensively.

In 1972, Molly Ross was asked to start a Craft Program at Bucknell. It was the first year of the Jan-Plan, so with the help of others, Ross developed a weaving class for the January students. In the fall, the actual shop was opened. Clay working, ceramics, jewelry, leatherworking, and silk-screening were offered and received an enthusiastic following.

As the decade proceeded, macrame and basketry were added upon request. "In the '70's, it was amazing," says Ross. "Jan-Plans were so large; it was incredible."

Ross sees the '90's as a time of "renewed interest." Last fall, the Craft Shop moved from the LC to Hunt Hall and yet classes remained full. "Students sought us out," explains Ross. Today, cooking classes, tie-dying, and jewelry-making are very popular. Says Ross, "It might be a full cycle."

Ross feels that the reason the Craft Shop has remained on campus for over 20 years is because it has changed along with the interest of the students. When Ross started the program, it was one of the first college-level craft shops in the country. A few years later, Penn State and Gettysburg started craft programs. Ross is proud when she says, "They looked at ours before they started theirs." Her biggest piece of advice was to initiate classes based upon students' requests.

Penn State and Gettysburg are not the only ones who have benefitted from the philosophies of the shop's successful programs. Ross has organized the shop well enough to send its brochures to over 15 counties in northeastern Pennsylvania. A Youth Program was also initiated last fall. Two classes instead of one had to be offered because of the large number of children who signed up to participate.

At the Craft Shop, tee-shirts used for batiking, tie-dying, and hand-painting can be purchased at the shop for $2.75. On average, a small candle costs $1 to make. All colors of wax are available and can be formed in circles, stars, or hexagons. A variety of scents from cranberry to pine to peach can be added to the wax.

A set of beaded earrings can be made for as little as $2.50. Surgical steel, sterling silver, and gold-plated posts and clasps, as well as strings of leather for necklaces, are available. Practice clay for freeforming or use on the Craft Shop's four pottery wheels is free. Wood stains, paints, and markers are also there for anyone to use.

Ross stresses that any student may use the room whenever it is open (Monday through Thursday, 11 a.m.–5 p.m., and 7 p.m.–10 p.m.; Friday, 1 p.m.–5p.m.). While some students have taken their Craft Shop skills and gone on to be professional painters and makers of windchimes and baskets, for most students the Craft Shop serves as a great chance to learn a new art or cooking technique, or to design their own version of what they see in their favorite shops.

For those just joining the revival of the arts and crafts movement, free classes on the basics are being offered. The schedule for the "Make It and Take It" class is as follows:

Classes are on Tues. at 3:30 p.m.
Clay— Oct. 8
Tie-dye— Oct. 22
Batik— Oct. 29
Jewelry— Nov. 5
Weaving— Nov. 12
Stained Glass— Nov. 19
Candlemaking— Dec. 3

Call the Craft Shop at 523–5322 to sign up for classes.

BY WAYNE FERBERT

The closest "big city" to Bucknell is... Philadelphia? Wrong! Pittsburgh? Even Worse!! It's Baltimore!! The beautiful trees of Towson State are a mere two hours and fifteen minutes due south of Lewisburg. Baltimore's rejuvenated Inner Harbor is only 25 more minutes south of Towson. The city of Baltimore offers everything that any "BIG city" offers—the history, the atmosphere, the entertainment, the bars, the schools, the shops, the food, the bars, the Orioles, the shows, the symphony, the concerts, the bars, and more!

Baltimore's Inner Harbor is celebrating its 11th anniversary as a newly renovated tourist attraction. The Inner Harbor is easily the most popular attraction to out-of-towners in Baltimore and for good reason. The Harbor offers a shopping bonanza with its two Inner Harbor Pavilions coupled with the Gallery Mall.

The Light Street Pavilion offers mostly food, including Baltimore's famous crabs. Phillips's Carry-Out offers steamed crabs, crab cakes, soft-shelled crabs, fish stuffed with crabs, crab soup, and... well I think you get the picture! To visit Baltimore and not try its famous crabs is a travesty, but the pavilion offers other delights if Baltimore's crusty crustacean is not to your liking. Italian food, Polish food, tasty chocolates, and plenty of ice cream dominate the rest of the Pavilion, including The American Cafe and for the gentlemen, a Hooters Bar & Grill.

The Pratt Street Pavilion offers a plethora of clothing shops and novelty stores. One can shop for almost everything in this Pavilion including jewelry, kites, designer clothing, books, and souvenirs of your trip to Baltimore. But if the Pratt Street Pavilion is a plethora, then the Gallery Mall is the jackpot! The Gallery is a five-story shopping mall with over 70 stores devoted to clothing, novelties, and food. The Gallery offers a Bennetton, a Gap, a Banana Republic, an American Eagle, a Casual Corner, The Limited, and a host of other designer clothing stores to whet your appetite. The Gallery is also home to many novelty and gadget stores including The Sharper Image. The Gallery's top floor is replete with food stands that offer everything from ice cream to chicken to sushi. The Gallery holds several sit down restaurants but if you wish to eat at them you had better bring Daddy's wallet because they are expensive.

The Harbor is not just a shopping extravaganza. Right on the edge of the Harbor's waters lie several tourist attractions including the National Aquarium, which is celebrating its tenth anniversary with the recent opening of a new dolphin wing that almost doubles its size. Also right on the Harbor's waters is the Maryland Science Center which can provide a full day's worth of adventure for those interested in the physical sciences. The Lady Baltimore is a line of booze-cruises that leave the Harbor almost hourly and offer live music, dancing, and all the alcohol you can consume for a modest price. The historic pre-Civil War battleship the Constellation is moored in the Harbor and is open for tours in the afternoon. Tall ships from all around the world are also often docked right on the Harbor's edge and open for tours.

Within walking distance of the Harbor is the Baltimore Arena which attracts all kinds of performers, and the Winter schedule is sure to be full of top-notch acts. To obtain event information, call (301) 347–2000. The Baltimore Arena has always prided itself on keeping its ticket prices at an affordable level. Next to the Baltimore Arena is the Lyric Opera House which draws more off-Broadway shows than you can shake a stick at. The Lyric has drawn such top shows as Les Miserables and Cats. Let's not forget that the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra is one of the premier orchestras on the East Coast and has just recently returned from the Soviet Union for its Fall and Winter schedules.

Baltimore also offers one of the premier teams in all of baseball in the Baltimore Orioles. This is the Orioles last year of play at the old Memorial Stadium before they move to a newly built stadium in downtown Baltimore. The Orioles only have three more home games this year on October 4, 5, and 6. These games will attract over 50,000 people per game so if you would like to attend you should give the author a call because these three games are sold out!! Scalpers are always an option.

Baltimore's nightlife is one of its main attractions especially to a student from exciting Lewisburg. In the middle of downtown Baltimore there are a host of bars, of which the most frequented by college students is Fat Tuesdays! But within five minutes of downtown Baltimore is Fells Point. Fells Point is Baltimore's equivalent of Georgetown. Bring your wallet with ID and plan to have a great time in one or more of the over 25 bars in a 4 block radius. Students flock from Towson State, Loyola, Essex Community College, University of Maryland-Baltimore Campus (UMBC), Johns Hopkins, and University of Maryland (College Park) to fill these bars on weekends, as well as weeknights.

But if you don't want to drive through downtown traffic and only want to go as far as Towson State, then feel free because Towson offers a nightlife of its own. Towson State is Baltimore's foremost party school, and one needn't look past Towson's nightlife to discover why. There is an inexhaustible number of bars in Towson to cater to the student body including Gator's Pub, Poor Richards, Charles Village Pub, the American Cafe, and Parley Cafe. Come November, Towson will also be host to the largest mall in Baltimore, which is sure to have some new bars of its own. The bars all have college nights and finding the right bar on the right college night can make all the difference (price and people-wise). Other college bars right off the Beltway include Tully's, The Barn, and the Mount Washington Tavern.

Baltimore is a lot closer than you think so next time you are sitting around on a Friday and decide to go on a roadtrip, consider Baltimore as not only the closest alternative but the best opportunity. Directions: Take Route 15 south to Harrisburg. Follow the signs to I-83 south which takes you right to Towson. To get to the heart of Towson, take I-695 east to the Towson exit. To get to the Harbor, take I-83 south until it ends in downtown Baltimore right in front of the Harbor.

Deborah Carter tosses one of Vennari's famous pizzas.

BY TRAVIS ELLIOT AND LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writers

In an effort to ease the student's task of choosing from among Lewisburg's pizza offerings, we recently conducted a simple experiment. Unfortunately, the findings are not as clear-cut as one might hope.

The idea was to simultaneously order a medium pepperoni pizza for delivery from four local establishments and compare the waiting times, prices, and taste. Our hope was to declare one of these pizzas the best, but we can only conclude that pizza remains, for the most part, a matter of personal priorities.

We called Domino's, La Casa De Pizza, Little Italy, and Vennari's and placed our orders. In only 17 minutes, Domino's was the first to arrive, though they had called in advance and asked us to meet them outside. This pizza ($8.49) was by far the best tasting but also the smallest and the most expensive.

As the Domino's delivery person approached, however, we were surprised to see the Little Italy delivery person running towards us with pizza in hand. Though just as fast as Domino's and less expensive ($7.95), Little Italy's was not much larger and could not compare in taste.

La Casa De Pizza showed up ten minutes later (delivered by a Bucknell student). Its $7.79 price made it the cheapest, and it was a fairly good size, but its taste was nothing to write home about.

Feeling terribly sick of pizza, we waited ten more minutes for Vennari's. We found the price ($7.93), size, and taste all to hit about dead center. The crust was one of the best but seemed to take a long time for the cooks at Vennari's to make.

What this all came down to (besides a lot of pizza) was that the best place, as we said, depends on your personal priorities. If you are short on cash, Casa is the way to go. If you want to splurge for the best taste, try Domino's. If you have some time to kill, Vennari's is worth the wait for your order. In any case, think carefully before you call and consider our findings.

Are tanning beds the best way to bronze?

A lowdown on Lewisburg tanning salons and the scientific facts behind what really takes place under the lights.

BY JOYCE DOLLINGER AND COLLEEN RUSH
Buckenliain Staff Writers

The seasons are changing, a slight nip is in the air, and Bucknell students are in a panic. Soon, those precisely cared for tans will be nothing more than a faded memory. Rather than greasing oneself up and boiling listlessly on a beach, many sun-worshippers will have to find an effective alternative. Many will choose to turn to the artificial UVA rays of tanning beds. One question, though, still remains—are they safe or sizzling?

THE LOWDOWN ON TANNING SALONS

In downtown Lewisburg, there are three salons which feature tanning beds—James Martin at 216 St. John St. (523–3335), Larry Smith's at 310 Market St. (524–9380), and Shear Pleasure at 516 Market St. (523–6234).

One tanning session at Shear Pleasure costs $5. The salon has one tan bed. James Martin, a hair and tanning salon in Lewisburg, has two tanning beds. When a person walks in and asks to use a bed, the receptionist looks at that person's skin and warns them that they cannot lie in the UVA bed for more than 15–30 minutes their first time, depending on their skin type. However fair or dark, a person can not tan again until a 24-hour time period elapses. After one person finishes his/her session, the salon sanitizes the bed for the next person. This artificial tan lasts as long as an average natural tan, but takes longer to achieve. Each session is $5. Five sessions cost $20, and 10 sessions cost $35. Usually, more students, male and female, come in right before spring break or formals. On the average, the number of students usihg tanning salons has been increasing.

Larry Smith's Styling Nook and Tanning Salon costs $6 per session. Here they warn their customers of the damages tanning can cause. They only let their customers stay in the bed for half an hour, and they require them to wear eye protection, such as eyeshields or the special stickers they provide. The shop also hands out a booklet containing warnings about your eyes and medications that you should not use while tanning. The booklet also talks about "the itch" (lack of moisture in the skin), wrinkles, and latest beach styles. Yet, the front cover states: "ATTENTION: Due to the heavy scheduling of the tanning bed, it has become necessary to limit the time spent in the tanning salon to 30 min. per session. We feel this will benefit everyone. No one should have to wait for the bed. Your time will start when the appointment is made and not when you arrive. So please be on time so you can get full use of the bed. We greatly appreciate your cooperation." The question we ask is - Does Larry Smith issue this as a real warning or so that his business can move more smoothly and make more money?

Larry Smith's does follow FDA regulations by sanitizing all beds after one use. The shop is inspected twice a year by the state, as well as other inspectors. Larry Smith's recommends a good base tan of three sessions, every other day, three times a week. They suggest tanning only every other day so that the skin can rehydrate itself. If one tanned artificially every day, the skin would flake and itch. The tan would literally "fall off." Larry Smith's agrees that the number of students using tanning salons is increasing and that people who would not go years ago are going now.

THE SCIENTIFIC SIDE

A tan appears due to the activation of melanin in your skin. According to Tanning Tips magazine, "...your skin is made up of a number of layers, the uppermost of which is the horny layer, which acts as a protection against the bombardment of ultraviolet rays. The more you tan, the thicker that horny layer becomes, and the less ultraviolet light comes through to the melanocytes, where your supply of melanin is produced. It's the melanin that gives your skin its brown, tanned glow."

Thus the people who tan every day without allowing their skin to rest from the exposure to ultraviolet light are actually defeating their purpose of becoming darker because they are thickening their horny layer (which is made up of thickened, dead skin cells) and reducing the amount of ultraviolet light that can get through to start the production of that characteristic tan color in their skin.

Freckled skin that never tans runs the highest risk of damage. Deeply colored or black skin seems almost immune to sunburn, yet an immunity to sunburn does not mean an immunity to skin cancer. Black-skinned people can and do get melanoma, even though they have that extra protective melanin layer. These are only a few of the problems that tanning can initiate.

To make things worse, "according to a British study," says Warwick Morison, M.D., associate professor of dermatology at Johns Hopkins University, "about 50 percent of those who go to a tanning salon to use a device have a skin type that really can't tan. They go because there is something magic about it, about selling tans." (FDA Consumer, May 1991)

"Others," adds Arthur Sober, M.D., associate professor of dermatology at Harvard University, "use tanning devices for indoor 'base' tan before taking a winter tropics holiday. Their intent is to protect themselves from future sunburns. But they are in for a surprise. A UV-A tan does not protect well since it is distributed differently and scattered elsewhere throughout the skin."

The outcome of using tanning beds or sitting in the sun is a shocking decrease in the skin's elasticity of American youth. Many are developing skin with hardly any resilience to the sun. Accordingly, the risk of skin cancer has increased 90% since the 1930's. Evidence shows, that even modest amounts of sun needed to obtain an adequate tan may lead to some serious health problems. Now, dermatologists believe that too much sun can activate an irreversible process harming the skin and in time, leading to cancer.

The most common danger of sunning in natural or artificial light is the basal and squamous cell disease, which is almost 100% curable if detected soon enough. There is also malignant melanoma, which is less rare but a more dangerous disease. It is caused by too much exposure to ultra-violet rays, later resulting in blistering sunburns.

The number of skin cancer patients is increasing. More than 600,000 people will be stricken with skin cancer this year. Over 8,000 will die. (Reader's Digest, June 1990)

Damage from UV rays is not limited to the skin. Over-exposure may also result in premature aging signs, permanent damage to the eyes, and even to the immune system.

People who strive for the ultimate tan will pay the penalty later. The price may be high: skin cancer, aged skin, impaired vision and irreparable damage to the immune system. Ultraviolet rays do not discriminate. No one is exempt from its harmful effects. With all of these risks, who really needs a tan?

The Collegiate Perspective (and other fairy tales)

Peter Lalos

In the Indus River Valley civilizations, it was called "karma." With the reformed Protestants of the later 16th century, the preferred terminology was "divine intervention," while the followers of the tenets of Hobbesian socio-economic justice over the centuries deemed it to be, simply enough, the "law of coincidental averages."

In later years, when the wheels of the burgeoning American popular culture rolled unimpeded across the nation-states of Europe, the Far East, Africa, and Latin America, a new, more precise definition of this phenomenon took hold across the globe.

It was from this point on known as "Things that make you go, 'hmm!'"

* How do they decide which is the "A" wing of Coleman Hall and which is the "B" wing? Logically, one would go alphabetically from left to right, that being the direction in which we read on a page. Yet, these letters in this building are not set up in this fashion. Odd.

* How do the cafeteria workers decide on which days you should put your tray on the conveyor belt every one space, and which days you should put them every two spaces?

* Where does Marts Hall end and Vaughan Lit begin?

* Overheard from an anonymous Pennsylvania contractor in July, 1991; his business had since filed for bankruptcy:

"Wait, wait. I have one last bit of remodeling business to address before we adjourn. Now, this is just off the top of my head, but, what if we made two long mailbox walkways for next semester instead of four... You know, so that all of those little logjams that occurred in last year's cubby holes can come together to make one smashing bottleneck? And... and wait... I'm not done yet... What if we hired random students to stand and talk with their friends at these points as if they were oblivious to the fact that people were waiting to get by them? All in favor?"

* Instructors who walk into the lecture hall on the first day of classes and are firmly set in the belief that, in the class sitting before him/her, there will be a uniform distribution of grades for the semester. Because, hey, let's face it: We are a 5 A's, 11 B's, 17 C's, 4 D's and 1 F generation, and where does our actual performance get off standing in the way of this reality?

* A paisley bookbag was spotted on campus last week. Paisley. I— I just don't think that I need to say anything else on this matter.

* Coat racks along the corridors of Swartz and Coleman Halls. Like, yeah, I'm going to hang up my jacket on the way up to my dorm room or into the lecture hall. And maybe I'll just leave my wallet in the front pocket, too. Hi, reality check.

* A snippet from last week's reception following the biology building dedication:

"That's Mr. Rooke, you spud! Let him do whatever the hell he wants!"

"I don't care if he's Mr. Bucknell! He can't take two entrees! Gimme that, I said!"

* Professors who never tell you their names.

* Stop me if you've heard this, but, can you believe that next week— You have heard it? Okay. Forget it.

* So, at the end of the semester, when our textbooks are suddenly worth 10-50% of what we paid for them, are they trying to tell us that the information found within them is, at best, only half correct at this point? Hah! I'm just thinking of those suckers who scrounge for used books when classes start up. Boy, are they on a fast track to nowhere.

*Did anyone notice that they've stopped serving Boo Berry Crunch cereal in the cafeteria roughly since I made that crack about it in the paper last year? Coincidence? I think not... I think I've undoubtedly touched a political nerve somewhere.

Next week: It's Homecoming, so accordingly, I'm going home. I guess what I'm trying to say is, don't expect too much of me for the next edition.

Williams lives a life of music

BY MARIA GLOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

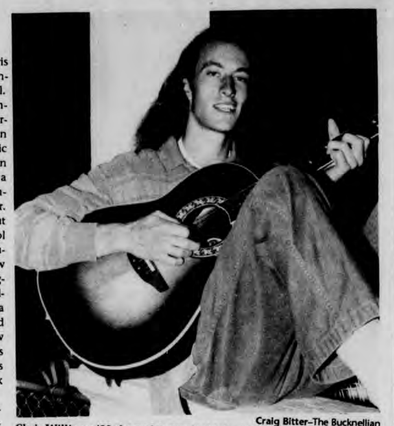
A man of many talents, Chris Williams '92 has been a major contributor to the essence of Bucknell.

Whether he is singing Moondance with the Bison Chips or performing one of his own pieces in the Coffee House, Williams' music is a part of life at B.U. Chris began his singing career at age eight as a member of the West Chester County Boy's Choir and his church choir. He continued singing throughout junior high and into high school where he performed in various musicals and also participated in a New York State Choral Festival. Still singing at Bucknell, Williams is the leader of the Bison Chips, an all male a capella group. Williams is excited about the Chips and their four new members as well as their big plans for the coming year which includes heading south on a Spring Break Tour.

Williams is also a talented guitar player. It was not until his junior year in high school that he first began to play. "One day I just picked up my father's guitar and taught myself to play" said Williams. Chris began to play along with his older brother Rob and they eventually started to perform in bars and colleges and became known as the "orange hi-tops." Williams says "this name came about when I brought a pair of orange hi-tops, my brother made fun of them so I bought him a pair for Christmas." By chance, they both wore the sneakers at an early performance and the "orange hi-tops" were born.

Williams, a veritable Renaissance man, also has an athletic side and he even holds the proud title of Captain of the Mud Sharks ultimate frisbee team. This past summer, Chris honed his ultimate frisbee techniques by playing in a league with his brother in Hawaii. The Mud Sharks can be seen in action parents weekend in the fields behind the Mods.

For Williams, his own deep rooted Christian faith and beliefs provide the main focus in his life. These beliefs carry over into all aspects of his life and especially in his musical performances and writing. Williams said "much of my inspiration for my songs has come from the love of my family, which is grounded in my faith and personal relationship with God which I consider to be the most important thing in my life." Through personal reflection in his music, Chris describes realizations about his experiences. In describing one of his more recent songs "Calm Within" Williams said "The words reflect my strong faith in God that I need and can depend upon because of the consistency I've been given," says Williams.



Craig Bitter–The Bucknellian

Chris Williams '92 shares his musical talent and vibrant personality with the Bucknell community in the Bison Chips and solo performances.

There is silence and for the first time
I'm fine with how delicate and slow is the passage of time.
My age grows older but my heart feels the same and my love for You still remains.

There is a calm within my heart.
And it can't be created by anyone but You.
No one can make me feel the way I do but You.

A gentle tear it comes to my eye as thoughts of Your love well they can surpass time.
I cry not in sadness but for what You have done
that will last a lifetime and long beyond.

Williams has not set definite plans for the future but is considering traveling West to perform and possibly even record his music. Reflecting on his time at Bucknell, Chris said that he will "truely miss the college atmosphere and his experiences here." Sometime in the future we may all hear Chris's music over the radio and be reminded of our own memories of Bucknell. As much as Chris will miss his college days, perhaps Bucknell will miss him even more.

Chris will be performing at the Towne Tavern every other Wednesday.

A Mid-Autumn Director's Dream

BY NICOLE COBBAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The most noticeable thing about Kate Pogue is the animation in her eyes when she's directing a scene. Here on a teacher exchange from her home in Houston, Texas, Pogue is directing the fall production of A Midsummer-Night's Dream in Coleman Theater.

As a graduate of Northwestern University, Pogue began directing regularly when she started teaching at the Houston Community College eight years ago. Her resume is impressive. As the head of the Drama and Dance Department at the Houston Community College, Pogue has directed at least two or three productions a year, while also directing for a professional stage company in Houston. She has directed three plays as artistic director for the Shakespeare by the Book Festival and several for the Houston Shakespeare Festival, as well. In addition, Pogue has written all the operas for a company dedicated to bringing opera into the school systems.

A teacher for several years, Pogue decided to take advantage of the faculty exchange program and community exchange program offered by both the Houston Community College and Bucknell. There were several reasons why, out of the six colleges she had applied to, Bucknell seemed the perfect choice for her. Having done summerstock for two or three years in Eaglesmere, Pennsylvania, when she was younger, Pogue was familiar with the area. There was, as she describes, an appeal, after living in the South for so long, to "see the beauty of the change of the seasons."

In addition to having tried her hand as an adjunct teacher at the University of Houston, Pogue felt she would like the experience of teaching at a four year university such as Bucknell. She wanted a change of pace, moving from a large community school with 60,000 undergraduate students and 57 campuses, to a small, private, and prestigious institution; and she found that after 20 years of being a mother she was able to do so. "My children are grown up and I'm free."

It was Kate's extensive background in Shakespearean theater that first interested Bucknell's theater department. Because Professor Bob Gaines would be on sabbatical this year, the Theater Department knew they would need a temporary replacement. This opening coupled with the fact that A Midsummer's Night Dream had already been chosen by the Play Selection Committee made Pogue the obvious solution to their problems.

Pogue says she is thrilled to be here. As an author of children's books, a playwright, as well as a librettist, the five-course schedule she had in Houston left her little time to write. However, with only a three course schedule here at Bucknell, Pogue is "eager to be able to spend time at writing."

Pogue is equally excited about directing A Midsummer's Night Dream for her third time. New to the Bucknell theater program, she is glad that "at least the play is familiar." She also feels that it is "a wonderful play for a college theater department because there are so many good roles...you can get an evenness in casting. There aren't just two main people which stand out." And despite the fact that Pogue is very familiar with the work, she claims that she is trying new ideas out on the set and the costumes. "There's an excitement among all the creative people here. It's a chance to do something magical."

Pogue returns to Houston at the end of this semester, but she has, "enjoyed (her) experience here very much." She thought the experience of teaching at a small, undergraduate school like Bucknell was wonderful, but she isn't looking to leave her job in Houston, yet. Her only definite answer on the subject is: "I just love teaching."

-VIDEO REVIEW-

The Grifters, Rated R. John Cusak plays Roy, a small-time con artist who wants to stay that way despite pressure from his girlfriend Myra (Annette Bening) to expand. Now available at video stores.

BY D. A. LITMAN

Let's just say up front that The Grifters is not one of John Cusak's (Better Off Dead, The Sure Thing) usual movies. Let's also say up front that maybe Cusak should stick to what he knows.

The film stars, of course, John Cusak as Roy, a small-time con artist who is somehow able to make a substantial amount of money playing cards, rolling dice, and ripping off bartenders. Annette Bening (Regarding Henry) plays his girlfriend, Myra, who would like Roy to move up into the big scams, or the "long con." Finally there is Roy's mother, Lilly, played by Angelica Huston (Prizzi's Honor). She's a "leg man" for a big-time bookie, but she wants to see her son go straight.

A decent cast that should have made a decent movie...but they didn't. The reasons why aren't too difficult to ferret out. The main problem is the dialogue. Bening is generally good with her lines as well as her character. However, Cusak and Huston are constantly forced into melodramatic, "tense" confrontations which only succeed in making the viewer laugh. This ruins the dark mood that the film is trying to get across.

The other down side of this movie is the ending. The best parts about films in this genre (Dirty Rotten Scoundrels, The Sting) are the plot twists, especially the ones which come at the end of the film. This movie gives some half-hearted turns and builds the viewer up for the "biggie" at the end, but then it fails to deliver. It's the kind of film that leaves you screaming "AND...AND"

In short, I'd have to recommend leaving this one on the shelf.

Bison Soccer baffled after 1–1 week

Bucknell squad crushes Holy Cross on Saturday 4–1, loses to underrated Millersville on Tuesday 2–0, running record to 2–3

BY ANDY LABOVITZ
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The men's soccer squad had another unsatisfying week, running its record to 2–3 with a strong come-from-behind victory over Patriot League rival Holy Cross last Saturday, before being overmatched by an underrated Millersville team on Tuesday. Both games being played here at Bucknell.

The Holy Cross Crusaders traveled to Bucknell in search of their first win. They arrived 0–2 overall, 0–1 in the Patriot League. Going into the game, the Bison had not yet won a league match either. Consequently, this game was important for both teams to get themselves out of the Patriot League cellar.

The Bison began the game sluggishly against Holy Cross. A defensive lapse allowed a goal by the Crusaders' Bill Martin just six minutes into the game. Coach Craig Reynolds was worried that the lapse would affected his team negatively, but fortunately it was not a factor.

Colin Bridgewater–The Bucknellian

Ed Siddons '93 looks on as his penalty shot sails by the diving Holy Cross goalie in the Bison's 4–1 victory on Saturday. The soccer squad will be looking to even their record to 3–3 tomorrow against Colgate.

Bucknell, however, did not manage to put together a solid scoring opportunity in the first half. The remainder of the half was played in tight, scoreless fashion.

During halftime, Reynolds determined that the Crusaders were stifling his team's offense by moving out quickly when the ball cleared, and trying to trap the Bison offsides. He chose to negate that strategy by instructing his team to utilize more one-touch ball passing, and trying to get one-on-one situations with Holy Cross defenders. The halftime changes worked, because the Bison were much more confident and aggressive on offense in the second half.

Dave Moser '94 began the scoring assault ten minutes into the second half with a header past the Crusaders' goalie.

Nine minutes later, Moser assisted the Bison's eventual game-winning goal, which was scored by Mike Letts '95. Greg Beatty '95 scored his league-leading fifth goal of the season ten minutes later to put the Bison ahead 3–1.

Ed Siddons '93 rounded out the Bison blitz after scoring on a dramatic penalty shot with less than one minute remaining in the game. The shot was set up after he was tackled in the goal box by the frustrated Holy Cross goalkeeper. The goal was Siddons' first of the season.

Bucknell backed up the offensive assault with a solid defense, which allowed only one good scoring opportunity to the Crusaders during the second half, a hard shot that hit the crossbar which would have tied the game at 2–2. Mark Wrigley '94 once again played an excellent game in goal, making seven saves.

Coming off of their solid victory over Holy Cross, an overconfident Bison squad awaited the arrival of the Millersville Marauders, who the Bison defeated last year by a 2–0 score. Reynolds stated after the game, "Maybe we were not mentally prepared for a team which was much better than anyone had anticipated." The Bison did not match up well with the very quick Millersville.

The Marauders started the scoring at 17:04 of the first half, after goalie Wrigley declined to come out on a "hanging" ball which he probably could have handled. Millersville then completed the scoring ten minutes later, when a shot which looked like an easy save for Wrigley deflected off a Bison defender and into the net.

In the second half, the Bison picked up their play, but the Millersville goalie made some very good saves. Wrigley had an excellent second half, saving 13 shots in the game, but Bucknell could not manage to score.

In Reynolds' estimation, this was in part due to the fact that "Millersville played an excellent ballgame" and because Bucknell "didn't do the simple things very well."

This week the Bison travel to Colgate on Saturday before hosting Bloomsburg on Tuesday. Commenting on the Colgate game, Reynolds said that the Patriot League is so unpredictable this year, he doesn't know what to expect. He does know that Colgate has an impressive club with a solid defense. Co-captain Keith Goodling '92 is on crutches, as well, and is not expected to play this week—a big blow to the Bison.

Water polo defeats Brown for first varsity win of year

ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Last Sunday, the Bucknell men's water polo team returned from Navy with their first varsity victory of the season. The victory came against Brown University in an impressive effort by the Bison, who also lost three games during their erratic weekend.

Bucknell played their first game of the tournament versus Navy, the second-ranked team in the East, early Saturday morning. The game ended as a disappointment for the Bucknell men, as they suffered an 18–8 shelling by the Midshipmen. Bucknell played a strong first half, battling to only a 5–4 deficit by the end of the second quarter. However, the second half proved to be a turn for the worst as Navy outscored the Bison 13–4.

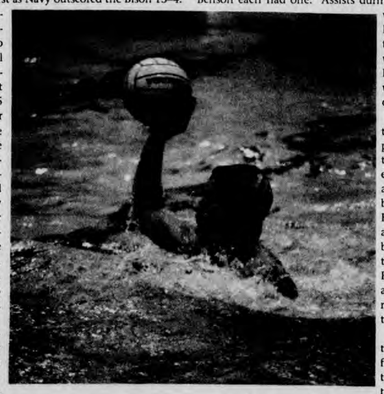
The Navy defense and goaltending proved to be too powerful for Bucknell, allowing only eight of the Bison's 25 shots to enter their cage. Those eight points were credited to co-captain Kevin Schroth '92, who had three. His fellow captain Walter Kelly '92 also netted a pair, while Steve Benson '92, Dan Brown '92, and Ethan Daniels '94 each scored once.

Bucknell followed the Navy contest with an exciting 8–7 victory over third-seeded Brown in a game that went into overtime. The Bucknell men played an excellent game throughout all four quarters, recording a 2–2 tie after the first and a 4–2 lead at the half. The second half saw Brown outscore the Bison 4–2, bringing the game to a 6–6 deadlock at the end of regulation.

Bucknell was forced into their first overtime situation of the season (overtime in water polo consists of the teams playing two additional three minute periods in a fight for the victory). The men from Brown scored once in the first of these two periods, but the Bison kept their cool and went on to score two of their own in the second to secure the victory.

Rupert DeVink '94, who replaced an injured John Bradbury '92 in goal all weekend, played an excellent game in what was only his second varsity contest of the season. DeVink recorded 14 saves in the Bucknell victory. Schroth scored three goals in the initial four quarters, while Chris Retzler '93 added two and A. J. Zottola '92 had one. During the overtime, Scroth scored his fourth goal of the contest to retie the score at seven, and Sean Tierney '95 scored the game winning goal on his only shot in the contest. Head Coach Jim Harvey was extremely pleased by his team's performance. "We beat Brown for the first time in ten years, which made it a very emotional win. We were in the same position at this tournament last year against Brown [a game that went into overtime] and lost. I think the guys were determined not to let it happen again, which brought their playing up a level."

Bucknell's third game of the weekend was against the University of Massachusetts, a team also ranked ahead of Bucknell in the East. Unfortunately, Bucknell's performance was not as polished as during the previous game, and the Bison suffered a 13–6 loss. Four successful shots were converted by Kelly, while Brown and Benson each had one. Assists during the match-up were credited to Brown with three, Schroth with one, and Dan Killinger '92 who also had one.



Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

The Bison water polo team will look to improve their (1–5) record in a tournament this weekend at Navy. The team will face non-regional teams such as U. of Arkansas and the University of Richmond.

The last game that Bucknell played at the tournament also ended in a loss, an 11–7 heartbreaker against Harvard. Kelly and Schroth both recorded two goals, and Brown, Tierney, and Zottola each recorded one in the contest.

Regarding the team's performance throughout the tournament, Harvey stated, "Everyone had some very good moments, but the team suffered a couple of mental lapses that caused big problems." He also called the experience throughout the weekend a very important one, since it was Bucknell's first tournament at thirty meters.

This weekend, the Bucknell men travel to Navy once again, this time to play in a tournament that will feature half club teams and half varsity teams. The 1–5 Bison are scheduled to play the University of Arkansas and either Army or the University of Richmond. The club team that the Bison will focus on is the Olympic Club, a team from California, which features many talented and experienced players from the West Coast. Of tournaments that include club teams, Harvey says, "They are good tournaments to go to, because we can play more physical games. This one will be a good tune-up for our Homecoming Tournament, where we will be playing tough teams."

Field Hockey topples Patriot foe Holy Cross in 2–0 duel

BY NATHAN WOLAVER

The women's field hockey team opened up at home last Saturday in spectacular fashion by beating Patriot League rival Holy Cross 2–0.

With this being their first league opponent, the Lady Bison wanted to send a message to the rest of the league that Bucknell is a force to be reckoned with.

Head Coach Jen Averill summed up the team's attitude by noting, "We're trying to earn the respect we deserve, and any team that beats us will have to earn it."

Bucknell and Holy Cross shut each other out through most of the first half. Both teams were playing hard-nosed defense, resulting in ferocious midfield play. As time ran out in the first period, Amber Baxter '92 swept in from the corner and passed off to Sue Wells '92, who drilled it past the Crusader goaltender for the first goal of the game.

Averill was able to go into the locker room with a 1–0 lead and with a pumped-up team. However, she still feared that Holy Cross could come back on the strength of its impact players.

But the Lady Bison never gave Holy Cross the opportunity to get near the net. The forward line controlled the ball throughout the second half, playing pressure offense while still helping back on defense.

"When our forward line is working well, it lightens the load on the midfielders and helps us match-up better," remarked Averill.

> "As long as we remain emotionally and mentally tough, nothing can hold us back."
> —Jen Averill
> Head Coach

Dana Bruce '92 put the game out of reach when she scored from a free-for-all in front of the cage. The win over Holy Cross put the Lady Bison at 3–2, and over .500 for the first time this season.

Bucknell was pitted next against the Nittany Lions of Penn State in a late afternoon game on Thursday. Coming into the game, Penn State was ranked #2 in the country and boasted an awesome scoring attack.

The Penn State powerhouse came up empty in the first half, as the Bucknell defense cranked it up a notch and stalwarted the Lions offense. Unfortunately, Penn State's defense was too tough to penetrate and both teams went into the locker room tied at nothing apiece.

Bucknell continued to play its tenacious defense until 10 minutes into the second half, when Penn State broke through for a pair of goals. Penn State scored one more goal late in the game, but, the Lady Bison had showed that it was ready and willing to tussle with the top teams in the country.

Bucknell may face its toughest challenge of the season this weekend when they take on the defending Patriot League champions from Lafayette.

For the last two years, Lafayette has walked away with 1–0 wins over Bucknell. The team from Easton, Pa. presents itself as a huge threat because they are such a balanced team. They combine depth and experience with a lightning attack to give headaches to their opponent's defense. But Averill believes she has a way of stopping the Patriot League juggernaut.

"As long as we remain emotionally and mentally tough, nothing can hold us back," Said Averill. This might not bode well for Lafayette, who is going to see a new team from last year.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Katrina Mueller '93 defends against a Holy Cross Crusader as Amber Baxter '92 looks on. The Lady Bison are 3–3 on the season, and will be looking to go over .500 by defeating foe Lafayette on Saturday.

Athlete of the Week

Karen Stagliano '92

Women's tennis' Karen Stagliano '92 has been named the Athlete of the Week for both her performance in the week's two matches and her outstanding career for the squad.

The co-captain's 6–1, 6–1 victory against rival Lehigh, coupled with another straight set victory against Drexel gave the senior a career mark of 37–7 and gave her the title of Bucknell's most prolific singles player in history. The 37 victories rank as the most ever compiled in singles competition at the school.

Stagliano will try to extend her record as the squad has five matches this week, including a contest against top Patriot League rival, Colgate.

Volleyball team places second in St. Francis Invitational Tournament

By Don Reinhart
Bucknell Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's volleyball team improved its record to 7–7 this week by placing second in the St. Francis Invitational Tournament after decisively defeating Susquehanna University in straight games. Bucknell entered Patriot League play this week with its best record in several years.

The Bison opened the St. Francis weekend tournament on September 20 with a loss to St. Bonaventure. The team came out flat and, as a result, lost in three straight games 15–4, 15–1, and 15–7. There were 31 total errors and an overall low hitting percentage. Coach Cindy Opalski was not happy with her team's mental preparation. Opalski commented, "We didn't come into the gym with our game faces on, and the match was over before we realized what was happening."

Seeking retribution, Bucknell put away a tough Duquesne University team in four games, 15–11, 3–15, 15–6, and 15–13. The established offensive leaders and captains Kara Forosisky '92 and Kathleen Sullivan '92 each killed nine balls at the net while Joanne Lewis '95, and Amy Miller '95, held the defense together with five and seven digs respectively. Opalski was particularly pleased with Miller's performance. In her first start, Miller compiled the seven digs in addition to four service aces. Opalski added, "We're getting great production out of our young players. If our older players can up their level of play, the pieces of the puzzle are apt to fit together."

The puzzle did begin to take shape as the Bison secured their second-place tournament finish by defeating St. Francis College 15–3, 15–10, and 15–14. Deanna Scinta '95, who was named to the previous week's Bucknell All-Tournament Team, finished another fine tournament with four kills and 67% hitting in the St. Francis match. Sullivan pounded home an additional 11 kills to give her 28 for the weekend while Sarah Mesaros '93 added five more kills.

Monday, September 7 was a local showdown, as Bucknell shutdown nearby rival and top Division III contender Susquehanna University 16–14, 15–7, 15–5. Sullivan had a brilliant day at the net with 13 kills and five blocks, as Forosisky blasted home seven kills and tallied nine digs. Miller played another great game, going one for one at the net and lowering the floor to come up with nine digs. Another contributing rookie, Aubrey Schneggenberger '95 had five kills.

With momentum behind them, the Bison host the start of Patriot League competition this weekend in Schwartz Fieldhouse. Their opener against Colgate at 7:30 p.m. on Friday will be the biggest challenge for the team this year. Colgate is the Patriot League defending champion, and currently owns a 9–0 undefeated record. On Saturday, Bucknell will face Navy at 11 a.m., to whom it lost in four games earlier this season. Finally, the Bison will match–up against Holy Cross at 1 p.m.

three-set matches. Diaz, who received heat treatments to her hamstring prior to the match, stayed focused after dropping her second set, and rallied to win the number one singles match 6–3, 4–6, 6–4. Also showing considerable poise after dropping her second set was Mary Ann Benack, who similarly regained her composure and came back 6–1, 4–6, 6–4.

Other singles action saw Carlson victorious at number two in straight sets, 6–2, 6–3, Lutter winning at number five, 7–5, 6–1, and Stacey Duffy taking the number six match 6–3, 7–5.

Also victorious was co–captain Stagliano. Her 6–1, 6–1 win at number four, with her victory at Drexel, put her career dual–match singles record at 37–7, enough to put her atop the all–time list at Bucknell.

With the week's victories, the Lady Bison moved their conference record to 3–1 and their overall record to 5–1, both second only to Colgate in the league. The upcoming week should prove to be a real test for this young group, as they play Delaware and St. Francis away over the weekend, return home to face Franklin & Marshall Tuesday, and then must face top rival Colgate away on the following Saturday. The addition of a match at Bloomsburg rescheduled to Friday from this week due to a rainout makes next week the fullest yet for the team.

Bison win initial Patriot League contest of season at Fordham, will take on Ivy League champion Dartmouth (1–0) tommorrow

MITCH BENTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's football squad recorded its first victory of the 1991 season at Fordham last Saturday. The 21–14 victory came in the Bison's initial Patriot League contest after the team fell in the year's first two non-league games.

Leading the effort against the Rams was Bucknell's defense. The squad tallied six sacks and forced six turnovers. Overall, Fordham was limited to –29 yards rushing on the afternoon.

As has been the case for most of the season, Bucknell ran into trouble early in the contest. This week, the game began with the Bison kicking off; but Fordham wasted no time and returned the kick 88 yards to take a 7–0 lead after only 13 seconds. It was the first time that a kickoff was returned against the Bison since New Hampshire returned one 100 yards in 1983.

Matters became darker soon after as tight end Jeff Pape '92 fumbled his first reception of the game, giving possession back to the Rams.

Despite the problems, Bucknell's defense continued to stiffen, led by the defensive line, titled "the heart of our defense" by Head coach Lou Maranzana. Defensive tackle Bill Pisano '92 led the way with two sacks, a fumble recovery, and 14 tackles, the highest total for a Bucknell player this year.

At end Roosevelt Smith '92 also had two sacks, while John Lusk '93 finished with eight tackles and a fumble recovery.

The last of this front four, Janne Kilpelainen '93, tallied ten tackles and partially blocked a Ram field goal attempt.

Bucknell matched Fordham later in the first quarter as quarterback Jeff Kelly '92 kept the ball and scored on a one-yard touchdown run, the first of his college career. The Bison took the lead for good in the quarter as tailback Brian Henesey '92 scored on a seven-yard run on fourth-and-one to make the score 14–7.

That score remained until the fourth quarter, when Pape redeemed himself on another fourth down play. On fourth-and-six from the Fordham 28, Kelly hit his All-League tight end with a 28-yard scoring strike. The score was Pape's first of the season and tenth of his career.

Overall, Bucknell attempted to convert on five fourth-down plays against Fordham. The squad was successful on three of them, including the two scores.

Fordham also scored in the quarter, but the game was sealed as linebacker John Spatafore '92 made a goal-line tackle on fourth-and-goal at the one-yard line. Spatafore, one of the team's co-captains, also stopped another Fordham drive with an interception and finished the game with 11 tackles, raising his career total to 283. 17 more stops would place the four-year starter in a group of seven others as Bucknell's only athletes with 300 career tackles.

Offensively, Henesey, the second Bison co-captain, led the Bison with 101 yards rushing on 29 carries. That leaves the senior with 2212 career yards, only 410 shy of Brad Myers '53 school record.

The output also marked the seventh time that the All-League running back rushed for 100 yards. In only one of those game did Bucknell fail to win, a 25–24 defeat at the hands of the University of Pennsylvania in 1989.

Overall, Kelly completed 15 of 29 of his passes for 132 yards and the one touchdown. But the stars of the game were the defense.

Said coach Maranzana, "We had to lean on our defense. We knew that there was more experience on that side of the ball and the unit has improved throughout the season.

"They came up with the big plays against Fordham, taking the ball away 12 times [including forced punts], giving the offense great field position for the three scores."

Offensively, Maranzana described Henesey as "getting smoother" and as a "great team player who does everything one could want from a player."

He also had praise for his backup, Matt Walsh '93, who may play flanker as well as tailback this week at Dartmouth in order to get additional playing time.

Walsh will not be the only Bison playing in an unfamiliar role versus the Big Green. Due to various injuries, the defensive secondary will sport a much different look from that which began the season against Hofstra.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Quarterback Jeff Kelly '92 will lead the Bison against Dartmouth tomorrow. The senior threw for one touchdown and ran for another in the Bison's victory at Fordham.

A.J. Carvelli '93 will make his second consecutive start at cornerback in place of the injured George Rocchino '92. The other cornerback position will be manned by Troy White '95, while Bob Marshall '92 will move from there to strong safety. Blaine Fawcett '93, who had an interception against Fordham, will move from strong to free safety. Also seeing considerable time will be Ian DiBernardo '92.

New starters on offense will include Greg Gerdeman '95, fullback Ron Mesaros '92, and receiver Hank Ramsey '92.

Maranzana believes that the offense in general and Kelly in particular have looked better as the season has progressed. He attributes this to the relative inexperience of the offensive line.

Tomorrow, the Bison will start four players who had no experience at the start of the season, including a sophomore, Vince Mays '94, at center and a freshman, Gerdeman, at left tackle.

The newcomers will be tested early in tomorrow's match-up against Dartmouth, one of the Ivy League's defending co-champions.

The Big Green opened the 1991 season last week with a 21–15 League win at UPenn. The New Hampshire school returned 13 starters, including eight on offense, from last year's team that finished 7–2–1.

Senior tailback Al Rosier leads Dartmouth into the game against Bucknell after rushing 26 times for 99 yards against the Quakers.

Rosier scored one touchdown in leading Dartmouth's rushing attack that gained 210 yards. Defensively, the Big Green were led by linebacker Tom Morrow, who had 14 tackles, and interception and a fumble recovery.

The last time that the two teams met, in 1989, Bucknell won 36–20, as Scott Auchenbach '90 threw three second-half touchdowns to lead the Bison to a come-from-behind victory.

This year's contest will be a homecoming for Bucknell coach Maranzana. A 1970 graduate of Dartmouth, Maranzana was a two-year starter at defensive end and played on an Ivy League championship team in his senior year.

The Bison will follow this week's contest with next Saturday's annual Homecoming contest against another Ivy League opponent, Cornell, at 1:00 in Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Bison co-captain Brian Henesey '92, shown here in action last season, broke the 100 yard rushing barrier for the first time this season after doing so three times last year. The senior tailback needs 125 yards to take second place on Bucknell's all-time career rushing list.

Stagliano breaks record as tennis defeats Lehigh, 8–1

BY MIKE MARKOVICH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The young Bucknell women's tennis team continued to roll through its season largely unchallenged this past week with two victories, including an 8–1 thrashing of Patriot League rival Lehigh.

The week's tennis began Saturday, when the women travelled to Philadelphia to play Drexel. Although Julia Diaz '95 and Kymm Carlson '94 had trouble with Drexel's top two players all day, Bucknell's lower four flights came through with straight set wins in all of their matches.

Drexel's Joan Glass, a player Bucknell Coach Rose Ewan calls "a human backboard who'll make you make the mistakes," apparently did just that to Diaz at number one singles, beating her 6-4, 6-4. At number two, Kymm Carlson succumbed to Drexel's freshman sensation from Spain, Eva Ruiz, 6-4, 6-2.

Diaz and Carlson's woes continued at number one doubles, where they were down 5-0 in the first set before Coach Ewan wisely decided to pull them from the match.

"Julia had pulled her hamstring in her singles match, and Kymm was suffering from a cold and was having trouble breathing. The overall match had already been won at that point, so I saw no reason to let them continue and possibly injure themselves further, especially with the big Lehigh match the next day," she explained.

The number three, four, five, and six singles matches were won by Mary Ann Benack '92, Karen Stagliano '92, Kristina Lutter '95, and Stacey Duffy '95, respectively. Not one of them lost more than one game in their two sets. They played equally as well together as alone, as Benack and Stagliano took the number two doubles match 6-3, 6-1, and Lutter and Duffy won at number six, 6-2, 6-0, to bring the final tally on the day to a 6-3 Bucknell victory.

The squad returned to Lewisburg Sunday to host Patriot League opponent Lehigh, looking for their third conference victory on the year. They received it in typically convincing fashion, 8-1.

The only loss recorded by the Bison on the afternoon was at number three doubles, but the win was not as lopsided as the score indicated on this day. Coach Ewan was nonetheless elated. "My stated goal for the season has been to play controlled, concentrated tennis, and that's just what the girls did on Sunday."

The strategy proved worthy of the day as the Bison were tested with tiebreakers and some rare

Women's Soccer tops Penn; falls to league foe Holy Cross

BY SCOTT BROWN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's soccer team continued their roller coaster ride of a season as they split a pair of games played this past week. However, one might consider that the Lady Bison actually went 2–1 this week because the score in their opening game of this season against Temple was changed.

Bucknell learned that Temple had used an ineligible player in their 3–0 win and therefore was forced to forfeit the game, giving the Bison a 1–0 win in the books.

As a result, entering into the game last Saturday against Holy Cross, the Bison had the chance to raise their record above .500.

The Bison defense had the unenviable task of covering Holy Cross' freshman sensation Jessie McManmon, who was responsible for all three goals in the Crusader's 3–0 season opener. But Holy Cross' offensive barrage was too much for the Bison as the Crusanders dominated the contest, plastering Bison goalkeeper Bridget Collins '94 with 22 shots. Collins was able to come up with ten saves, but also allowed four goals in the process.

Holy Cross scored two goals in the first half and two more in the second while limiting Bucknell to only four attempts on goal in their 4–0 win. McManmon was able to penetrate the Bison defense for two tallies, one in each half.

The goals gave her six for the season in just five games. Holy Cross raised their record to 3-2, 1-0 in the Patriot League, and have yet to lose when McManmon has scored.

Bucknell bounced back from the loss, taking out their aggressions on the University of Pennsylvania who came to Lewiwsburg Monday night. The Bison struck first as Sara Patiro '95 took the pass from Joanne Crane '95 to give the Bison the early advantage.

Just seven and a half minutes later Crane did the job herself giving the Bison a 2–0 cushion. The Bison had no trouble extending this lead as they were able to tally three more goals in the next nine minutes to build up a sizable 5–0 halftime margin. The goals were scored by Jen Giordano '95, Polly Carr '93, and Lisa Gibbons '95, respectively.

The score remained the same until Gibbons was able to net her second score of the game with 25 minutes left to play in the contest. The pair of goals gave her four tallies for the season, thereby giving her the team lead

Bucknell was not able to generate another score as they cruised to an easy 6–0 win. Bucknell's record raised to 3–3 as Penn dropped to 1–3.

Although Collins earned her first shutout of the season, the Lady Bison still must miss the outstanding netminding of Kim Fekel '93, who seperated her shoulder in last week's 3–1 victory over rival Lehigh. At the time, Fekel had been the fourth-rated goalkeeper in the Patriot League with an impressive .823 save percentage after totaling an .875 percentage in action last season.

The loss has been lessened due to the outstanding play of the Bucknell defense. This unit is anchored by co-captians Genine Streeper '92 and Shannon Smith '92 as well as junior Stephanie Porcaro '93, the same threesome the was the strength of last season's team.

The Bison take on a tough Colgate team tomorrow at home in their third Patriot League matchup. Colgate had an impressive 11–6–2 record last year as they won the Patriot League.

This season they have struggled early, as they are without their leading scorer in team history Shari Krasnoo, consequently they have a 3–3–1 record. Colgate does, however, still have a powerful offensive threat in Carrie Webster, who has four goals and an assist in Colgate's first seven games.

The Bison are also going to have to contend with the Colgate keeper Caroline Chambers, who was named to the 1990 all-Patriot League team and continues to excel, leading the Patriot League in save percentage, as she has only allowed 1.30 goals a game.

Following the one-game homestand, the Bison take to the road Wednesday to challange the Villanova Wildcats.

Female student sexually assaulted last night on Rooke Chapel path

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A female Bucknell student was sexually assaulted last night, but managed to spray her unidentified attacker with mace.

Called to the scene several minutes later, public safety officers searched the area between Rooke Chapel and the Langone Center where the assault occurred but could not locate the suspect.

According to Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCerchio, the student had just returned a University vehicle to the carpool parking lot at 10:52 p.m. and began walking up the central path between Rooke Chapel and the Langone Center when she was approached by a white male in his early 20's.

The stranger attempted to start a conversation with her, asking the location of a certain fraternity. He could not remember the name, except that it had an "omega" in it and had either burned down or been closed down, DeCerchio said. Suspicious, the student pointed toward fraternity row and continued walking up the hill.

The suspect followed her for 10 or 15 feet, and placed "his hand underneath her skirt on her backside," said DeCerchio. The student then sprayed the assailant in the face and chest area with mace.

As the suspect fled down the hill, the student ran up to Freas Hall and then over to the Langone Center. She reported the incident to the switchboard operators who contacted Public Safety at 10:57 p.m.

Three officers in patrol cars and two officers on foot swept the area but found nothing. The search continued throughout the night and the East Buffalo Township Police issued a description of the suspect. DeCerchio also asked Evangelical and Geisenger Hospitals to watch for patients seeking treatment for mace inhalation. An emergency mailing describing the assailant will be distributed today and crime alert notices will also be posted. A composite sketch will be available by next week.

The suspect is described as a white male, in his early 20's, 5' 5" or 5' 6", medium build. His hair is light brown or dark blond, short on the sides and long in the back; his face appeared slightly puffy and pock-marked. He wore a pink or light-colored T-shirt, worn blue jeans, and light sneakers.

DeCerchio asked that anyone who notices or remembers seeing a person fitting this description or smelling of mace (a distinctive petroleum smell) should contact his office. Any information would be welcome and confidential.

Another incident invloving a suspicious male took place last night but DeCerchio "could not speculate on whether the two were connected." At approximately 11:05 p.m., a female Bucknell student reported that an unidentified male followed her for about a block while she walked down 6th Street to St. Louis Street.

The student entered her house before the individual had a chance to make contact with her. He was described as a white male, 5' 8", short light brown hair, unshaven face, medium build, wearing a white T-shirt and jeans.

DeCerchio stressed that all members of the campus community should use caution when travelling at night and listed several improvements to campus safety to be implemented in the near future.

The results of an outdoor-lighting survey conducted this week will be acted on soon, and DeCerchio is considering placing emergency phones in all parking lots.

An escort service run by Greek organizations should be in place by the end of October, to complement the university's current service.

BSG, FLAG move to hire counselor for gays, lesbians, and bisexuals

BY MICKI HAMILTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

At its meeting last Sunday, the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) voted in favor of a motion advocating that the University create a paid position for a counselor of gays, lesbians, and bisexuals.

The executive officers of BSG presented the motion at the request of members of Friends of Lesbians and Gays (FLAG). In its meetings, FLAG has discussed this same proposal.

Megan Karakelian '92, first vice president of BSG, said that involving the congress, which is representative of the entire campus, puts the issue into the mainstream. She said, "I feel it is really important that the voices of all students on campus are heard and the BSG's passing of this motion shows that they too support this idea."

Melissa White '94, member of FLAG, believes that this minority of students needs a place on campus, just like the international students have an advisor and women have a resource center. Because gay, lesbian, and bisexual students lack this recognition, they do not officially have a voice on campus, according to White.

She said, "If the University believes in the rights of gay, lesbian, and bisexual people, than the administration will work for the same kind of advocacy available to women, people of color, and international students."

At Wednesday's meeting, FLAG members expressed their satisfaction with the BSG's approval of the motion. Barbara Shailor, vice president of student services, was present to listen to members' concerns about hiring an advocate of gay, lesbian and bisexual rights.

FLAG students, as well as some faculty and administration, expressed frustration for having to shoulder a responsibility which they feel belongs to the University.

Members said that FLAG is not trained to properly counsel gay, lesbian, and bisexual students in need and that a person should be hired to perform this duty.

Some suggested that if the University hired such a counselor, he or she would have to be a person that had the same sexual preference because that person would adequately understand the feelings that a gay, lesbian, or bisexual student was feeling.

According to one FLAG member, the strongest argument for hiring such an advisor is the number of gay, lesbian or bisexual students who transfer out of Bucknell or even attempt suicide because they feel alienated in this environment.

Richard Mannarino—The Bucknellian

As executive officers of BSG Mare Rassmussen '92, second vice president, and Vanessa Mayo '92, treasurer, helped draft the motion which would provide an adviser for gays, lesbians, and bisexuals.

In discussions during both the FLAG and BSG meetings, students pointed out that an advocate could plan educational programs to try to curb some of the violence that members of the community inflict on gay, lesbian, and bisexual students.

Members of both FLAG and the executive board of BSG cited incidents of violence which have occurred against students associated with FLAG.

COGL reviews itself

BY JOHN GODBOUT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Council on Greek Life (COGL), which met last week to analyze the ratings it gave to eight campus fraternity and sorority chapters this summer, will soon evaluate its own validity.

As a subcommittee of the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA), COGL will undergo revisions as its parent committee attempts to reorganize in accordance with recommendations from the Trustee Implementation Plan (TIP).

According to Gerald Commerford, assistant dean of housing, a specified subcommittee will revise the "statement of relationship" in the evaluation process. The revisions have not yet been started, but the group plans to submit the new outline of purpose and procedure before the end of the current semester.

COGL admits that it has weaknesses and are counting on the subcommittee to correct any deficiencies. The members would like to keep the rating system the same, but define more clearly exactly what is expected in each of the categories.

George Exner, professor of mathematics, said that the rating system consists of "extremely minimal standards" which are weakly enforced. Exner served on the council for one year as a liaison between COGL and CCA.

"Presently, the biggest weakness I see is that the group that does the evaluating does not have the authority to impose sanctions or programs on a group that has failed to meet the standards," said Commerford.

Under the current system, the Committee on Student Conduct assigns disciplinary sanctions to chapters after COGL's evaluation hearings.

The time period in which the evaluation takes place is also being reconsidered. One possibility is that the period would be changed from the current January 1 to January 1, to March 1 to March 1. It is also an option for the Council to evaluate chapters on a semi-annual basis, instead of every year, giving the chapters more time to correct any problems.

"I cannot officially comment on what the changes will be not because they're confidential, but simply because they have not been made yet," commented Commerford.

Exner pointed out several other problems which the council should address. "Remember that the evaluation process is being run in front of a stacked council," he said. According to Exner, at least half of the 16 member council include members of Greek organizations.

"The committee ought to be composed of a broad slice of the community," said Exner.

Presently COGL evaluates each chapter annually on its progress in about twenty areas of concern. The council looks at chapter membership, maintenence, and community awareness programs, among other

Skunk population rises; BU calls exterminator

BY LARS BRUNS

The problem has been getting worse. Locals claim that the construction around Lewisburg township is bringing them out. They like to sneak around and hide in odd places. Fraternities seem to attract them.

No, it's not the freshman guys out for a good time, it's our favorite striped animal, Pepé le Pew. It seems that there are two factors that have brought the skunks to Bucknell. Not only is the increased building over the past five years decreasing the skunk's habitat, but people are also neglecting to take care of their trash properly.

When left alone, skunks "Do their business and go away," according to Jeffrey Levitan, Animal Control Officer with the East Buffalo Township and Lewisburg Borough Police Departments. "Skunks are naturally scavengers and they just want to be left alone," he said.

Unfortunately, skunks have managed to find their way into three of the fraternities uphill. According to Levitan, he recently received a call from the Tau Kappa Epsilon house for skunk removal. He reported to the house and found a skunk "trapped in a kitchen closet," according to Levitan. After setting a trap and coaxing the skunk towards the door, the skunk was removed from the house and taken away.

Levitan said that "Skunks are attracted to food and garbage, and when basement doors are left open, it's an invitation to a problem." Levitan said that his first visit was free, but if he has to remove another skunk due to open doors, "I'll charge five dollars a head."

It was not long before Levitan was called back to TKE and was asked to remove another skunk. When he arrived, he "asked for five dollars per brother," to which he was told that no one had any money. He left without the skunk and has not yet been called back to TKE.

Levitan has also helped out some brothers from Chi Phi, where he assisted them in removing a things. Ratings are awarded on a scale of one to four, with one being excellent and four failing.

"In general, the system seems very bureaucratic. It's fair in that it rates all Greek organizations the same, but it is very inefficient in that it is difficult to ascertain what it does to improve the Greek system as a whole," said Doug Lebda '92, president of Delta Upsilon.

Eight chapters received ratings of three, which mandates a hearing in front of COGL. At the hearing, the organizations attempt to have their ratings moved up to twos. A second three can place that chapter on probation, and requires corrective measures to be taken.

"The Council determined it would be unfair to release that information without notifying the chapter in advance," commented Commerford. "That [policy] could change, but we won't know until the subcommittee makes their revisions."

Despite the possibility for punitive action, support from Greeks is generally strong. Many fraternity and sorority presidents see the evaluation as something that helps the efficiency of their chapters.

Sharon Bird, president of Delta Gamma feels "the system helps because it gives us an idea of what we're doing, in terms of programming and other things we have to do. It's a way for the school to check up on us and tell us how we're doing."

"It's a pretty accurate system because it's a quantitative measure of judgement," said Susan Ellison, president of Kappa Kappa Gamma. "The number means something, and people will work to get a better number," she said.

COGL is composed of an array of faculty, administration and alumni. The diverse group not only points out weaknesses, but also highlights strengths.

"It's definitely an asset to get direction from someone who's been around the block before," said Trevor Wilson, president of Theta Chi. "It's good for the school and also for the house, in terms of chapter operations."

violence occurs," said Sarah Pryor '92, member of FLAG.

Even if the University does look into hiring a counselor for these students, funding needed to start this project and to then mantain a budget may prove to be problematic.

Shailor said, "The University is currently in a position of financial constraint; this year we only had a two percent increase in the operating budget."

Also, as members of the University begin to review this suggestion, the purpose of such an advisor needs to be clarified.

Neither BSG nor FLAG has answered questions such as how this position should be implemented, who should be recruited, and whether the person should be a counselor or more curricularly-oriented.

Nevertheless, students who support this project have expressed their belief that the need for such a person far exceeds the details.

Currently, any gay, lesbian, or bisexual student who needs to talk to someone can seek assistance through FLAG or Psychological Services.

Chapters sponsor risk management session

BY SUSAN ELLISON

Last Wednesday, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Sigma Chi co-sponsored a workshop entitled "Greek Smarts." Jean Schmidt, an attorney from New York City, presented a risk management workshop which focused on issues concerning Greek life at Bucknell.

Schmidt introduced her lecture with an overview of the legal system. She outlined the differences between criminal and civil law, focusing on negligence.

Following this introduction, questions were solicited from the audience. Issues concerning alcohol and hazing were most commonly asked.

Schmidt explained that any given accident involving alcohol can result in law suits being brought against Bucknell, the national fraternity organization, the entire chapter, and the chapter president, advisor, and social chair.

Many questions were asked concerning the Interfraternity Council's BYOB (bring your own beer) policy. Schmidt explained that the fraternity hosting the BYOB party is still liable for an accident at the party or following the party. The BYOB policy, however, lessens the likelihood of the particular fraternity being found negligent by a court of law.

She emphasized the importance of controlling the party so that no accidents occur. Regardless of whether a fraternity is found negligent, the fact that a suit is brought against the group will damage the reputation of that organization, she said.

Schmidt suggested hiring non-members as bartenders and security monitors in order to lift some liability from the organization hosting the party.

The discussion which focused on hazing was rather controversial. The audience understood the liabilities surrounding hazing, but had a difficult time defining what constitutes hazing.

Sharon Bird, president of Delta Gamma, defined hazing as, "anything that sets the person aside as a pledge." Schmidt agreed with this definition and added, "If your actions cause harm, you are responsible."

She continued by saying that "it doesn't matter if the pledge wants to do a particular activity. If it is hazing, it is against the law."

Approximately 150 members of Greek organizations attended "Greek Smarts." Associate Dean of Residential Life Ed Dadez, Dean of Students John Dunlop, and Lois Heenehan, advisor to Kappa Kappa Gamma, were also present.

The workshop was helpful in determining the legal responsibilities of Greek organizations on campus. The intent of this program was to assist the IFC and Panhel in determining future policies concerning alcohol and hazing.

Fraternity cuts down trees from golf course

BY THERESA KANE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

According to Charles Lincicome, the greenskeeper of the golf course, members of a fraternity destroyed 15 trees and severely damaged two others early last week.

Lincicome stated that at "a very conservative estimate" the damage totals $2350. Ed Dadez, associate dean for residential life, stated that "a fraternity has admitted responsibility" for the damage discovered last Wednesday to the trees in the 18th tee area of the golf course.

Dadez stated that he is "upset the event occurred" but praises the fraternity for showing a "higher level of responsibility." According to Dadez, shortly after being questioned the undisclosed fraternity contacted him to admit guilt.

Dadez said that there was a "miscommunication" between the fraternity president and the "tree-gathering committee," which was collecting decorations for that fraternity's Saturday night theme party.

The trees were to be taken from elsewhere and not from the golf course. According to Dadez, the fraternity should have spoken to a private landowner in such an incident.

Dadez stated that the fraternity is working with the golf course to "decide how compensation is to be made."

Lincicome said that if that compensation includes service, the fraternity brothers may be "working in the sand traps" and "trimming."

Dadez hopes that the perpetrators will "realize the damage" that they have caused. He stated that he wants them to know that "a lot of people have a lot of pride in this golf course and they have taken away some of that pride."

According to Lincicome, one of the trees destroyed was a 25-year-old dogwood which "takes awhile to replace."

Higher education in the 1990s: Colleges join the business world

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

In Bucknell's Introduction to Management class, students set up a corporation which earns money, and the profits are donated to a charitable cause.

Last of three parts

Bucknell may soon follow this model itself; in doing so, the University would join a increasing number of private colleges and universities in this growing trend.

The premise is simple: by setting up a for-profit, stock corporation, in which all shares are owned by the university, the institution can provide needed services for the campus and the community, while earning money for the institution at the same time.

The idea is not new to large public universities, which often operate hotels, conference centers, industrial parks, or to large private institutions such as Harvard University, the largest commercial landlord in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Small, private institutions such as Bucknell have been aloof to such trends, but many are now following their larger cousins into the world of commerce.

For such institutions, for-profit development corporations offer a way to embark on projects which not only enhance the community, but also provide a potential source of much-needed revenue.

As the college-age population declines, competition for students is increasing, and raising tuition too rapidly could prove deadly in a buyer's market. Instead, colleges and universities must search non-tuition sources of revenue to counter rising costs.

Retirement complex revived

Once again, the University is considering the construction of Bucknell Village, a 75-unit complex proposed for 25 acres west of Route 15, between Bucknell West and the Golf Course.

The goal of Bucknell Village project, Sojka explained, is to provide an option for alumni who wish to retire in Lewisburg and take advantage of all of the educational and cultural amenities of the University, while broadening students' education by giving them the opportunity to interact extensively with the retirees, who will bring different perspectives and experiences to the University community.

The concept first surfaced nearly a decade ago, according to Barry Maxwell, vice president for administration. At that time, the Board of Trustees examined and shelved the proposal, citing the weak housing market and high inflation rate at that time.

Two years ago the project was resurrected and a committee of trustees and administrators was formed to examine the project's feasibility, Maxwell explained. During that time the University has surveyed alumni to determine their interest in a retirement community. According to Maxwell, after viewing the responses to the questionnaire, the committee concluded, "We believe we would have a small market who would be interested" in the project.

The University has retained an architectural firm, which has produced a preliminary architectural study, including a site plan, typical floor plans, elevations and estimated construction costs.

Also in the draft stages is a detailed financial feasibility study being prepared by a unit of the accounting firm KPMG Peat Marwick which specializes in financial assessment of retirement communities.

Maxwell also said the University has entered discussions with the Lewisburg United Methodist Homes about managing the facility. "Bucknell will not get into the health care business," he said.

Maxwell said the committee examining the project's feasibility will make a recommendation to the Board of Trustees at their next meeting, Nov. 8-9, and the trustees will decide whether to begin construction on the project's first phase. The committee has not yet reached its own decision, Maxwell stressed, and it is still possible they could recommend the project be shelved once again.

University hopes for profit

President Gary Sojka said the project is being considered because, "its the right kind of a mix of for-profit and for other things."

However, neither Sojka or Maxwell denied that profit is nonetheless one part of the University's interest in the project.

Maxwell said, "The driving force and fundamental reason [for considering Bucknell Village] is that it offers the potential for a non-tuition source of revenue to assist in the operating budget."

Desite recent large increases in the University's endowment, Sojka said the University "is still ten percent tuition driven. To what extent do you ask students to pay?" He concluded, "If it provides a better environment for students, it's justified."

F&M goes to the mall

At Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster, the beginning of the fall semester also brought the opening of College Square, a new multi-million retail and office complex located on the edge of the college's campus.

The complex includes such valuable student services as the College's bookstore, a restaurant and food court, and a laundromat, and is connected to the campus via a footbridge across a major highway.

Jeanne Ritter
As colleges and universities explore new methods of fundraising, some have set up for-profit corporations. Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster, PA has recently built the College Square, a commercialized shopping center for the college community. Profits will defray rising tuition costs.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING
A+ A.M. Best Co. — AAA Standard & Poor's — Aaa Moody's

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.

You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?

A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Three companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER-PERFECT.

TIAA received A+ from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Standard & Poor's and Aaa from Moody's Investors Service. These ratings reflect TIAA's reliable claims-paying ability, exceptional financial strength, superior investment performance, and low expenses. With its guaranteed rate of return and opportunity for dividends, TIAA is one of less than ten companies, out of 2,200 nationwide, that received these highest marks.

CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.

For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity with four different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.

Together, TIAA and CREF form the nation's largest private retirement system, with over $95 billion in assets and more than 70 years of experience serving the education community. For over one million people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

Colloquy meets with mixed success

BY KENT LINDEMAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Last weekend's "American Dream" colloquy drew mixed response among its campus participants. While some believed that the event was very successful in sparking serious thought and dialogue, others questioned the shape and status of future colloquies at Bucknell.

Football player-feminist Jackson Katz, who addressed questions of gender relations, drew the largest colloquy audience and attention during the weekend. William Boswell, director of cultural events at the Weis Center and scheduling coordinator for the colloquy, believed Katz's message to be very poignant.

Boswell stated, "During the response period after the lecture, a woman from campus told about how her father abused her. This nailed home everything that Mr. Katz had said and proves that this is not a problem that is far removed from this campus," contended Boswell.

Student coordinator Cary Champlin '94 says that the aftermath of Katz' discussion was extremely educational. "Personal testimony was the truth and the light of discussion," asserted Champlin. "People talked about personal experiences of abuse both openly and candidly," she said.

Wendy Shaver '92 identified both positive and negative aspects of Katz's talk. She said that it was good that athletic teams were required to attend because, "Katz's message could be given to different people who might not usually attend a lecture series." However, Shaver was quick to point out that many people in the audience, not necessarily the team members, did not stay for the question and answer period. "The people that were left were probably the ones who least needed to hear the message that was being conveyed," contended Shaver.

Cary Champlin '94, one of the student co-ordinators of the colloquoy, said, "The response and support from all the student organizations is what made it work."

Boswell said that this year's colloquy was a real learning experience after not having a colloquy for almost a decade. He commented, "While many of the events went extremely well, others were disappointing. It was clear that events that had a campus constituency, such as environmental and personal freedom issues, fared better than those that did not."

Boswell added, "By doing a colloquy for the first time in ten years, we learned how much the campus has changed over that period."

The intended aim of the "American Dream" colloquy was to spark dialogue and serious thought among its participants, but some felt it fell well short of this premise. Reverend James Hammerlee, University chaplain alleged that students were partly to blame. "Students seemed hesitant to express their opinions in several of the sessions."

skunk from a storage room.

"Unfortunately, someone had an idea to shoot the animal with a pellet gun before I arrived. It took me four hours to remove the frightened skunk from the room," said Levitan.

Chi Phi was not as lucky as TKE as they were blessed with the odiferous scent of the skunk.

The fraternities are not the only places the skunks visit. Levitan has also removed many skunks from the golf course. He reports that "There are quite a few of them from the golf course."

Levitan claims that there is a severe overpopulation of skunks and that is the reason why those caught must be destroyed. Relocation used to be considered, but the skunks have become too overpopulated. "Relocation doesn't solve or correct the problem, it just moves it to someone else," said Levitan.

Levitan receives most complaints from local residents and only a few from Bucknell. His best advice is to "leave them alone and they'll do the same for you. Just let them do their business."

Levitan can be reached at 524-8711. Also, the office of public saftey will continue to refer calls to him.

Poetry reading coming to BU

Bucknell will present a poetry reading by Miroslav Holub on Sunday, October 6, at 8 p.m. in Bucknell Hall.

Holub has published 13 books of poetry and four books of prose and essays and is currently the chief research immunologist at the Institute for Clinical and Experimental Medicine in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Holub has been called the most important poet in Europe today, combining scientific thought with everyday life in his poetry.

This reading is open to anyone wishing to attend.

Guest dancer arrives at BU

Guest dance artist Peter Roel, who is currently dancing with the Elisa Monte Dance Company in New York City, will be in residence at Bucknell from Sunday, October 6, to Friday, October 11.

Roel will hold a master class in modern dance on Tuesday, October 8, from 3 to 4:30 p.m. in Tustin Dance Studio. To register for this class, open to the public, call Shellie Cash-Muller at 524-1235.

BU professor receives award

Harold Pinnick, professor of chemistry, has been chosen to receive the Cyanamid Faculty Award from the American Cyanamid Company.

This award recognizes excellence in the advancement of the science and art of chemical synthesis and in training young people in its practice.

The award of $5,000 will be used to continue Professor Pinnick's research on the synthesis of pharmacologically interesting compounds, such as cannabinoid analogs and various alkaloids.

Influenza vaccines offered

Influenza vaccines will be available weekdays for one month beginning Tuesday, October 1, at the Student Medical Service between 9 and 11 a.m. and 2 and 4 p.m.

Annual vaccination against the flu virus is highly recommended by the U.S. Public Health Service for all individuals at increased risk of adverse consequences from infections of the lower respiratory tract.

To learn more about these "high risk" groups, contact the Student Medical Center.

Deficits affect Amherst

Amherst College says it needs to make new budget cuts to eliminate a deficit of between $500,000 and $800,000 accumulated during the 1990-91 year.

The Physical Plant took much of the budget cut, as its budget was reduced by $500,000. An important consequence of that cut is that complete cleanings of social dorm bathrooms will take place only five times per year. During the regular cleanings, custodial personnel will not clean the sinks or mirrors.

Although this has not caused any layoffs of personnel, there are fewer visiting faculty this year than last, and some staff positions vacated by attrition were either eliminated or shifted from 12- to 9-month jobs.

Evan Specter, member of the committee which will consider the necessary cuts, commented, "We're going to be looking at creative ways to reduce costs and save money."

More reporting of campus rapes

More students are reporting rapes occurring on campus, say Temple University officials. Within a four-day period, two women came forward and told police of their date and gang rapes.

The University looks upon this as an affirmation that educational programs on the subject seem to be working. They also feel that the opening of the rape topic causes persons to become more aware of the problem, therefore ultimately causing a greater amount of precautions being taken.

The University of Rhode Island has also noticed an increase in the rape reports, and a Philadelphia rape crisis center says that it has counseled women "from virtually every campus in the city."

Tuition hike causes unrest

The recent 15% tuition increase at Clarion University is causing some very real problems for those attending the university.

The record increase, the students feel, should be blamed upon the state, the governor, and the General Assembly, as they did not increase funds for the State System enough, causing the burden of increased cost to be picked up by the tuition.

Edward J. Nolan, Director of Governmental Relations for the Chancellor's office of SSHE, states that he strives to "begin the year resolved to work to hold tuition increases to a minimum."

Beehive construction allows students to directly observe "social insects"

BY DEB MANASSE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The recent construction of the new biology building and the remodeling of the psychology lab at Bucknell include the introduction of some unusual facilities for the study of bees.

The buildings have come complete with holes in the walls, just the perfect setting for the seven observation hives that are being built on campus. The addition of these hives, along with the completion of a functioning apiary in his own backyard, have Biology Professor David Fletcher quite excited.

"Social insects, and especially bees, are my animals for investigating the evolution of social behavior among animals," said Fletcher, a man with a clearly unusual affection for his six-legged subjects. "They are very cute creatures indeed."

Fletcher's apiary has the capacity to house forty hives, although it is presently holding only twelve. However, the development of the apiary, which has been in the making for nearly four years, has not gotten to this stage without a host of setbacks.

The primary problem the project has faced is a series of attacks by black bears. Although many local residents and Bucknellians may be unaware of the prevalence of black bears in this area, Professor Fletcher can assure anyone interested that they are far from rare. "And, as you know from Pooh bear," he emphasized, "Bears will do anything for honey."

One late afternoon, Professor Fletcher found one such hungry animal gazing at him through his kitchen window. Although the bear's first attempt to infiltrate the apiary was hampered by the electric fence set up to keep such unwelcome visitors away, the determined creature could not be deterred for long.

"It came back after dark and jumped clear over the fence," said Fletcher. "I don't know how it achieved that."

A bear attack such as this one can have serious consequences for the apiary. Such a creature can easily knock over several hives, releasing the bees.

Second only to the problem of bears is that of tracheal mite disease, which unfortunately struck at the point at which Fletcher had built up the apiary to 32 colonies. "This debilitating disease wiped out 31 of the 32 colonies," said Fletcher; "it put us right back to square one."

He has, since then, attempted to overcome this problem through a dual system of partially resistant stock and treatment to control the mites.

Coinciding with the completion of the apiary is the introduction of two bee labs on campus. "Suddenly from having no bee lab we have two bee labs," said Fletcher, "one in the biology building and one in the psychology lab."

The lab in the newly constructed biology building can house four observation hives, while the nearly completed renovations to the psychology lab will allow for three observation hives.

These glass walled hives allow on-lookers to see all that is happening inside the hive and constitute, according to Fletcher, "a wonderful number for the research we would like to do."

However, professors are not the only ones who will be able to make use of the new facilities. Students seem to be very intrigued by honeybees. This fact is evidenced by the number of students who have worked with the bees through Professor Fletcher's course on social insects in which the honey bee is the primary insect if study.

Although students are welcome to remain unendangered observers during outings to the apiary, many choose to handle the bees directly. "I am thrilled by how quickly the students who have been through beehives with me have learned to handle the bees themselves," remarks Fletcher. Although he obliges students to wear veils because of the danger of being stung in the eye, and encourages them to cover their ankles, an area to which bees seem particularly partial, Fletcher does not allow students who work with the bees to wear gloves.

According to Fletcher, gloves tend to make people clumsy, sending the bees into attack mode. "If there is one thing that honey bees cannot tolerate, it is clumsiness," he warned.

Although he admits that his promise to students that they would not be stung during the semester has already proven unfulfilled, he hopes that students will find some consolation in the fact that, as he puts it, "everybody finds a sting much worse in the anticipation than in the event."

Of course, an afternoon with a hive full of buzzing insects is not for everyone and bees are undoubtedly creatures that are destined to remain misunderstood by many as nothing more than summertime pests.

But Fletcher is quick to defend his winged friends, pointing out that not all insects are created equal. "Bees are people, ants are critters," he said with a grin on his face. "One can get very fond of bees."

He also added that, "Overall, I felt there was a lack of deep dialogue." Boswell agreed, saying, "I was sorry that the events did not spark more controversy and I noticed campus homogeneity toward many of the issues that were being addressed."

Perceptions about the degree of campus involvement in the colloquy elicited different responses from those were closely involved with its organization.

Champlin points to the wide variety of campus organizations that sponsored events as a measure of the colloquy's success.

"The response and support from all the different student organizations is what made it work," said Champlin.

Boswell notes that while he was pleased with the organizational involvement, he was a bit disappointed by lack of student interest in some cases. However, he was quite philosophical when asked how to get the attention of more students.

Paraphrasing a quote given by Dr. Michael Gordon during his "Gift of Greekdom" lecture last Saturday, Boswell explained, "The students that showed up were the important students. You can't always be interested in those that you didn't reach with your message."

Hammerlee was slightly more adamant about campus participation in the colloquy. He asserted that "a large and important segment of the campus wasn't involved or reached."

Hammerlee was particularly annoyed at The Bucknellian's lack of coverage of the colloquy events. "I was flabbergasted that they didn't print a schedule of events last weekend when the colloquy was just getting underway," he said. He added that there was an article in the paper about gay protests and rights in Wisconsin and "here we were discussing the same thing on campus the very next day and there was no mention of it."

Hammerlee also stated, "If the editors of The Bucknellian, who are supposed to be student leaders, don't perceive the colloquy as important, it doesn't receive the needed attention in print or by the student body."

He did acknowledge that this was certainly not the only problem of this year's colloquy and admitted that he did not have an adequate solution to "why the colloquy didn't reach a larger number of people with so many campus groups involved."

At this point the future of colloquy at Bucknell is unclear. Hammerlee wonders if this sort of forum fits the times. He explained that colloquies have been more successful when there was strife on a national level.

"It seems easier to elicit strong opinions from students when they feel threatened by an issue that hits close to home, as Vietnam did," Hammerlee contended.

"While we know that American economic and social problems are important, they are not as threatening because they often seem too far removed from our daily lives," Hammerlee said.

Champlin strongly disagrees with Hammerlee and believes that the colloquy is better suited to the present day. "Back in the 1960's and 70's everyone was doing this sort of thing," she stated. "Now the whole stereotype is that people are apathetic and with such events as colloquy, it is time to prove everyone wrong," concluded Champlin.

The complex is owned by the John Marshall Investment Corporation (JMIC), a wholly-owned subsidiary of F&M. Financing was secured by JMIC, which will pay back the loan with rents collected from the commercial tenants.

Richard Kneedler, F&M president, said profit "is really not the motivation for what we're doing. By and large, our philosophy is F&M does not get into business." He said any profit from the project "will not be significant to the college in any way."

The idea of building a retail complex was conceived, Kneedler said, because, "We've never had a commercial neighborhood adjacent to the campus...it's a little bit isolated."

The College created JMIC to build College Square after other options were exhausted. "We looked around for a developer and couldn't find one," Kneedler said, "and we didn't want to give up ownership of the land."

"An additional advantage," Kneedler explained, "is that the property is fully in the taxpaying mode," providing needed property tax revenues to local government.

Ethical questions raised

Some of the same ethical questions raised at Franklin & Marshall have also been raised at Bucknell as the University explores the feasibility of Bucknell Village.

Sojka said members of the University community were surveyed about their attitudes on business ventures by the University. The results, he said, were very clear: "They told us to go ahead and explore Bucknell Village, but don't do anything else."

LVC renews community

At Lebanon Valley College in Annville, PA, officials hope to use for-profit development to improve the surrounding community.

President John Synodinos explained that the College formed the Quittapahilla Development Corporation in order to develop two run-down historic warehouses near the center of Annville, a community roughly half the size of Lewisburg.

The Corporation is currently seeking financing for the project, which would convert the warehouses into a condominium project.

Synodinos said the College would turn over ownership of the property to Quittapahilla when financing is secured. Any profits would revert to the College, which is the Corporation's sole stockholder.

"Our purpose is not to make money," Synodinos said, "but rather to restore buildings and enhance the community, to bring some people downtown."

Guns N' Roses uses its illusion effectively

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The rise to the top has been quick for Guns N' Roses, frightfully quick. Just a few short years ago they were complete unknowns scrounging for playing time in Los Angeles' clubs. As their following increased, they received a record deal from Geffen Records, a major label. They scored with a big hit, "Welcome to the Jungle," whose grinding rifts made clear their "tough shit" mentality. Suddenly, they found themselves opening for Aerosmith on the "Permanent Vacation Tour." Another big hit, "Sweet Child O' Mine," and they became a legitimate act on their own. A few months later on their follow-up album Lies, they released one of the most popular rock songs ever, "Patience," and Guns N' Roses became America's most popular rock band. Is it really this simple?

© 1991 The David Geffen Company

Behind the Curtains

As appalling as their success has been, there is an even more daunting flip side to the Guns N' Roses story that has overshadowed their musical promise. They have been the subject of nearly every pertinent publication in this country in their brief history, but as we know all too well, it has not been because of their congeniality. Let's face it, Guns N' Roses has not done anything that distinguished in the studio to warrant their appeal. In fact, it has been argued that their abilities are marginal at best. What is the true source of their intrigue? They are the bad boys of rock n' roll. They have been embraced with open arms, by a part of society that has twisted media exploitation into a formula for success. Guns N' Roses are not the tragic figures that fans have made them to be, although their story is definitely approaching tragedy. In truth, the obvious problems that exist within this band are demonstrative of the larger and more serious dilemmas that plague the very core of our country. Guns N' Roses embodie what they criticize.

Let's take a long hard look at some of their recent non-musical endeavors. To begin with, the band's self-proclaimed battle with drugs and alcohol has been a serious one. It has already resulted in the dismissal of the group's original drummer, Steve Adler, who is presently suing the band for his drug addiction. He asserts that the band had pushed him into the habit that resulted in his inability to perform adequately. As both lead singer Axl Rose and guitarist Slash have affirmed on separate occasions, substance abuse has kept this group perpetually close to disintegration.

The Issue of Violence

Their live performances have already led to bans in a number of cities across the country. Guns N' Roses concerts have also resulted in frequent tumultuous affairs causing widespread vandalism. Police have had a field day with underage drinkers and drug busts at these performances. One of the first concerts of the present tour ended in a riot, as Rose threw himself into a crowd of fans that were harassing several front row spectators. Was Rose so wrong? Maybe not, but these are the type of people his band is drawing to their concerts.

Let's not forget the ridiculous conflict that has materialized with another popular band Motley Crue. In what seems to be an adolescent war of words over a girlfriend, numerous threats have been exchanged between Axl Rose and Crue's Vince Neil. Things have gotten so ridiculous that both have requested a media-covered fight in Atlantic City to settle the feud. Each has forecasted the other's doom and their own availability to fight "anytime."

In all fairness to Rose, who has been ostensibly harassed by a relentless female fan in recent months, there has been a very serious recurring theme in some of Guns N' Roses music. The lyrics have often perpetuated the mindset of male domination, if not outright sexual violence to women. O.K. they are not the first rock band to do so, so why pick on them? The reason is that Guns N' Roses has had such terrific exposure. What they say must have a tremendous impact on the whole generation of youths that not only buy their albums, but literally idolize them. This problem poses an enormous threat to the small headway that has been made in the area of women's equality.

Use Your Illusion I&II

Despite these considerations about America's most heralded rock band, fans voraciously awaited the release of the two new albums, Use Your Illusion, volumes I and II, whose release was delayed countless times over the course of a year. Why the hold-up? Undoubtedly because of the previously mentioned drug problems that have caused immeasurable internal conflict; but also because of Rose's perfectionist ranting and dissatisfaction that resulted in the use of several mixing and recording engineers, none of whom seemed suitable to him.

Speaking of the new albums, only Guns N' Roses would have the audacity to release two separate recordings at once, thirty songs in all. Would you believe that after two weeks in the stores these albums will clearly overtake Michael Jackson's Thriller as the biggest sellers of all time? It's really not that surprising. Just another example of how counter productive press can make anyone a sensation.

Taking a closer look at the music itself, there is no doubt that the initial musical promise of the band is further developed in these albums. There are a number of excellent songs collectively. What seems to be the most insightful, if not the best tune the band has ever made, is the first track on Volume II, "Civil War." This re-release of a single, now about a year old, is a well-conceived examination of the internal strife within this country. If only they could always be this perceptive.

There are two money songs, as I call them, that are already well on their way to becoming big hits. The first, "Don't Cry," appears on both Volumes I and II with slightly altered lyrics. It's one of those wishy-washy ventures that will neatly fit into the pop format. However, the other track, "November Rain," is a considerably more convincing ballad that rallies to a very impressive close.

There is, on the whole, a lot more diversity on these albums than in the previous two efforts. The use of keyboards effectively adds a new dimension to the bands sound, particularly on the tracks "14 Years," "Yesterdays," "The Garden," and "Breakdown," all of which are very agreeable sounding rockers. Slash has done a very good job with his guitarwork, especially on the song "Estranged." Even new drummer Matt Sorum, formerly of The Cult, seems right at home. His presence is felt on the appropriately flavored Terminator 2 theme, "You Could Be Mine."

There are two covers, one on each album. The McCartney classic "Live and Let Die" appears on Volume I and Dylan's "Knockin' On Heaven's Door" is featured on Volume II. Truthfully, both are very well-preformed and well-recorded. The only factor that may work against these otherwise very admirable efforts are Rose's vocals, which, while they are appealing to some listeners, are completely undesirable to others.

© 1991 The David Geffen Company
This graphic appears with the lyrics from "Pretty Tied Up" in Guns N' Roses' Use Your Illusion II album.

Despite a number of great songs, there are still the typically abrasive songs that are much like most of the needless garbage that appears on Appetite for Destruction. Songs like "Shotgun Blues," "Locomotive," and "Right Next Door to Hell" are a few that immediately come to mind. Moreover, it seems as though the band spends an enormous amount of time and energy defending its integrity and attitude. "Don't Damn Me" and "Bad Apples" are good examples, but never is Rose at his trash-mouthed worst than during "Get In the Ring," during which he tears apart the writers for numerous music oriented publications by name. What is at the root of the problem here is not so much his vulgar expressions or his accusations, but rather his attitude that every conflict has to be resolved by "Kicking your ass." Once again, an important message is conveyed to impressionable listeners. While we're on that subject, let us not forget the sexism in songs like "Back Off Bitch" and the glorified sexual violence in "Pretty Tied Up."

The Underlying Message?

It is apparent that Guns N' Roses has worked toward improving their sound in the Use Your Illusion albums, and they have done so appreciably well. Although, many of the dangerous images that brought the band to the forefront have remained, we must hear what the group has to say because, after all, we have made them who they are. It could be said that Guns N' Roses is using their "illusion" very effectively. In many respects this band is a loaded gun. Are they pointing the gun at their own heads and furthermore, are we pointing the gun at our own heads by issuing them our approval? No matter how good the music is, when you buy the albums, tickets, and paraphenalia of your favorite band, America, you are saying something very serious about yourselves. Will you stop to take a breath and think about what your heroes represent and what you in turn advocate?

Miles Davis dead at 65

BY CARL WALKER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Sunday was a day of mourning for the world of music. Trumpeter/composer Miles Davis died and left a musical past that is unlikely to be equalled in the future.

Davis went far beyond the trumpeter/composer he is usually recognized as. The man was a musical genius who strived for constant change in the world of jazz. Davis sparked the fusion revolution of the 1970's and 1980's, from whose effects we are still reeling.

But even more remarkable than Davis' musical career are the careers of other musicians he launched. Big jazz recording stars like Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, John McLaughin, Joe Zawinful, and dozens of others got their start with Davis; a whole host of musicians pay a respectful homage to him, such as trumpeter Winton Marsalis.

Davis, throughout the 1970's, adapted jazz to the world of rock-and-roll. He introduced a flamboyancy to the form and incorporated the sounds of electric instruments into his recordings, although he often played the straight Charlie Parkeresque bebop he was raised on.

Jazz will sorrowfully mourn his death, but can take solace in the fact that so many disciples will carry on his standards for change. Davis called his talent for change a "curse," but we know it only as a blessing.

ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENT

Weapons made into art and tools

BY MELISSA JERVIS

Melissa Jervis—The Bucknellian
International college members Shranita Amin, Joe LaFalce, Laurie Hicks, and Shawn Organ display several objects from the "Swords into Plowshares" exhibit. The exibit will be on display in the second floor display case of the Langone Center until next Friday.

Have you ever seen an oil lamp constructed from an anti-personnel bomb? An artificial leg which was once an airplane? Or sandals cut from abandoned jeep tires? The "Swords into Plowshares" exhibit on the second floor case in the Langone Center pays tribute to the people in French Indochina who have taken the bombs and other weapons of destruction and shaped them into useful everyday items. This exhibit is on loan from the Asia Resource Center of Washington, D.C. The exhibit has visited art museums, churches, and universities in many cities. Political science professor Gene Chenoweth, who is also an advisor for the international residential college, has worked with this organization and is friends with Don Luce, the center's director until this year. Through Professor Chenoweth, the international residential college is sponsoring this exhibit which has been here since the beginning of September and will remain until October 12. The objective is to allow us a glimpse of another part of the world and a dimension of the people's ingenuity in shaping the war to benefit their lives.

The title of the exhibit, "Swords to Plowshares," is inspired by Isaiah 4:4 which reads, "He shall judge between the nations, and impose terms on many peoples. They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; One nation shall not raise the sword against another, nor shall they train for war again." Chenoweth explained, "In the efforts of the people of French Indochina, we see a practical concrete expression of Isaiah, in that people take weapons and make something useful and creative and constructive out of them, whether it's a cattle fence, a crutch, or a bowl to eat your food out of or a gong for a Buddhist ceremony. They take swords, in a figurative poetic way and turn them in to something useful or beautiful or needed, plowshares." When villages in Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam were decimated by bombs and shells from above and tanks and soldiers rushing through, the rural people were left even more impoverished. They were forced to rely on the art of recycling war materials. "Looking at the simple everyday items, you suddenly realize the contrast in the technological development of those who made and used the weaponry, versus those who recycled the weapons into useful objects," Don Luce observes. The search through wreckage for useable scrap was very dangerous. According to Pat Hostetter-Martin, of the Mennonite Central Committee, which is still active in helping the area to recover, eight to ten percent of the munitions used in Indochina did not explode on impact. "There was, for a long time, in Vietnam a period of at least fifteen years after the war in which collecting scrap metal was a major activity. Reclaiming broken parts of the war assembling them in one place to get some money for them and then melting this down and turning it into useful civilian objects was quite an 'industry' in Vietnam,"says Chenoweth. Though this activity has been exhausted, there are still unexploded grenades and bombs being found, and every year, a few people are still injured in their discovery.

On exhibit are aluminum ladles, combs, chopsticks, spoons, water buckets, small woks, and serving dishes which have been hammered out of a downed airplanes. Bright rainbow colored strands of McNamara Line, used for electronic surveillance, were woven into handbags. There is a crutch, whose stem is from a U.S. B-52 bomber and the handle from a Russian weapon. Howitzer shells have become vases and melted into trays. A pagoda gong for use in Buddhist ceremony has been recast from artillery shells. The exhibit is worth a look, if only to see what our defense budget tax dollars have now become.

Keyboardist Tyranny to teach and perform

BY DOUGLAS HONABACH AND MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writers

"He's just a complete genius; he can really do anything... The way he plays is so complex and majestic; it's like watching a huge ocean liner pull out."

These are the words of musician Laurie Anderson spoken in reference to Jazz pianist/composer "Blue" Gene Tyranny. During the months of October and November this year, the music department will have this talented journeyman in residence. His visit is being sponsored by the Kushell Music Endowment which was established in 1971 by Charles J. and Isabella Kushell '27 to provide financial support for residencies and special programs for the department of music. While on campus, Tryanny will give two public performances, meet with various classes, coach a select group of student pianists, and work in and advise the Bucknell Electronic Music Studio.

A Texas native, Tyranny has been writing and performing for the past thirty years, spanning five decades. The composer of 60 works of his own, he has also produced, recorded and performed on many albums of various musicians. His work has been highly diversified. He has composed over 40 soundtracks, is a former keyboard player for Iggy Pop and the Stooges, and most recently the keyboardist on Laurie Anderson's latest album Strange Angels. These are only a few of his accomplishments.

In a feature article in the May 1990 Keyboard magazine, Tyranny describes how he arived at his name, "I though it would be interesting not to just be on stage playing rock and roll, but to do a theater piece along with it. Now, in Berkeley, the guy who invented the transistor [William Shockley] was giving these lectures about genetic inferiority—Nazi stuff. So I was thinking about genetic tyranny. At the time, Iggy and his band were into glitter rock, whereas my synpathies had always been with the working man, the blue collar guy. All this accumulated in this character I was creating, 'Blue' Gene Tyranny, which is actually just me trying to lay my soul on the line onstage."

"Blue" Gene Tyranny will be in residence during October and November. He will both teach and perform in two concerts while on campus.

Lopes survives graduation

BY CARL WALKER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

For most Bucknellians, when they think of campus bands, one band comes to the forefront: the eternal "Lopes, Trees and Grass", or simply "Lopes". It has been three years since the band made its debut, and, since then, it has become a staple to the fraternity party's diet.

However, Lopes is more than just the standard party band. It is a band that is willing to step out and take chances. Their songs are drawn out to accentuate the instrumental talent of the band; expect more than just the perfunctory guitar solo. They possess a unique blend of sounds including alto and tenor saxes, and Latin percussion. And Lopes has an excellent ear for tunes; they play music from great bands and generally stay away from the overplayed hits.

Lopes has become a perpetual music machine, surviving graduation to carry on the bad. The caretakers of Lopes are Jeff Ganguly, guitar; Matt Cummings, drums; and Brian Camfield, alto sax. Although Lopes lost keyboardist/lead vocalist Rod MacMahon and guitarist Chris Maiberger to graduation, they added singer/tenor saxophonist Hugh Young, keyboardist Jeff Zyneraski, bassist Mike Berman, and Latin percussionist Whitney Keene. Speaking on Young's replacement of Rod MacMahon, drummer Matt Cummings said, "What we lost in Rod's raunchy sound, we gained in Hugh's 'stud-puppetness'."

Integrity and talent are two words that come to my mind for a final summation of Lopes. They play their first show of the season Wednesday at 10pm in the Town Tavern.

Angel Heart haunts and holds viewers

-VIDEO REVIEW-

Angel Heart, Rated R.– Mickey Rourke plays private investigator Angel, who is caught in a bizarre series of murders while trying to locate Johnny Favorite, a wartime entertainer. The unedited version is available at video stores.

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Have you ever had the desire to see a really strange, albeit captivating, movie? Not exactly a horror film. Nor a drama. Not even a psychological thriller. Just a really weird movie? Then maybe you ought to grab Angel Heart off the shelf at the video store.

If you are at all familiar with Mickey Rourke (9 1/2 Weeks, Wild Orchid, Johnny Handsome), then you know he has a penchant for bizarre scripts. He got all he could handle with this one. In Angel Heart, Rourke plays the role of a war veteran, now private investigator, by the name of Angel, who is haunted by mysterious flashbacks to his soldier days. The opening is set in New York in the mid 1950's. The play on names continues when he is hired by Luis Cypher, portrayed by Robert DeNiro (Goodfellas, Awakenings, Deerhunter), to find a missing man named Johnny Favorite. Something about this job isn't right, but Angel is lured by money.

It should be noted that the viewer is exposed to enormous amounts of foreshadowing from the film's start. Only the most insightful viewer will catch on to the religious symbolism. In other words, don't watch this movie if you are going to be at all distracted. You will miss too much.

Angel's search leads him to New Orleans where he is stymied by the trail of death that follows him. His own life becomes jeopardized as he uncovers not the whereabouts of Johnny Favorite, but rather a voodoo ring that includes among others, Favorite's daughter Epiphany, played by Lisa Bonet (The Cosby Show, A Different World). The result is the sex scene that incurred Bill Cosby's wrath, not to mention a denouement that will leave your jaw on the floor.

This isn't the sort of movie one comes to enjoy in an endearing fashion, but it will undoubtedly move you.

Czech poet to give reading

BY SOPHIA CHARALAMBOUS

In Communist Czechoslovakia, the fields of poetry and science, because both could express truths contradictory to Communist teachings, were bound together as sources of dissent. For Miroslav Holub, what unites the science and the poetry, aside from some basic approach to nature, is a conviction that the underlying creative impulse is the same. This unique aartist will be visiting the University this week.

Holub, who is unusual in the way in which elements of a scientific world-view are central to his poetic vision. He is a poet whose day job is the laboratory—a scientist who writes poetry after hours. He started writing seriously as a student, and has been prolific ever since, with fourteen books of poetry and five collections of essays published, as well as many scientific papers.

In a climate where even the adoption of free verse was a form of protest, all real poetry was headed for suppression in Communist Czechoslovakia. So, although Holub was able to continue his profession of immunology, he was a nonperson otherwise throughout the '70s. His works were available only in translation. Since the fall of Communism, Holub is invited to join advisory committees and panels in Czechoslovakia's new government, and receives numerous invitations to write essays, articles, columns, etc.

Mr. Holub will be reading his poetry on Sunday, October 6, at 8 p.m. in Bucknell Hall. A reception will follow his reading. Mr. Holub will also be teaching a poetry workshop on Monday, October 7, at 4:30 p.m. in the Willard Smith Library of Vaughan Lit.

Council on Greek Life needs re-examination

Earlier this week, the little-known Council on Greek Life (COGL) finished evaluating each and every one of Bucknell's fraternities and sororities. Each Greek group was awarded a number between one and four where one is the best possible score (see related story, page 1). Unfortunately, questions have now been raised about the fairness of those evaluations and the secrecy of the results.

The first question is 'how come no one knows about this?' We find it incredible that a group wielding the power to remove a fraternity or sorority from campus is unknown to most segments of the student body. If COGL is to continue to evaluate and sanction the Greek community, a system of checks and balances mandates that its actions be open to public inspection and criticism.

Indeed, in order for individual Greek organizations and the community at large to judge how reliable and significant the COGL results are, we must know what criteria were used to evaluate the chapters, what methods were used to judge each group's progress, and in what specific areas individual Greek organizations were lacking.

At the same time, we believe the evaluation process used by COGL is flawed. First, the committee needs a broader, more diverse base of members who represent a larger cross-section of the campus community. Currently, a majority of COGL members are also members of the Greek organizations they're evaluating.

Second, the review process must be more closely linked with the groups being reviewed. Under present guidelines, the committee reviews each fraternity and sorority on paper only. We recommend individual interviews between members of COGL and each Greek organization and more involvement between the reviewers and the groups being examined. A procedure of COGL's significance must be granted the time and energy it deserves; both COGL and the chapters should put more effort into making the review constructive and fair.

Despite these recognized flaws, we find it appalling that the evaluation results, arrived at legitimately by COGL according to procedures in place today, have been withheld from public view. Just as the fraternities and sororities have a responsibility to the community at large, the University has a responsibility to keep us appraised of both the successes and the failures of the Greek system.

While not originally intended for this purpose, we feel that the COGL results would be of tremendous value to potential fraternity and sorority rushees. While the COGL evaluation number must not be used as a sole criterion for the wholesale dismissal of a Greek organization from rush consideration, it is a valuable additional piece of information for students trying to solve the rush puzzle.

Beyond rushees in particular, however, the entire campus community would benefit from knowledge of the COGL rankings. Fraternities and sororities do not exist in a vacuum — they often sponsor academic, intellectual, and social programs and events for the entire University community. Since the community is directly affected by such activities, it has the right to know all available information about the host organization so it can make educated decisions about attendance and support.

Bravo to COGL, then, for undertaking a self-initiated review of its procedures. We hope the changes you implement go a long way towards making the Greek review system fair and beneficial. But we also hope to hear about those changes.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Senior challenges columnist's perceptions

TO THE EDITOR:

I'm writing in response to Mark Abrahamsen's "On my mind" column of 9/27. Well, where to begin? Perhaps I've misunderstood Mr. Abrahamsen, and, if so, I apologize for the tirade you are about to endure. But REALLY, does he think that Bucknell isn't competitive enough??

My first assumption is that he is an underclassman. ANY senior at Bucknell knows the pressures of the so-called "real world" looming ahead. Even I, an adamantly mellow individual, stress at the sight of those yellow/orange sheets of paper from the Career Development Center telling me that by this point, I should know in which direction my life is headed.

If the CDC doesn't pile on enough pressure, fellow Bucknellians busily filling out GRE, LSAT, or MCAT forms or revising their resumes for the third time, (by the end of September) usually suffice in making one feel that to be unemployed in June is a fate worse than death. The high-powered, career-oriented mind-set is so prevalent and disconcerting here at Bucknell that I've seen seniors coming out of the CDC crying because they believe themselves to be "unmarketable." And it's not just seniors worried about the future. I've seen people just as upset because they didn't do well on a test. When I see these folks, I say a little word of thanks that I am not among them.

It's not easy, either. It's hard work not to be stressed at this school. But the thought that continually recurs when I feel the urge to stress about books or a grade or my career is this: In the scheme of things, how much does it really matter? Does a C on an exam or paper mean that I won't be able to get a decent job? Does the fact that I'm pretty much directionless at this point in my life mean that someday I'll end up in the gutter? Of course not!! Most students at BU will never be homeless or destitute, or at least one can hope. So why all the emphasis on competition? Why do I, at 20, have to have a "definite career goal" in mind?

"So why all the emphasis on competition? Why do I, at 20, have to have a 'definite career goal' in mind?"

My main problem with Abrahamsen's article rests with his rallying cry for us, as a group, to be more "successful" than our parents. What is the standard against which he is measuring success?

From the tone of the article, success seems to mean monetary gain or the attainment of powerful positions within society. This also seems to be not only Abrahamsen's standard but Bucknell's standard in general. Great. Fine. But (here's the catch), make it a personal standard, please. Please do not try to impose it on me by telling me that I should be working harder at Bucknell. Abrahamsen states ". . . the U.S. is a fiercely competitive society." True. But why would it be a disappointment for Bucknell to turn out some Norm Petersons in addition to some Donald Trumps? Heck, Norm seems much happier with his life on a barstool at Cheers than Donald seems with his ex-wife problems. I'd certainly prefer to hang out at Cheers than have the entire country know the details of my love life just because I have a lot of money.

My point is this: Who is to judge whether or not another is successful? Does anyone seriously know anyone whose only goal at BU is to get married? If these folks succeed, they should be congratulated. First, because they found a satisfying Bucknell relationship; secondly, because they achieved THEIR goal, which maybe is not Mr. Abrahamsen's goal or his idea of what their goal should be. They should be congratulated because they did what they set out to do.

Abrahamsen writes of a "complacent attitude on campus," referring to complacency with regard to academic achievement. It seems as if he is advocating more QUIET STUDY AREAS filled with students working diligently towards 4.0's. It's a nice picture, even an admirable one, but the bad news for Abrahamsen is, that in the real world, to be happy one has to achieve some sort of balance. If one doesn't use the college years to figure out how to achieve this balance, Bucknell will be turning out a lot of workaholics who will burn out by 40. By holing up on the third floor of the library, one can easily miss everything going on, both inside and outside the "Bucknell Bubble," that can contribute to a well-rounded education. Many Bucknellians prefer to "do books" rather than attend Weis Center events, go to a soccer game, or meet new people. What employer wants to hire someone who has a 4.0 but hasn't seen anything other than lectures, libraries, and fraternity parties? If one's face is buried in books, one cannot appreciate the community in which Bucknell lies.

Countless people rage about "townies," but how many have ever really talked to someone from the community in a non-confrontational atmosphere? You'd be amazed at how much you can learn from the average person. I spent 2 hours in a Milton laundromat talking to a WWF wrestler - and hey, now I know that it's not real. . . The education a Bucknellian receives does not have to be one sided. An increase in the kind of academic achievement Mr. Abrahamsen advocates is just that. Abrahamsen states "face challenges with optimism. . . and excel" with which I whole heartedly agree. But please, don't tell me or anyone else how to do it. We have enough stress as it is.

Jewish student seeks Bucknell's acceptance

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to respond to the apology written by IVCF to the Bucknell Jewish community, as I was a part of the dialogue. I accept their sincerity and do understand that there was no malice intended. A list of Jewish holidays and a willingness on our part to provide Jewish cultural sensitivity workshops were extended as a means of avoiding future incidents and to start a dialogue.

Yet, I feel that the reason why I was outraged has been missed. Yes, neglecting the significance of our holiday was insensitive; this insensitivity was on all levels. In addition to both IVCF and the Greek organizations, RHA had its elections on Yom Kippur, classes met, etc. What this does is make Jewish students feel as if they have to choose between their religious obligation and their role as a student. This makes Jewish students feel different and more like outsiders at this University. This does not have to exist if the University wants to make the Jewish community feel at home.

Secondly, the booklet Turning to God was not written from a Jewish perspective. It was written by a Christian to a Jewish audience for the purpose of conversion. The book stated that atonement was not possible on Yom Kippur; rather, atonement is only available through Jesus. By having these pamphlets available during the high holidays, a two thousand year hatred of the Jews by Christians is reasserted. The gospel of John blames the Jews for Jesus' death. Jews were burned if they did not convert to Christianity in medieval Europe and during the Spanish Inquisition of 1492. During the "Enlightenment," Jews who did not convert were expelled from many countries. Six million died during the Shoah. Some of our students do not have relatives because they died in concentration camps. In 1988 the Ethiopian government rounded up its Jewish population and threatened extermination until Israel sold military arms. I could only view this booklet within its historical context. These pamphlets were written to us for our conversion. This is a form of hate literature for it refutes our more than five thousand year history and faith.

Can you understand now how at two levels (the historical and the systematic) all the events of September 9, 1991 were enough to outrage me? Can you understand now how I as a Jewish Bucknellian felt insulted and unwelcome? But what hurt more was the general feeling of apathy from many students, the "Oh, I'm sure they did not mean to do it." Although I greatly appreciate Melissa Skelton's letter, I ask "where was a letter from an administrator or faculty member or another member of the campus community?"

There are two questions that I feel need to be addressed. If Bucknell is going to make the members of the Jewish community feel welcome, what kinds of structural changes are going to be made to elevate this position of being an outsider? For example, is the University willing to formally recognize major Jewish holidays by scheduling no classes or special events on those days as do some of our frame-of-reference schools? Is the University willing to support a Kosher kitchen? Secondly, Jewish students contribute more than $30,000 to BSG, and IVCF receives BSG funding. Did BSG funds pay for this "hate" literature and the "educational" table? Is this an appropriate usage of BSG monies?

Diversity is not limited to race and gender. It appropriately encompasses religion. At Bucknell we need a dialogue and an agenda for integrating Jewish life into everyone's awareness. I am hopeful that Jewish students can feel they belong. The administration, campus organizations, and students themselves should take a responsibility for increasing the awareness on campus that diversity itself has many cultural dimensions.

OPINIONS

Universities and entrepreneurial spirit

BY PETER KARL KRESL

As usually happens in periods of national insecurity and confusion, critical attention is being directed at our system of university education. A system "in collapse." Curricula dominated by courses on "Kwakiutl lesbian verse." Faculties composed of bearded radicals wearing cord suits and hushpuppies. Cries for "accountability" and increased direction from above. Enough I say.

All surveys of higher education conclude that U.S. universities are the finest in the world. We do a better job of liberally educating undergraduates, training graduate students to be tomorrow's practitioners and researchers, and winning Nobel prizes, than any other university system in existence, period. Our recognized excellence and international competitiveness are the causes of a healthy balance of exchange of students and, that rarest of items today, of a healthy balance of international trade. The tens of thousands of former students from Japan, Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong, and other countries who are so instrumental in their firms'/countries' successes our own and third country markets in industry after industry, from basic steel to advanced electronics, developed their insights and their human capital in the very universities our critics never tire of attacking.

Show me a university that ignores the "canon" from Plato to Shakespeare to Atwood. Perhaps the freedom of individuals, protected by tenure and stimulated and encouraged by their colleagues, to explore Kwakiutl lesbian verse or radical solutions to problem solving, or anything else we as thoroughly competent professionals (in R. H. Tawney's meaning of the word) choose to study, is the factor which has contributed to this excellence and competitiveness. Don't knock or ridicule it; celebrate it and study it.

When today's generation of business leaders took the helm in the early 1970's, we had a balance of trade surplus. In the ensuing two decades the trade balance has "collapsed" to a deficit which bottomed out at $150 billion in 1987. The business community has lost our previously dominant positions in automobiles, steel, machine tools, consumer electronics, etc., etc. In the mid-1980's the U.S. had a trade deficit with every part of the world, with the exception of the Soviet Bloc and Australia-New Zealand.

Examining the litany of ineptitude and corruption of some members of today's business community is akin to peeling away the layers of an enormous onion: defense contracting scams, the savings and loan bail-out, insider trading, HUD scandals, banks in trouble, Salomon Brothers, BCCI—one beggar-thy-neighbor get-rich-quick scheme after another. Where is the attention to productivity? Where is the listening to the consumer, the creation of a supportive environment in which individuals can take pleasure in their work which are the sine qua non of success in any competitive market?

Higher education is one of the most successful industries in this country. If you argue that the business crook doing 2 to 5 in the local slammer is not typical of the rest of the business community, then may I counter that the often encountered stereotype of the professor is no more accurate.

In reality, we are among the last of the individual entrepreneurs in the country. We create our own courses, market them to students to build enrollments, design our own research agendas and hustle to get the funding to support that work-usually with little or no assistance from other agencies on our campuses. In spite of the complaints we voice, few of us would choose to do anything other than what we are doing.

Why don't our critics visit campuses for the purpose of discovering what it is we do right, rather than that of cajoling us to be more "business like" in our operation? Given the performance of some other industries during the past two decades it would seem they have nothing to lose from studying our experience, nor do we have much to gain from studying theirs.

There is, however, one ominous sign, which is beginning to be recognized on campuses, with regard to which business leaders could help us. The Chronicle of Higher Education recently noted that during 1975-85 university faculty employment increased by 5 per cent, 16 per cent more administrators were hired and support staff ballooned by over 60 per cent. When critics from the business community visit our campuses it would be useful if they would tell our senior administrators how over-management and a diversion of attention from quality in production to purposeless administration and "rearrangement of the deck chairs" have contributed to the deterioration of the excellence and competitiveness of previously competitive firms and industries during the past two decades. I hope they would tell us how, during the recent recession, in their efforts to regain competitiveness the first thing they have done is reduce their "administrative burden." I wish they would remind us how, from Silicon Valley to automotive design teams (whether for U.S. or for Japanese firms), the few success stories of the U.S. economy in recent years have invariably lodged increased decision-making and responsibility in those who "create value added" rather than in those who write memos. It may not be too late for us.

What does Clarence Thomas stand for?

BY ROB SCHROEDER AND DAVID BARRY
Bucknellian Staff Writers

We Americans and our legal system are poised at an historic moment. The moral and legal pulse of our Supreme Court has been thrown into uncertainty once again, with its fate resting in the hands of one man: Judge Clarence Thomas. Judge Thomas, if appointed to the Court, would by virtue of his young age and strength will lead this country's highest judicial institution into the 21st century. We must ask ourselves then, is this appointment a wise one, a "prudent" one? How does the judge feel, for instance, about the right of a woman to have an abortion, or the desirability of affirmative action programs? We the people have a constitutional right to knowledge about such issues, after all. It is on the basis of their testimonies and stances on crucial matters that we elect our officials, correct? What other way is there to decide who is right for a position and who is wrong? This sort of decision-making process is at the core of the American electoral system. Isn't it?

Not if you ask Judge Thomas. Throughout his public scrutiny and time in the limelight, he has tactfully refused to publicize his opinions on the grounds, so to speak, that they might incriminate him. Thomas has denied the American public the lengthy speeches and articulate value judgements that we sorely need if we are to decide who is to represent us and who is not.

What is the fate of affirmative action in this country? We don't know. Is the word "pornography" about to take a new twist? It's hard to tell. And how about the pregnant teenager, raped by her father, who will use a coat hanger to give herself an abortion if the courts won't allow it? What Clarence Thomas feels about these matters is crucial if we are to appoint him to make de facto legislation on them. But the good judge isn't telling.

By allowing this, the United States legal system is shirking its public responsibilities. Thomas himself is no better. By playing along with the system, and by putting personal gain before social good, Judge Thomas is a potential tragedy waiting to happen to the public. His past decisions as a federal judge are not enough to go on; the man could have changed, as people do. What does he believe now? Judge Thomas is obviously afraid, but of what? Is bad old George Bush going to verbally spank him if he believes in something deemed "improper" to conservative consciences? There is nothing that Bush himself can really do to Thomas now. The worst case scenario for the judge would be his rejection by the Senate, the body that supposedly represents America's citizens.

If rejected, so be it. The Supreme Court should not be filled with individuals concerned more with their self-interest and image than the ability of citizens to make value judgements.

Speak up, Clarence Thomas. Answer our representatives' questions. Our fates and our rights reside somewhere in that head of yours. You may claim to have a legal right to withhold your ideas, but you have a moral duty to the people that they affect to state them.

By the same token, we voters and our elected representatives have a duty to judge you, based on your testimonies. Or, in your case, the lack thereof. By remaining silent, you rob Americans of a fundmental right: the right to make up our minds.

"The Supreme Court should not be filled with individuals concerned more with their self-interest and image than the ability of citizens to make value judgements."

Citizenship in the Academy

Part Three of Three

BY MATTHEW D. FRENCH

It has become evident that America's campuses are a unique and complex chain of superiors and inferiors; users and manipulators and idealists all creating sporadic bursts of intellectual friction within the Academy. The question that remains is: Why must members of the student body, faculty, and administration strive to serve the Academy? The answer is simple and significant. We must serve the Academy in order to serve Society. They have a responsibility to the Public Trust.

One might ask what this convoluted chain of duty and excellence and effort has to do with the smallest component of the Academy: the individual. The answer lies in the simple understanding that the Academy is the vehicle for the individual to prepare to serve society. This may seem strange or unsavory to some, because for many, higher education is seen as a preparation for serving oneself. This, however, must now be secondary to the needs of society. As unfortunate as it may seem, we have a greater responsibility to those other than ourselves.

Why? Why must we form a more perfect union of administrators, faculty members, and students...why? The reason is greed. Greed is the root of our need for an increased effort. Years gone by have left a terrible scar, for which we must now make amends. The previous decade was one of avarice and self-serving gluttony. Society burned the candle at both ends and wound up with homelessness, debt, and poverty unbecoming to a nation which waves its flag so vigorously and blows its own horn so loudly. We must clean up the mess that we have made. We have the tools.

It is difficult to speak of elites without sounding elitist, but here is the reality. Roughly 17% of Americans are in a position to make a difference. That is to say that approximately one in every six Americans holds a college degree. Of those, even less hold higher degrees; the type of education which would afford entry into the elite class of American society: the decision-making class. Those individuals who are able to infiltrate the elite class must now, more than ever, scrutinize their system of values and realize they are the last hope for the Public Trust.

If the graduates of the Academy choose to be self-serving instead of Society-serving, they will find themselves an island of prosperity in a sea of poverty; an oasis of wealth in a desert of despair. What will be their pleasures? Where will they go to forget what they have done? They will be trapped by the results of their indifference to a society which needs them more than ever.

What is the essence of this responsibility to society? It is the absolute fulfillment of the individual's intellect and conscience. And where is the only place this fulfillment can take place? An Academy which promotes intellectual discourse, freedom of expression, and is a constant forum where all ideas can be fully debated. Only in an environment of mutual respect and understanding, where individuals strive for excellence, can there be produced an elite body which is not elitist. An uncommon minority concerned with the common good.

The question remains why? The initial answer is because we have the opportunity to make a difference. But still the question is why? And like the patient parent feeding the child's insatiable need to know, the answer comes: Because if you don't, this life that you know, this world that you see around you, will disappear. The poor and huddled masses yearning to breathe free will not be kept down forever. You can help them now, or die when they trample your gleaming society with their cold, shoeless feet.

Perhaps it will not come to that. Perhaps the Academy, our Academy, will produce the factor that will make a difference. Whether or not that even has a chance of happening depends on the individual. As with all change it seems, this must also come from within each one of us. The importance is to understand that even if one is not personally going to serve to Public Trust (as many inevitably won't), one must allow others the opportunity to have maximum intellectual fulfillment so that they may serve the Public Trust to the best of their ability.

Regardless of your motives, let your methods be pure...

OPINIONS

Skena's Prescription

If an amendment to the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act passes, as it is likely to do, Bucknell will have the option of releasing the names of those students who have committed acts of vandalism, theft, etc. to the media. If given that option, should Bucknell release those names? If so, should the names be released at the time the student is accused or after the student is judged to be guilty by the campus judiciary system?

Bucknell should consider releasing the names of students, but only after guilt has been determined. An accusation of theft or assault on a campus of our size would brand a student even if he/she was later acquitted of any wrongdoing. That simply does not seem fair to the accused. Some argue that the campus population should know immediately, as the accused individual may represent a threat to other students.

This view has merit, especially when speaking of serious crimes, but it presumes guilt which is not, or should not be, a tenet of Bucknell's judiciary system. To publish an accused student's name would predetermine his/her guilt in the eyes of the community and would turn the security log into a gossip column.

Once convicted, a student should have to face the consequences of their actions as they would in the 'real world.' The Bucknellian and other printed media should be allowed access to student names and given the opportunity to report on events in a responsible manner.

However, the media should take extraordinary care to ensure that stories are reported fairly and consistently. While an event may need to be reported, there should rarely be a situation that demands more than the simple report provided by the office of public safety.

Finally, Bucknell could easily opt not to release the names of students at all and they have every right to do so. If this is the case, it seems somewhat unfair to print stories about students who commit crimes downtown when others, who may have committed far greater crimes on campus, are protected by the University.

I know a good journalist may feel an obligation to print any newsworthy story they can. I'm also sure editorial boards have already struggled with this very question.

As a student, however, I see a need for consistency. If one student who allegedly steals something is raked through the mud, everyone should be and if any students are shielded from the campus press, they all should be.

LETTERS

Call for Jewish concerns raised

DEAR EDITOR:

I'm writing in support of Deborah Abowitz's 9/20 opinions piece regarding Jewish concerns at Bucknell. I am not Jewish, but have often wondered what it would be like to be a Jew on this campus. Over the past couple of years, we've seen Bucknell become increasingly concerned with multiculturalism. This is welcome, and long overdue.

However, in all this talk of diversifying, in all the efforts at consciousness-raising, it is rare that I hear people addressing Jewish matters. In fact, many people seem to believe that anti-Semitism is not an issue at this university. I would argue that anti-Semitism is an issue here at Bucknell, but one that remains fairly invisible due to ignorance, and due to a less than Jewish-supportive or Jewish-inclusive atmosphere.

Over the years, I've written a number of letters to this paper describing the invisibility and alienation of gays, lesbians, and bisexuals at Bucknell. I can't help but feel that perhaps Jews on this campus face as much, maybe more, invisibility than do gay/lesbian/bi Bucknellians. Yes, we are beginning to acknowledge and face the needs of people of color, women, internationals, gays/lesbians/bisexuals (I confess I don't know much about how we support differently abled people here). But with at least 300 Jewish students, faculty, and staff at this institution, how can we continue to so consistently overlook Jewish issues?

I salute Deborah's courage in speaking out about her frustration and pain, and I hope her opinions piece, and the responses to it, mark the beginning of better understanding and support for Jews in our campus community.

Student challenges competition

Editor's note: this piece is in response to Mark Abrahamsen's "On My Mind" column of September 27, 1991.

"I study to learn. Why else would one come to school? I feel comfortable studying because I want to learn."

TO THE EDITOR:

Your assertions are outdated.

To begin with, Darwin's beloved survival of the fittest has not been a factor in human development since the advent of tool making. We, as a society, take care of our sick, our elderly, and even our lazy. Homo Sapiens, as a species, has outlived its evolution.

It also seems to me your letter is an attempt to defend your study habits. If you are looking for something or someone to put down, you should start with people who cannot be their own person without some feeble form of justification. This is where we as students and people falter morally.

If people would concern themselves with their own doings, and not with the business of others, then perhaps our society would be better off.

For example, you mention the fact that many guys (I assume you meant people) at Bucknell slack off because they 'know' they will be able to get a good job after graduation. You never even stop to consider the portion of the student body who is at school for the purpose of learning (those of us who are not majoring in $$$). I can say for myself that I am here to learn and enrich myself, and not to secure a healthy income. I study to learn. Why else would one come to school? I feel comfortable studying because I want to learn. There is a certain nobility in acquiring knowledge for its own sake that is essential to my identity as a student. If college were simply a hoilow four-year prison where those who would be rich serve their time, I doubt I would be here now.

More to the point, I would ask my readers, is competition healthy? admirable? preferable? I would say no! no! no! If you cannot satisfy yourself with your achievements without comparing them to those of others, then you are bound to be on shaky mental footing. Yes, there will always be those beneath you to make you feel good about yourself. There will also be those who are above you to make you insecure and paranoid about making the grade. Insecurity and paranoia have always been high on the list of attributes which describe healthy individuals. As far as the question of fierce competition being admirable, let me enumerate several personalities who I feel were very competitive: Adolf Hitler, Joseph Stalin, Saddam Hussein, etc... Survival of the fittest was probably a personal motto of all three of these gentlemen. Needless to say, fierce competition is a path that only an elite few can tread (thank God). Bearing these two points in mind, it is easy to see that competition is not preferable.

It is important to note that I do not in any way endorse the academic sloth. My position is simply that school is for learning, not for money. In addition, one's academic efforts should be guided by the fact that knowledge for its own sake is noble and good.

We cannot let our minds lay fallow, and we cannot pursue our respective educations with 'getting ahead of the game' in mind. If we as a society were still operating under the premise of survival of the fittest, there are many of us who would have been left in the genetic dust, so to speak. The human race (for the most part) is moving away from our primitive caves. In our haste let us not forget our minds.

FLAG advisor thanks supporters

TO THE EDITOR:

Last Saturday I had a pleasant surprise. I walked into Walls Lounge for a 1:30 Colloquy panel discussion and could not find a seat! A brilliant fall Saturday afternoon, and there were 45-50 people gathered to hear a panel entitled "Opportunities and Challenges for Gays, Lesbians, and Bisexuals in America Today"! A good part of the audience was made up of students, and many of them were Tri-Delts.

"I think it takes guts for anyone, be they gay, bi, or straight, to show support for gay men/lesbians/bi-sexuals on this campus."

My reason for writing this is to recognize and thank Delta Delta Delta for co-sponsoring and attending this event. Homosexuality and bisexuality are topics with which American society is still fairly uncomfortable, and Bucknell has seen its share of intolerance and hostility towards gay/bisexual people. I think it takes guts for anyone, be they gay, bi, or straight, to show support for gay men/lesbians/bisexuals on this campus. On Saturday, the sisters of Delta Delta Delta took a courageous and sensitive stand by joining with the Gay/Lesbian/Bi Awareness Group in co-sponsoring a gay event for Colloquy.

In the past two years that I have been advisor to FLAG (Friends of Lesbians and Gays), Delta Delta Delta is the third Greek organization to sponsor a discussion focusing on gay/lesbian/bi issues. (The other two organizations are Kappa Delta Rho and Delta Gamma, both of whom worked with FLAG during spring semester '90 to sponsor a talk on gay concerns.)

I confess I have serious reservations about the Greek system as an institution. But the support that the men and women of Delta Delta Delta, Kappa Delta Rho, and Delta Gamma have given to raising awareness about gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals reminds me that it is not fair or legitimate to make blanket assumptions about all groups or all individuals within the Greek system. I thank them for this.

In addition to recognizing the support of Delta Delta Delta, I'd also like to thank others who made Saturday's panel discussion possible, including: Jim Hammerlee, Bill Boswell, the Colloquy Coordinators, the Colloquy Committee, and the Bucknell Gay/Lesbian/Bi Awareness Group (esp. Lara Turbide). Finally, a big thanks to the panel speakers: Cindy Peltier from the Center Gallery, and Susan Button and Peggy Gaylord, both from Affirmation: United Methodists for Lesbian/Gay/Bisexual concerns. They did a wonderful job of sharing their stories and stimulating a productive discussion.

Dean corrects editorial point

TO THE EDITOR:

I write to correct one statement in your recent editorial entitled "Academic dishonesty and/or an honor code" which could lead both students and faculty to misinterpret the University's policy on Academic Responsibility. I refer to your statement, "We recommend that the board meet monthly, or more often if necessary, to hear each and every case of academic dishonesty brought against a student (the current system allows an academic dean to adjudicate cases instead of the full board)."

"...all cases of academic dishonesty are brought before the Board except between semesters..."

Yes, the current system does allow an academic dean to adjudicate a case. However, I call your attention to the actual policy statement which reads, "In the event that the board cannot meet between semesters the student may request that an academic dean adjudicate the case rather than delay the decision until the board can meet."

I think that it is important to stress the fact that all cases of academic dishonesty are brought before the Board except between semesters, and then only when members of the Board are unavailable and when the student requests administrative action prior to the next semester. This usually occurs during the summer. Frankly, in all the years I have worked with the Board, there have been very few instances when academic deans have been asked to adjudicate a case because members of the Board had already left the campus for the summer.

National game developed in Lewisburg

Tibbits, a dice and chip game, is test-marketed on Bucknell students at the bookstore

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknelllian Staff Writer

Two years ago, Rick Gathman opened a national advertising agency in the little town of Lewisburg. Now Gathman and his friend Jeff Breed are launching their new game, Tibbits, across America, and are test-marketing it at Central Pennsylvania's Bucknell University. Who says that small towns and schools aren't exciting?

Tibbits is a game that combines dice and cards. The Ace, King, and Queen of every suit are on a polyhedral die, or "tibbit." When winning combinations are rolled, the player gathers chips. Of the "tibbits" concept, Gathman says, "Everyone in the world would instantly have an idea of how to play. The two most universal concepts in all games is the idea of playing with cards or rolling dice."

Breed and Gathman arrived at this idea one morning over coffee in November of 1978. The night before, the two men and their wives had been playing games like Yahtzee and Monopoly. Gathman says, "One of us said to the other, 'Isn't this a drag? If you could be doing anything else you wanted, what would you be doing?'" That morning, the two insurancemen decided that they would rather be in the game business. Most best-selling games on the market had been designed by individuals like themselves. Excitedly, Gathman said of their new idea, "It should be a game that is so compelling that it really has the power to go into every home in America."

Tibbits International designed their introductory, mass-market game to do just that. The dice and chips are packaged in a small round container that is made to go anywhere easily. It is priced at an affordable and tryable $5.99. Once America becomes familiar with the "tibbit," Gathman and Breed hope to introduce more games which are based on this unique version of the standard die. According to Gathman, "Tablesteaks will be out in year two (1992). It will be our flagship. It will retail in the range of $24.95." The company has a dozen more games in the development process.

Until then, test-marketing must be done on the original Tibbits game. Currently it is being sold on a test basis at two shops in Penn State, at the Susquehanna Mall, and in a few stores in Lewisburg. The Bucknell University Bookstore served as a test-site for the college market on Sept. 23 and 24.

Chris Kerstetter, head of marketing explained, "What we're doing right now with the product is the initial test-marketing. It's so important for us to get some good consumer feedback. That's where Bucknell comes into this." By watching students play the game, Kerstetter and other Tibbits representatives could notice any problems with the instructions or rules of the game. They could also measure a college-aged person's interest in the product.

Tibbits is selling well in local stores. Boscov's, in the Susquehanna Mall, sold two cases of the game last weekend. If the schedule keeps flowing as planned, Gathman says, "We will be in world-wide distribution by the third year (1993), very possibly by this time next year. Our goal is to sell 2.1 million games in the fifth year (1996) and at that point we'll entertain offers to purchase the corporation."

If so, Tibbits may very well be the next Monopoly, Trivial Pursuit, or Pictionary to hit the game market. And the whole phenomenon will have started right here in little Lewisburg, Pennsylvania.

Bison Bistros

The Lewisburg Inn — 523-8200
Market & Front — Thurs.-Sat. 5:30 p.m.-9:00 p.m.

BY TRAVIS ELLIOTT AND LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writers

What is the first thing that pops into your mind when I mention the words "fine dining" and "Lewisburg"? A contradiction you say? Well you're not alone; many Bucknellians graduate never having experienced the cuisine of the finest restaurant in the borough.

Although not as renowned among Bucknellians as the Hotel, the Lewisburg Inn offers a limited menu of French cuisine served in a homey yet elegant atmosphere. The Inn is famous for its fabulous meals, and its extensive, award-winning wine list.

After overcoming the dilemma of which of the tempting appetizers to order, Laura finally sampled the delectable Pain grillé au chèvre, sauteed mushrooms served on toast and topped with goat cheese. Travis tried the special: avocado slices placed upon a thin slice of Prosciutto ham and garnished with lime wedges. The unique character of the dishes heightened our expectations of the meal to follow.

For the main course, Laura ordered magret de canard aux poivres-verts, which is a sliced breast of duck drizzled with a green peppercorn sauce. The beautiful presentation made it difficult to take the first destructive bite, but after that, Laura's palate took control. Meanwhile, Travis partook of the cape scallops and mushrooms with mornay sauce served in a pastry shell (bouchée feuilleté de pétoncles à la crème). Although the scallops were not as spectacular as the duck, they were none-the-less delicious.

In the French tradition, a simply dressed Romaine lettuce salad followed the meal to cleanse the palate.

For dessert, Laura had the gâteau Reine de Saba, a light chocolate cake which satisfied her chocoholic craving. The maple crème brulée, which might well be the best in the Western World, was Travis' selection. That with a cup of Colombian coffee was the perfect finale to a memorable meal.

We were hard-pressed to find flaws with the service at the Inn. Our waiter was efficient and helpful in explaining the dishes and translating the menu.

We strongly urge students who appreciate fine dining to spend an evening at the Inn. Parents' weekend might be the perfect opportunity to do just that, without spending a dime. On a scale of five, we give the Lewisburg Inn four and one-half bison.

The Collegiate Perspective (and other fairy tales)

We all come across bulletin board notices, campus flyers, and public-service announcements wherever we go at Bucknell. There are those that catch our interest, and then there are others that are front-running candidates for lining the gerbil cage—"For Sale: Buy One Running Shoe, Get Two Free," for example. This fact of life, though, brings up several questions: How often do we really pay attention to the messages behind these signs? What are the motivations of the people responsible for them? And why am I writing this column at 6:43 p.m. on a Saturday evening when I could be seeing "Boyz 'N the Hood" at the Campus Theater?

Ramer '50 receives Medal of Honor; Peruzzi '92 hopes to follow in footsteps of honor

BY ADAM SCARLATELLI

On Sunday, September 15, a memorial service was held at the Lewisburg Cemetery in honor of fallen Marine Lieutenant George H. Ramer '50. He was killed in action during the Korean War on September 12, 1951, while exhibiting courage which would ultimately earn him the Congressional Medal of Honor.

For one person in particular, Geno Peruzzi '92, the memorial service was especially meaningful. The lives of the two men have strikingly much in common. Peruzzi, like Ramer, is also a native of Lewisburg and a brother of the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity. The younger Bucknellian is destined to be commissioned as a 2nd Lieutenant in the Marine corps after graduation and, following in the footsteps of Ramer, has gone through PLC training at the Officer Training School.

Because of these similarities, Peruzzi played an important role in Ramer's memorial ceremony. After an ornate wreath was presented on behalf of the Marine Corps, Peruzzi represented Phi Gamma Delta in laying a wreath of purple and white flowers by the graveside. Among the people in attendance that afternoon were several retired Marine friends, Ramer's widow, Bucknell President Gary Sojka, and State Representative Merle H. Phillips.

As a 1944 graduate of the Lewisburg High School, Ramer enlisted in the Navy. After his discharge in June of 1945, Ramer enrolled at Bucknell University. He graduated in 1950 and then received his commission as 2nd Lieutenant. He was a teacher at the Lewisburg High School when the Korean War broke out. Ramer then re-enlisted in the Marine Corps and saw active duty as a platoon leader. He was killed in action while covering the withdrawal of his men against an assault by an overwhelming number of enemy forces. By single-handedly delaying the enemy, Ramer allowed his Marines to reach safety. Because of this, Ramer was posthumously awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor on January 7, 1953.

The Congressional Medal of Honor is the highest military award the United States offers. In the medal's 128-year history, just 3417 soldiers have received the award. In the Korean War, only 131 Americans won the award. To men like George H. Ramer, we owe our freedom, and to some like Geno Peruzzi, much of our inspiration as well.

The value of the Bucknell name

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Either you, your parents, the bank, or some fine friend pays almost $20,000 each year for you to attend Bucknell University. When that painful figure is mentioned, you wince and rationalize that you're receiving a good education due to the close personal attention of your professors. You say that you've made some lifelong friends. You really like it here. Simply put, Bucknell is a beautiful place. Still the question, "Will I get a substantial return on my $80,000 investment?" lingers on your mind. What exactly will the Bucknell name do for you in the job market?

Laura Lansiedel–The Bucknellian
The Career Developement Center offers books to help you find a job.

According to Tom Lafferty '89, an engineer for Mobil, "Bucknell is one of our ten targeted recruit schools." Other schools in this category include Penn State, Drexel, Cornell, Lehigh, and Lafayette.

Lafferty also wondered about Bucknell's reputation while he was an undergraduate. Upon entering the job market he found his Bucknell education to be "superior to the Ivy League," at least superior to the Ivy Leaguers with whom he has spoken. As an undergrad he had worked in small groups and this had prepared him for his project-oriented work. Said Lafferty, "If I had not liked Bucknell and felt confident of the program, I would not have come back here to recruit for my company."

Proctor and Gamble hires all types of majors—from English to economics to engineering to education—and its recruiters echoed Mobil's praises. According to David Kinnear '90 and Kris Moeller '85, "Bucknell is one of P&G's top ten in retention, quality, and job advancement." Overall this issues Bucknell the number three ranking out of the 87 schools from which Proctor and Gamble actively recruits. Imagine, in a world of Stanfords and Harvards, Bucknell ranks number three.

Bucknell's academic reputation is not the only thing that helps students to become employed. Kinnear says an alumni connection "definitely helps. You are able to relate to Bucknell alumni. They understand the special qualities of the school."

JoAnn Attenweiler '87 of Prudential agrees. She remembers, "My first day of work I started with someone on my freshman hall. I really feel it helped me get my foot in the door."

> "If I had not liked Bucknell and felt confident of the program, I would not have come back here to recruit for my company."
> —Tom Lafferty '89
> Engineer for Mobil

Tracy Moloney of Arthur Anderson and Company points out that one of the partners in the New York City office is a Bucknell graduate and still very involved in the school. Diane Kovalik, also of Arthur Anderson, says that there are a lot of alumni in the firm.

Mark Kerr, director of Bucknell's Career Developement Center, says, "Bucknell has a very excellent academic reputation and students have good communication, interpersonal skills. These things, along with student leadership, are what employers mention to us." Employers have found these traits to be true of the alumni they have hired and look for these Bucknell qualities in those they interview.

The number of employers at this fall's Employer Expo was down by about ten companies, but Kerr relates this to "the recession and the fact that companies' travel budgets have been cut. For some companies it was either the Employer Expo or interviews on campus."

AT&T went through an exercise two years ago to cut recruitment travel expenses. Because AT&T was pleased with the performance of Bucknell grads, Bucknell remains on the recruitment list even after the company pared its 300-school list in half.

Kerr says, "Bucknell is well-known by Mid-Atlantic and East Coast companies like AT&T. J.P. Morgan typically hires two or three Bucknellians every year. G&E and Anderson Consulting also recruit heavily at Bucknell. Each of these companies usually hire ten to twelve graduates.

Graduate school placement is also very strong at Bucknell. According to Kerr, "A 2.8 is equivalent to a 3.0/3.2 at other schools. Graduate programs take into account that Bucknell is academically challenging."

A graduate school fair involving 70 programs will be held on October 9. On April 9, 1992, a government/non-profit fair featuring 30 organizations will be held.

According to Kerr, "Usually three to four months after graduation, 68% of our students are employed, 26% have started graduate school, 1 or 2% are traveling or doing volunteer-type work like the Peace Corps, and 3 to 4% are still seeking employment."

Something must be said for the Bucknell name.

Welcome to the "Real World" of work

What life is like six months after graduating from the Bucknell bubble

BY PAUL KAHN '90

I guess it really hit me that I had graduated not on June 3, 1990, but when the last week of August rolled around. This time I did not go through the rituals of last-minute shopping, overloading the car with all my worldly possessions, or pondering the fact that Bucknell never gave us Labor Day off. For the first time in four years, I remained on Fire Island and let the summer unfold to its end. Yes, this year I would not be returning to Bucknell, and the horror that I couldn't get my hands on a slice of Vennari's pizza or a Shorty's cheesesteak until Homecoming was a frightening thought.

On Tuesday, September 3, a dose of reality hit me. When I returned home to live with my parents, life was to be radically different than in the past four years. In some ways my sense of independence felt restricted when I was given constant reminders to keep my room clean or come home by a reasonable hour. It took my family no longer than a week to realize that my standards were almost completely different than theirs. What I thought to be a relatively clean room (the way it had been at school for four years) was considered a pig's pen by my mother, and what I thought was a reasonable hour to come home was considered in a different time zone by my father. Because my job with the Winter Olympics is not going to start until January and my financial status requires that I live at home, compromises had to be made by all.

Although my official job was not for a few months, I had the undaunting task of obtaining an internship until December. Dress shirts and suits now filled my closet and I realized that the days of waking up and throwing on jeans, a tee-shirt, and a hat were soon to be limited to only weekends at best. At Bucknell, I tried to limit the number of 8 a.m. classes to a minimum. Waking up early was something to be avoided. Unfortunately in the real world, working times are generally fixed and setting the alarm at 7 a.m. to arrive at 9 a.m. is unnegotiable. Instead of walking to class, I now found myself off to work, relying on the overcrowded and unpredictable New York City subway system.

Arriving at the office around 8:45 a.m. and not leaving until close at 6 p.m. wasn't so bad considering some of the horror stories from my friends. Tales of remaining at the office until 11 p.m. and working eight-hour days on the weekends made my internship seem simple. Unfortunately, the free time I once enjoyed at Bucknell to play golf, throw a frisbee, or participate in an intramural sport are now gone. If I still have enough energy at the end of the day, I can get an hour's worth of exercise by jogging around the reservoir in Central Park or going to the jam-packed health club. On most nights neither option seems appealing.

As at Bucknell, the weekends generally begin as soon as possible on Fridays. Happy hour is a big event after work and bars are already full around sunset. Blue and grey suits fill the establishments and conversations with new acquaintances revolve, at one point or another, around what school you attended and where you currently work.

On weekend days, the activities to choose from are abundant. Street fairs and cultural events are popular in September. Tossing a football in Central Park with fellow alumni has also been fun. Regardless of what I do, the relief from not having a huge test or term paper due on Monday is a nice and welcome change. Furthermore, watching football on Sundays is now truly more enjoyable because I know that I don't have to go to the library later that night.

Fortunately, some five months after graduating from Bucknell, the transition to the "real world" has been a relatively smooth one. Moving away from a place that provided a sense of security to the relative unknown of what is to come is by far a big step in one's life. If you can accept changing conditions with a positive attitude and keep an open mind to new and exciting challenges, then leaving Bucknell becomes easier. While it is true that I will never forget the experiences I had at Bucknell, I now know that they were just one chapter of a book that is being written everyday.

The Bucknell marriage myth

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Take a look around. The boy sitting next to you in chemistry could be your future husband. The girl that your best friend dates could be your wife seven years from now. And alumni, this may be your lucky weekend. Bucknellians seem to be magically attracted to each other even years after graduation.

The Bucknell marriage myth is not just another one of the charming anecdotes told during admissions tours. According to alumni statistics, there are 2601 living, married Bucknell couples.

Chaplain Jim Hammerlee verifies this phenomenon by saying, "On every available weekend of the year there are more requests for chapel use than we can handle. Many requests are booked years in advance, particularly for the summer weekends. Most of these are made by Bucknell graduates."

Don Simms '87 doesn't remember exactly when he met his wife Amy Lang ('86). According to Simms, "Amy was living in Seventh Street House with girlfriends. One of my FIJI friends was dating her friend, Fran Tudhy '86. My group of guy friends would always go out with her group of girlfriends."

"I had a hometown and she was dating a senior. We hooked up one night after a fraternity party and drove to the overlook at Shikellamy Dam. We were exceptional friends and would date in-between seeing other people. Even after we were engaged we were worried about ruining our friendship."

Simms' and Lang's friendship continued after college. Simms remembers, "The same group of guys would go to visit the gals in Boston where they were living and the girls would return to Bucknell to see us."

Lang moved to Philadelphia in the fall of 1988 when her sister suffered a brain tumor. Simms' brother had been stricken earlier with the same illness and was then suffering a recurrence. This is when the friends began to date seriously.

Simms was living in Lewisburg while working on his masters at Bucknell. One of his roommates moved out, so he asked Amy to move to Lewisburg. Amy agreed to, but only if Don found her a job. Two weeks later she began work at The Lewisburg Daily Journal.

According to Simms, "We were housemates, not roommates." Nevertheless, the couple was engaged on Valentine's Day and married in July of 1989. Lang adds, "In classic Bucknell style, we had the whole wedding party at the Bull Run Inn until 1 a.m. after the wedding." Thirty Bucknellians attended the celebration. Simms says, "It was just like our reunions in Boston."

Each Bucknell marriage seems to have an element of fairy tale to it. Ron '78 and Robin '82 Meredith-Golder renewed their college friendship and started a romance after a chance meeting.

Mr. Meredith-Golder, whose hometown is Lewisburg, says, "One day I walked down Market St. and there she was." He had not seen or talked to Robin in over six years—since she had graduated from Bucknell. On that day, she was back in Lewisburg working on an environmental piece for the Daily Item.

The two had "spent a great deal of time engaging in conversation, drinking wine," while at Bucknell, according to Mr. Meredith-Golder. All of their friends had been politically active on and off campus.

Now married, the couple remains politically active by protesting local problems and has chosen to take on each other's names. Some of the ideals voiced in their college conversations are now actively taking place.

While the majority of Bucknell couples did not actually get together until after college, some did meet and start their romantic relationships during school. One couple met on the first day of freshman year. Another couple were biology lab partners. Yet another married couple met at a mixer and went through the traditional Greek rituals of lavaliering and pinning.

No matter how the couples did meet and eventually ended up married, they all have one thing in common—they're all Bucknellians.

Rooke Chapel is the site of many Bucknell weddings. It is reserved for every summer weekend.

Bison Tales

As I contemplate comedy, I think back to junior-high school gym class...

"The best offense is a good defense! Now suck it up and run!" Coach Rockmeyer's infamous soccer strategy echoed across the field as I jogged over to the bleachers to relace my Nikes. As usual, the sidelines were packed with hordes of girls complaining of "cramps," the ultimate excuse that any junior-high school woman could wield against a male phys. ed. teacher. Mr. Rockmeyer didn't find it at all unusual that some girls had "cramps" seventeen or eighteen times each month.

As I kneeled and knotted, I heard the giggles of Alice Mukraquer and company. They were reclining in the top of the stands, engrossed in an animated round of teen-angst peer slander. I continued to feign interest in my feet as I strained to catch the latest from Woodward Junior High School's gossip queen.

"Oh my God, you know Betty Dumply? Her ears are waxy and her haircut is uneven."

"She smells soooooooo weird."

"She like rolls around in kitty litter or something."

"No wait." This was Alice herself speaking and the others immediately shushed. "For the past three days, she has had this green thing hanging from her upper-left, frontal bicuspid. And let me tell you guys, it is nasty!"

"No way!"

"What a looooooser!!!"

"Can I just say that she offends me."

Each comment had been punctuated by a burst of hysterical laughter, except for the last. Betty's lack of hygiene had passed the humorous boundaries and transcended up into morally offensive sacrilege. Later on, I would frantically rush towards the locker room to sniff under my own arms and scrutinize my dentures, but just then I had to find out what they would say next. Over the next few minutes, as I double, triple, and quadruple knotted my shoes, Alice, much to the delight of her chuckling buddies, continued to jubilantly point out the embarrassing "defects" of her friends and foes.

We are now mature college students and entirely above such gossiping nonsense, but the preceding anecdote can still be used to help understand why some people consider comedy to be "offensive." Many experts argue that comedy works the same way as gossip. It toys with our insecurities and fears to produce feelings of "identification" and, in turn, "superiority." The two sensations combined cause conspirators to laugh... to bond together. Take a simple pun, for example. When a reader peruses a sentence that says something like, "Spare me the lecture on bowling, it's not up my alley," he identifies the play on words, and thus, feels superior. He laughs to indicate to himself and others his general cleverness.

As we take a step up the comedy hierarchy, from puns to America's Funniest Home Videos, the same concepts still apply on a slightly more complicated level. As various people inadvertently impale themselves with umbrellas and accidently drop scalding-hot unabridged dictionaries on their bare feet, we internally identify the potential embarrassment we would feel in the same situation. However, because we sense that we are smart enough to purchase child-safe rain gear and decide not to bake our reference material, we feel clever and superior and demonstrate our supremacy through a delighted giggle. We now share an invigorating, gossip-like secret with our raucous peers in the studio audience, or perhaps with our buddy; the automated laugh track.

Maintaining this mode of thought, comedy becomes "offensive" when it in some way impeaches upon our sense of identity, making it impossible for us to feel superior. For example: Johnny, an upwardly mobile accountant, is sitting on his couch giggling at Roseanne, his favorite TV show. He laughs like a loon, until Rosanne dares to make a sarcastic quip about people with hangnails. WELL, it just so happens that Johnny, in fact, has THREE hangnails on his left foot which have been a tremendous source of emotional and physical discomfort for many years. Hearing the continuous laughter, and not wanting to be left out of things, Johnny manufactures indignation. "This is no joking matter," he spits at the screen, "I can assure you that "cuticle humor" is in extremely bad taste, and you haven't heard the last of me!" He then places an anonymous call to the Citizen's Republic Aiding People with Pediatric Ailments (CRAPPA) which immediately uses its influence with Dr. Scholl's to organize an advertising ban. Roseanne is forced to heel and apologize for her toe-rifically obscene jokes, as well as foot the medical bills for all members of CRAPPA who were emotionally traumatized by the segment.

The nefarious link between petty gossip and the logic of people who are offended by comedy is that each revolves around a mass denial of human nature. Alice and her friends secretly knew that everyone including themselves could have waxy ears or get an uneven haircut. Viewers of America's Funniest Home Videos realize that anyone could unintentionally staple a yellow gummy-bear to their left eyebrow. Ironically enough, the very act of collectively denying what it means to be human and ostracizing those that illustrate mundane weakness serves to unite conspirators and make them laugh. People who approach comedy in this immature and narcissistic manner immediately become hostile when a satirical joke confirms their insecurities rather than denies them. But, comedy is SUPPOSED to confirm, uniting the joke-teller with the audience and stemming relaxed, flowing laughter rather than nervous giggles. We're all in this together. We ALL smell "weird" at one time or another. We ALL get lettuce in our teeth. We ALL secretly enjoy Beverly Hills 90210. Perhaps, when we make ourselves recognize this fact, blood pressure disorders will decrease, heart disease will decline, and world peace will prevail! Or, will Coach Rockmeyer's infamous soccer strategy haunt us forever?

Marc Haimes

Is this the Bucknell you know?

Bucknell has changed greatly over the years, but yet still retains its greatest qualities. New buildings have been constructed next to the old, but the beauty of the campus is still intact. The Bison, whether located beside Seventh Street House, in the UC, or in the LC, remains a popular student hangout. And students, whether they sport long or short hair, polyester or plaid, are still active and enthusiastic about BU.

Football battles Big Red on Homecoming

1–3 Bison look to reverse fortunes tomorrow at 1 p.m. against winless Cornell after 34–16 defeat at Dartmouth last Saturday

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's football team plays only four home games this season, making each one a homecoming in itself. But the festivities surrounding this week's game against Cornell make this event even more special.

The Cornell football squad is very much a mirror image of this year's Bison. Cornell had an excellent season last year, finishing in a tie with Dartmouth for the Ivy League Championship. However, like Bucknell, the early part of the 1991 campaign has been a struggle for the Big Red. After dropping their opener to Ivy league rival Princeton 18-0, they returned to Ithaca the following week only to lose their home opener 31-13 to Colgate. Cornell will carry that 0-2 record into this week's game.

The Big Red, again like Bucknell, were hurt by graduation at the end of last year and crushed by injury at the beginning of this season. Running backs John McNiff and Scott Oliara were being counted on to shoulder much of the load offensively for Cornell. They combined to rush for 1742 yards last season, but both have been seeing sparse playing time recently due to injury.

McNiff, who is suffering from an ankle sprain, accumulated 66 yards against Princeton, and Oliara, who has a pulled hamstring, did not distinguish himself in his few plays against the Tigers. Neither is expected to play this Saturday.

Compounding Cornell's problems in the backfield is the fact that senior quarterback Sean Adreas will start only his third game for the Big Red.

Defensively, Cornell lost six starters of last year's starting eleven but they do return linebacker Mark Broderick who led the team in tackles last season.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Bucknell's leading kickoff returner and former tailback Kevin McElvene '93 advances against Villanova in earlier action. McElvene has been moved to the defensive side of the ball and will see time as a reserve outside linebacker this weekend.

Broderick and company will have their hands full with Bucknell's ground attack this weekend. Tailback Brian Henesey '92 rushed for 117 yards on 29 carries behind an improving offensive line last week in a 34-16 loss to Dartmouth. Henesey, barring an injury or other twist of fate, will move into second on Bucknell's all-time rushing list as he needs only eight yards to surpass Ken Jenkins.

Henesey's running was not the only bright spot in the Bison's loss last weekend; in fact, the Bison played a fairly competitive first half. Bucknell took the lead midway through the first quarter when cornerback Bob Marshall '92, who has been a standout for the defense all season, intercepted a pass and returned it 43 yards for the game's first touchdown.

Dartmouth scored the next ten points, but it looked as though the Bison would go into the second half down by just a field goal to The Big Green. However, Dartmouth drove deep into Bucknell territory late in the half and scored a touchdown with just 20 seconds left on the clock. On the ensuing kickoff, Dartmouth recovered a fumble and then kicked a field goal as time ran out. Instead of going into the locker room down 10-7, Bucknell faced a 20-7 deficit.

The Bison, however, did not give up when they came out for the second half. Led by the inspired play of the defense, which was helping Dartmouth to move the ball backwards instead of forwards, the Bison scored a field goal early in the third quarter.

"We kept telling the defense to do it (hold the Big Green) one more time each time they went on the field" said head coach Lou Maranzana. The defense was able to do that for Darthmouth's first three possessions of the second half.

Laura Candsiedel—The Bucknellian

Co-captain John Spatafore '92 makes a tackle against Colgate last year as defensive back Bob Marshall adds support. Spatafore had 12 tackles and an interception last weekend, while Marshall added seven tackles, two forced fumbles, and returned an interception for Bucknell's initial touchdown.

During this stretch, the front seven of the Bison was superb. John Lusk '93, Hew Woodward '93, and John Spatafore '92 helped to stuff Dartmouth and get the ball back to the offense.

Down by just a touchdown, the Bison marched downfield late in the third towards a possible tying touchdown. However, quarterback Jeff Kelly '92 was picked off at the 12-yard line and the defense was unable to continue its stellar play. Dartmouth executed an excellent drive that ended in another score and the likely end of Bucknell's chances.

This week, though, should be different as the Bison are spurred on by a large Homecoming crowd and the memory of their win at Cornell last year. Henesey ran for 159 yards at Ithaca in 1990 as the Bison rolled to a 42-21 victory.

The Bison will also be aided by a defense that really seems to be coming together and playing well despite the somewhat lopsided final score against Dartmouth.

With only four home games on the schedule, it should not be difficult for the Bison to get fired up on Saturday, and if all goes well, Bucknell's distinguished alumni will be treated to a good, quality game and a Bucknell win.

Water Polo routs Arkansas, wins three at Navy tourney

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's water polo team enjoyed its first successful weekend of play against fellow varsity teams last weekend. The Bison returned home from Navy with a 3–1 record, their only loss coming at the hands of a club team from California.

Bucknell began the tournament by beating the University of Arkansas by a score of 13–5 in a game that Bucknell dominated from the start. Much of the Bucknell squad took part in the scoring action, as its thirteen goals were distributed among eight players. Co-captains Kevin Schroth '92 and Walter Kelly '92 split six goals, while Sean Tierney '95 converted two. Dan Brown '92, Dan Killinger '92, A.J. Zottola '92, and Chris Retzler '93 were credited with a goal apiece. Pete Mertz '95 also scored the first varsity goal of his career.

Army was the next victim of Bucknell's fine play and determination in a contest that ended with a score of 9–4. The Bison came back from a 1–2 deficit in the first quarter and a 3–3 tie in the second to score six goals in the second half, while goalie John Bradbury '92 held Army to only one goal during that time. Acounting for the Bison scores were Kelly with four, Brown and Schroth with two each, and Killinger adding one. Schroth recorded two assists in the contest, while Brown, Kelly, Retzler, Tierney, and Ethan Daniels '94 each had one. Brown was also credited with an impressive five steals during the game.

The final team to succumb to Bucknell was from the University of Richmond. Richmond gave the Bison somewhat of a scare throughout the game, as they could not pull ahead by more than three goals. However, the Bucknell men's consistent defensive play kept them at a two-goal advantage to he 8–6 victory. Offensively, Bucknell looked to Schroth, who scored half of the Bucknell goals against Richmond. Brown also had two successful attempts, and Retzler converted once. Carl Weisfelder '95 joined Mertz, with the first varsity goal of his career, to score Bucknell's eighth. Killinger had two assists versus Richmond, and Schroth, Tierney, and Scott Brizius '95 each added one.

Bucknell's only loss on the weekend came against a strong West Coast team called the Olympic Club. Although the Bison were defeated 6–12, the team was not disappointed by its performance, in a game where it played tough against its more experienced opponents. Retzler, demonstrating his offensive potential, as he led the team in scoring three of Bucknell's six goals. Schroth, Kelly, and Brown also added one apiece to their respective totals of ten, eight, and six for the weekend. Returning from two weeks of rest due to an injury, Bradbury played four outstanding games in the net, where he accumulated 39 total saves, for an average of 9.75 per game. Rupert DeVink '94 also played in goal against Arkansas, where he recorded six saves.

Chris Retzler '93 defends against an attack during earlier action while John Bradbury '92 tends the goal. Retzler showed his offensive prowess against the Olympic Club by scoring three goals.

This weekend, Head Coach Jim Harvey hopes that his team can continue it success from Navy, stating "The home pool and crowd advantage that we hope to have could play an important role in the outcome of the tournament." Interested students and fans of Bucknell water polo can watch and cheer for the Bison as they take on rival Slippery Rock tonight at 8:00 pm.

Women's soccer falls twice, will face Army on Saturday

BY SCOTT BROWN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's soccer team had its roughest week to date as it dropped both its contests. Unfortunately, the road does not get any easier as the team hosts Patriot League foe Army tomorrow, followed by Gettysburg and Bloomsburg later in the week.

The week started out as Bucknell met the Red Raiders of Colgate for the first time in the school's history. Colgate dominated the contest from start to finish outshooting the Bison 28–14 as it cruised to a 3–0 victory. Colgate was led by a pair of goals from Heidi Belden. The good news for Bucknell was the return of goalkeeper Kim Fekel '93 who returned to action after being sidelined with a separated shoulder. She played 20 minutes of shutout goal while recording six saves. The loss left the Bison with a 1–2 record in conference play.

The women hoped to rebound, as they have all season, when they took on a 6–3–1 Villanova squad last Wednesday. But the Wildcats came out with a flurry, registering five goals in the first half to take a 5–0 advantage. Bucknell did manage to get a goal as Lisa Gibbons '95 scored her team-leading fifth goal of the season. But with just under ten minutes left to play in the game, the effort was too little too late as the Bison fell 5–1. The loss dropped Bucknell to 3–5 on the year.

Bucknell will have a difficult time stopping its skid as it challenges Patriot foe Army tomorrow. After dropping its first two contests of the season Army has bounced back with five wins and a tie in its last six games. Its offense is led by senior forward Deneil LoGiudice and sophomore midfielder Tara Williams who have netted five and four goals, respectively. Army also boasts a stingy defense, allowing only two goals in its previous six games.

Bucknell then takes on Gettysburg, a team that it has never lost to in its three matches dating back to 1988. Last year, Bucknell was victorious by a 2–1 margin. The week ends for the Bison Thursday as they return home against Bloomsburg. The Huskies only graduated one player last year and their experience may give the Bison some trouble.

Stagliano wins on and off court after breaking record

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Winning more single victories than any woman in the history of Bucknell isn't something that Karen Stagliano '92 wants to talk about. Co-captain of the most sucssessul women's tennis team in years, Stagliano would rather talk about her team's chance to win the conference championships. Sporting an 8–1 record, the team is well on its way.

Coach Rose Ewan credits Stagliano's success to her "...mental toughness, which is 90% of tennis. She has the ability to stay on the court as long as it takes to win; she's all heart." Stagliano's other strengths include "an ability to read her opponent, mix up her strokes and play aggressively," giving her a high win ratio which has led her team to its strongest season in several years.

Stagliano agrees that although she "gets impatient and bored easily during a long match," her strategy for success is to never give up, no matter how bad the match looks. During an indoor match at Lehigh a few weeks ago, Stagliano faced an opponent with a strong home-court advantage.

Lehigh "...plays indoors on a very fast surface," she said, "but I hung in there until the end and pulled out a win. Overall, I've won more close matches than I've lost...I try to analyze my opponent and change tactics until I find something that works."

A strong player for her high-school team in Hatfield, PA, Stagliano chose Bucknell for the academics, but intended to play on the tennis team while in college. Breaking a school record was a surprise for her, something she never thought about "until the end of last season, when I started seeing myself ranked fourth on the list, but I've always been motivated to win for the team, not for myself."

Stagliano also supports her team as a co-captain, and Ewan describes her as a "...good leader, and a close listener. She really saves me a lot of heartache and helps the freshmen cope with academics and other problems they might not bring to a coach. It's nice to have a Karen Stagliano on the team."

After graduating in June with a degree in chemistry, Stagliano hopes to work for a year, and then return to graduate school for her master's degree.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Karen Stagliano '92 broke Bucknell's all-time career singles match victory record. The co-captain's lifetime record is 41-7.

Men's golf places fifth at SUNY-Binghamton B.C. Open

BY DON REINHART
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's golf team completed its third pre-season tournament last weekend at the SUNY-Binghamton B.C. Open in Binghamton, N.Y. The team placed fifth of twelve teams, its best finish in a fall tournament this year.

The Bison opened their fall season on September 15 at the Host Farm Golf Resort in Lancaster, PA against an array of East Coast opponents including tournament host Franklin and Marshall College. Don Hansen '94, shot the two best rounds for the team, 81 and 77, to earn him a twenty-sixth place finish in a field of eighty.

Only a stroke behind, David Fries '93, was only 15 over par in two rounds for a 159 total, shooting a 78 stroke second round. Glenn Hertzberg '93 and Chris Curti, '94, rounded out the team score of 634 which gave the Bison a ninth place finish. Top Division Two force Indiana University of Pennsylvania took top honors in the tournament with a combined team score of 604.

Head Coach Tommy Thompson is confident in the potential of his young team. He sees the program developing through the efforts of the many younger players who are pushing each other to shoot better.

Thompson pointed out, "The quality and depth (of the team) has been stronger than in the last couple years. I'm encouraged and optimistic about our program."

The team traveled to Fredericksburg, VA on the weekend of September 20 to compete in the seventh annual Hoya Invitational Golf Tournament, hosted by Georgetown University. The Bison met some tough competition out on the links as they faced some top-notch golfers in James Madison, Princeton, and Loyola College.

The 72-par course proved a challenge as Bucknell finished only 14th out of fifteen. Turning in a top Bucknell performance, Doug Dollenberg '94 led the team with two rounds of 84 and 79. Hansen and Fries both placed second in team standings, shooting 164, as Mike Hartman '95, and Hertzberg each finished with 167.

The B.C. Open at En-Joie Golf course saw favorable scores from the Bison. Dollenberg again topped all of his teammates with a 78, only five strokes behind tournament medalist Jay Sladyh of Binghamton. Hartman placed second on the team with an 80 as Hansen and another rookie, Drew Smith '95, rounded out the team total of 322 with rounds of 81 and 83 respectively. Bucknell finished fifth in the tournament only one putt behind Patriot League competitors Colgate.

Thompson and his team are looking forward to next week's Eastern Coast Athletic Conference tournament qualifier. Twenty ECAC teams will compete for three spots in the ECAC Fall Championship match at Yale University on October 12 and 13.

After the qualifier, the Bison will finish the fall tournament season at the Oak Hill Golf Club in Rochester, N.Y. for the Norstar Bank Classic. Then, with the fall experience behind them, the Bison will head into Patriot League competition this spring where the young team hopes to establish itself as a formidable program.

Kevin Schroth '92

Kevin Schroth '92, of Bucknell's men's water polo team, has been named The Bucknellian's Athlete of the Week for the week of September 27-October 4.

Schroth led the squad to a 3–1 record at an invitational tournament weekend at Navy. The weekend included victories against Arkansas, Army, and Richmond, while the only loss came in a non-varsity game against the powerful Olympic Club.

The team's co-captain led Bucknell with four goals against Richmond and three more against Arkansas. Throughout the tournament, Schroth totaled ten goals and added three assists.

The water polo team will look to continue their victorious ways at home this weekend in their own Homecoming Tournament.

Volleyball readies for B.U. Invitational

BY DON REINHART
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's volleyball team ended a disappointing week with three Patriot League losses to Colgate, Navy, and Holy Cross. They hope to bounce back this weekend in their Homecoming Tournament when they will play host to Youngstown State University, Bentley College, Robert Morris College, and Ashland University.

The Bison came out hard and strong against a tough, undefeated Colgate team but failed to put enough points on the board as the hosts dropped the match in four games 15–5, 15–7, 8–15, 16–14. Laura Spinney '95 killed 18 balls at the net while veteran captain Kara Forosisky '92 tallied 12 kills. Coach Cindy Opalski was pleased with the tenacious defense of Amy Miller '95, who was all over the floor with 14 digs.

Dee Scinta '92, established team leader, also led the defense with sixteen digs. Although the team lost, Opalski saw some good in the team showings. She commented, "We played strong against Colgate in the whole match. Playing with Colgate who is a top seed showed improvement in our progress. We've improved a tremendous amount since day one."

The Colgate match took the wind out of the Bison as they fell easily to the hands of Navy. Opalski said, "We couldn't bounce back from the loss to Colgate. We need to bounce back after playing so well."

The lack of mental and aggressive play was evident on the Bucknell stat sheet. The team only accumulated 19 kills and gave up 23 reception errors. However, Spinney and Miller played more good defense as they chalked up 11 and eight digs respectively.

The Holy Cross match was not a different story. Although the match went the distance, five games, the Bison couldn't hold on and lost 10–15, 15–7, 15–4, 8–15, 15–13.

Brian Sipes—The Bucknellian

Kara Forosisky '92 prepares to serve against Colgate last Friday. During the match Forosisky totalled 12 kills. She is leading the Lady Bison as captain for the second consecutive season.

In Opalski's opinion, her team clearly had better technical skills but lacked the aggressive nature which has helped them in games before.

Team captains Kathleen Sullivan '92 and Forosisky combined for 25 kills. Miller played defense as if possesed, tallying 19digs and committing only one reception error. Despite the few individual performances, the team played without enough gusto to win.

Opalski is confident in her team's ability to pull out of the slump. The team should have a good showing on Homecoming weekend in its own round-robin tournament.

The Bison play at 6:00 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Friday night against Youngstown and Bentley. Saturday they face Ashland at 10:00 am and at 1:00 pm, a previous defeat, Robert Morris.

Opalski sees this weekend as a challenge from last week's defeats. She knows her team will prove itself a good team if it is able to come back. She added, "We're not yet in the category of good teams because good teams bounce back." But, the Bison hope to take charge this weekend and find retribution in Schwartz Fieldhouse.

X-country competes at Pittsburgh

Undefeated men ranked 25th in nation

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Question: Which fall sports team is currently undefeated and ranked among the top 25 in the nation?

Answer: Men's cross country.

The Bison ran their record to a perfect 5–0 and improved their national ranking to 23rd with a 33–26 win over the University of Pittsburgh last Saturday.

Running at home for the first time and coming off a successful trip to New York City, Bucknell allowed itself to be surprised, but not upset, by the Panthers.

On a "perfect day to run," Pitt got off to a near perfect start by taking the top two spots. Had they gotten the third as well, the meet would have been over and celebration on Cardiac Hill would have begun.

However, Bucknell's outstanding senior class thwarted the visitors' hopes by taking five of the next six places.

Tri-Captain Matt Deardorff '92 was the first Bison to cross the finish line. Tri-Captain Bob Kelly '92, Tom Wuchenich '92, Tri-Captain Jason Cahilly '92, and Jeff Loomis '92 filed in behind Deardorff to nail down the victory for Bucknell.

"We ran well. Upfront they beat us and that was disappointing," reflected Head Coach Art Gulden. Gulden's 1988 team was ranked 15th in the nation going into the final weeks of the season.

Deardorff, a GTE/CoSIDA First team At-Large Academic All-American last year, said, "They surprised us a little. We weren't sure how tough they were."

The NCAA Division I Cross Country Coaches Poll Top 25 has some future opponents for the Bison. Connecticut, whom Bucknell defeated earlier this season, are ranked 21st. The team will travel to Ames, Iowa after the fall break for the Iowa State Invitational. Featured teams, other than the Bison, are the second-ranked host Cyclones and the 13th ranked Texas Longhorns.

Tomorrow morning at 11:00, they will take on Delaware, Drexel, and James Madison here in Lewisburg. Some of the best runners in attendance won't be scoring any points for any of the teams. Many outstanding alumni such as Bill Reifsnyder, Bucknell Athletic Hall of Fame member and holder of numerous school records, are expected to be in attendance.

Women struggle, fall 18–37 last weekend

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Looking only at their record and the score of their last meet, one would say that the Lady Bison cross country team is struggling. Not so, according to Head Coach Art Gulden.

"It was an encouraging meet, there was great improvement," commented Gulden.

While the visiting University of Pittsburgh Lady Panthers defeated their hosts 18-37, several of the team's times improved and strong individual performances were turned in by several members of the squad.

Kristen Opdyke '93 ran the 13th fastest time by a Bucknell women on her home course.

"Pitt's just good and we keep improving," added the head coach.

Bucknell will have the opportunity to continue its improvement when it hosts Colgate and James Madison tomorrow morning.

The latter team is quite strong, but the former should prove to be a "very interesting meet" for the Lady Bison, according to Gulden.

Colgate, a fellow member of the Patriot League, has older and more experienced women. Juniors and seniors comprise the majority of the Red Raider roster.

This is a stark contrast to the youth and relative inexperience which Bucknell's roster exposes. Opdyke, Gina Abraham '93, who finished sixth in the Pitt meet, and Kris Deardorff '93 are the elders on a team that features many freshmen. Of this freshman recruiting class, Gulden has "seen a lot of improvement in the last two weeks."

Tennis sweeps Delaware and St. Francis

Squad dominates in two 9–0 shutouts, readies for Patriot League leader, Colgate (10–1), in tomorrow's battle for first place

MIKE MARKOVICH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

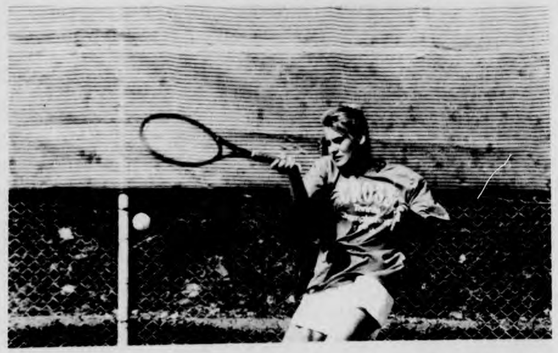
As it has done for the better part of this season, the Bucknell women's tennis team cruised through last week with three strong victories. The team is coming together just in time, as it will soon face its toughest matches to date.

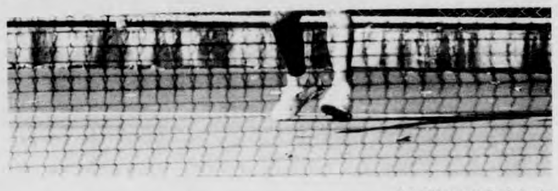
The team takes on Colgate tomorrow, and the Patriot League Championships are looming large in the not-too-distant future. With an over-all record of 8–1 including a league mark of 3–1, the Lady Bison are well prepared for the upcoming challenges.

By most standards, the women's tennis team enjoyed an excellent series last week. The women's tennis players would say it was perfect. Two shutout 9–0 victories, first versus the Delaware Blue Hens and then the St. Francis Red Flash, made for an enjoyable two days of tennis for the Bison.

On Saturday, in Newark, DE, the squad showed no mercy to its host, not granting a third set in any match en route to its third 9–0 win of the season.

Julia Diaz '95 continued to improve her worth at number one singles with a 6–4, 6–0 win. At number two, Kymm Carlson '94 came through with an impressive 6–2, 6–0 trouncing.





Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Kymm Carlson '94 rallied last week for three singles and two doubles victories against Delaware, St. Francis and Franklin & Marshall. The number two player has been an major force in the team's success thus far, giving the squad stability at both the singles and doubles positions.

Mary Ann Benack '92 won easily 6–2, 6–4 at number three. Karen Stagliano '92 once again added to her impressive victory collection with a 6–0, 6–0 sweep at number four, while Kristina Lutter '95 took her number five match 6–1, 6–2, and Stacey Duffy '95 rounded out singles play with a 6–1, 6–3 number six win.

In doubles play, not much changed, as Diaz and Carlson took the top spot 6–1, 6–1. Benack and Stagliano won next down the line, 6–1, 6–3, and Lutter and Duffy completed the sweep 6–3, 6–4 at number three. Benack and Stagliano's record stands at an impressive 7–0 on the season.

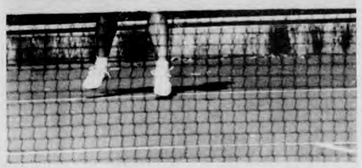
The next day, Loretto, PA saw the Bison put the second half of the perfect weekend on the board against an overmatched St. Francis squad.

Once again, the matches were all two-setters. Diaz and Stagliano, in their familiar one and four singles slots, respectively, both won 6–0, 6–0. Carlson, at number two, won 6–2, 6–0, while Benack took the third flight 6–1, 6–1.

Meanwhile, Lutter won 6–1, 6–0, and Kristyn Vandegrift '93, seeing her first playing time this season, won 7–5, 6–2.

The Lady Bison rolled on through doubles, with Diaz and Carlson winning yet again at number one, 6–0, 6–0, to bring their season number one doubles record to 6–1. At number two, Lutter teamed with Christine McMillan '95 to win 6–0, 6–0, and Vandegrift won at number three with Ashley Crary '95, 6–0, 6–1.

In Lewisburg on Tuesday, the Bison continued their winning ways against Franklin and Marshall College, and if it weren't for Diaz's loss to Shani Rosenzweig at number one singles, Bucknell would have seen their third shutout in as many contests. Diaz extended her to three sets, but finally went down 4–6, 6–0, 4–6.



Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Julia Diaz '95 serves up another win against Delaware on Saturday. The number one singles star has been integral in the team's success.

Bucknell took the rest of the singles matches using Saturday's lineup, with only Benack needing a third set to chalk up her win. The doubles matches weren't played as the overall match was won at that point.

With Lutter's victory at number five singles came her eighth consecutive victory, dating back to the beginning of the season. Her 8–0 record currently gives her the top individual singles' mark in the league..

Fourth on that list is Benack (7–1) who is tied with teammate Stagliano. These two seniors also form the second ranking doubles team in the league, with a record of 7–0, 3–0 in Patriot action.

The oft-rescheduled Bloomsburg contest, originally moved to today, has now been postponed until November 4, giving the Bison some valuable rest before tomorrow's match versus Colgate.

After the Patriot League showdown, the squad will have two interim matches, Tuesday and Wednesday, to tune up for the League Championships at Lehigh next weekend.

Men's soccer shuts out Bloomsburg, 3–0

BY ANDY LABOVITZ
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The men's soccer team had yet another 1–1 week, losing to the Colgate Red Raiders before defeating the Bloomsburg Huskies 3–0.

Last Saturday, the Bison, 2–3 overall, and 1–1 in league play, traveled to Colgate to take on their Patriot League rivals. Colgate entered the game 3–3 overall, and 1–1 in league play. On paper, this game appeared to be an even match-up, but the Red Raiders stifled the Bison offense to take a 3–1 victory.

> "The team's getting better every game, but it doesn't seem like we are getting any breaks"
> –Mark Wrigley '94
> Bison Goaltender

The first half was tightly played by both sides, and Colgate scored the only goal of the half midway through. In the second half, the action heated up a little bit, as Dan D'Angelo '92 tied the score with his first goal of the season with an assist from co-captain Evan Goldsmith '92.

However, five minutes later, Colgate regained the lead on a shot which just barely slipped past Bison goalkeeper Mark Wrigley '94. Less than four minutes after that, Colgate finished the scoring. The Red Raiders played strong defensively the remainder of the game, and Bucknell had to exit Colgate on the short end of the 3–1 score.

Tuesday, however, the Bison looked like a different team hosting Bloomsburg. After a lackluster first half, the Bison dominated the second, claiming a 3–0 victory, their second of the season.

The first half was slow and plagued by sloppy play, with neither team posing a serious threat to score. The teams broke for halftime in a scoreless tie.

The second half was marked by numerous shouting and shoving matches, as the play got more physical and the Huskies became more and more frustrated by the Bison defense.

The Bison got on the board first, as Alex Kogan '94 scored just one minute into the second half. Tensions between the teams began to escalate when Alex Lyras '92 collided with a Bloomsburg player in a scene which one bystander compared to "Brian Henesey '92 hitting the line in an off-tackle plunge."

The intensity of the play was escalated by the large Bloomsburg contingent, who, by some accounts, outnumbered and certainly outshouted the Bucknell fans.

The Bison defense held firm under the Bloomsburg attack, allowing only four shots all day, only one of which Wrigley had to save.

Finally, with just five minutes left in the game, Bucknell scored an insurance goal on a pretty spin move and shot by Bucknell leading scorer Greg Beatty '95, who racked up his fifth goal of the season. Jon MacKenzie '93 put the game out of reach with less than one minute remaining, giving the Bison a winning margin of 3–0.

This Saturday the Bison travel to Army to battle the undefeated Cadets. In preview to that match, Wrigley noted, "The team is getting better every game, but it doesn't seem like we are getting any breaks. We are looking to turn things around against Army."

Towson State hosts Bucknell on Wednesday and the Bison return home Friday evening for a match against Lafayette.

Field hockey splits pair last week, to take on Lehigh tomorrow

BY NATHAN WOLAVER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell field hockey team split their games 1-1 to keep their record at .500 last week, as they lost to Lafayette on Saturday, but came back to defeat Cornell on Sunday.

Last Saturday Bucknell was faced with the imposing task of dealing with the reigning champions of the Patriot League, Lafayette. For the last two years, Bucknell had come away empty-handed as it was dealt consecutive 1–0 losses. It was hoped that the Lady Bison defense, which had held opponents to four consecutive scoreless halves, would be able to continue the streak for another two.

Both sides came out strong in the first half, as the opposing teams set up a punishing defensive style that would dictate the tone for the entire game. Goalkeeper Danielle Ward '93 was perfect, as she continued her streak of scoreless halves. However, the Lady Bison could not generate a goal against the staunch Lafayette defense, and so both teams went into the locker room with goose eggs on the scoreboard.

During halftime, Coach Jen Averill reminded the team that they had to continue to have the same intensity throughout the second half in order to win the game. Captains Meagan Clark '92 and Amber Baxter '92 led a rejuvenated team back on the field for the second half.

Bucknell kept up its tenacious defense and shut down the powerful Lafayette offense for the second time. But, the Lady Bison offense could not put the ball in the net, and the game headed for overtime.

Overtime was no different than the previous two halves, as both teams continued to shut down the opposition's offense. It looked as though the game was headed for a second overtime when Lafayette broke through and put the ball in the net with 30 seconds left in the game.

It was a tremendous disappointment for the Lady Bison to have gone so far and come away without a win. "You just hate to see them put out so much effort and not win, but, you couldn't ask for more from our offense and defense," remarked Coach Averill. "You learn from each loss and take that into the next game."

Bucknell took that attitude into their next game against Cornell. The Lady Bison came roaring onto the field and dominated all facets of the game. Baxter and Stephanie Carfley '93 opened the scoring with a goal apiece. These goals resulted from a balanced attack in which all the players are capable of scoring at any time. Jen Hayes '93 led another fine performance by the defense as they dominated the game during the first half.

During the second half, Coach Averill was able to use all her players as Bucknell climbed to a 4–0 lead from goals by Laurie Blue '94 and Elmira Baldwin '94. Cornell came back with one goal but by then had no chance of coming back.

This weekend the Lady Bison square off against Lehigh and LaSalle. The game against Lehigh is important because Bucknell must win the rest of its games against Patriot League opponents if it hopes to have a shot at the Patriot League title. Coach Averill is optimistic about the chances the team has for post-season play. "We have more enthusiasm than last year, so a tournament spot is definitely within reach."

Debate in Washington draws issue of sexual harrassment to forefront

BY TIMOTHY W. KIRK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

With Judge Clarence Thomas's confirmation hearings heightening awareness of sexual harassment nationwide, as well as spurring discussion and debate on campus, Bucknell's Sexual Harassment Task Force has completed a brochure to be issued to the campus community by the end of October.

Director of the Women's Resource Center Janice Butler says that though "our efforts are not a result" of the allegations brought against Judge Thomas by University of Oklahoma Law Professor Anita Hill, "now that the Thomas hearings have brought the issue to the forefront, we may have more of an effect."

Despite the fact that sexual harassment is not a new issue on campus, the Hill allegations have renewed interest in the problem. "It is definitely on people's minds," says Liz Felter '92, of Women Organized Now.

"People are encountering the subject in class as well as in informal settings," she said.

The task force has designed an education and awareness campaign comprised of seminars, posters, buttons, and speakers in addition to the forthcoming brochure.

Comprised of representatives from the administration, faculty, and the student body, the task force was formed last year and envisions the campaign as one similar to last Spring's project on sexual assault.

The brochure first defines sexual harassment, then goes on to explore examples, myths, facts, and consequences of harassment in general as well as at Bucknell.

Butler notes, "We have had allegations in the past, both of students harassing students, as well as faculty harassing students."

Such cases are handled by the Dean of Students and the Affirmative Action Officer, respectively.

Bucknell officially adopted a policy in 1981 prohibiting sexual harassment, defined in the Student Handbook as "the subjection of a person to unwanted verbal or physical attention, i.e., remarks or conversation of a sexual nature, repeated unwelcome sexual advances, retaliation for refusal to comply with sexual demands, or the coercion of a person into a sexual relationship."

> "Now that the Thomas hearings have brought the issue to the forefront, we [the Sexual Harrassment Task Force] may have more effect."
> — Janice Butler,

According to Janice Butler, director of the Women's Resource Center, Senate debate over Clarence Thomas' confirmation to the Supreme Court have heightened awareness of sexual harrassment on campus.

Students arrested for bookstore theft

Two students were arrested yesterday for the theft of items from the Bucknell bookstore.

Russell Bashford '94 and Cecil Boone '94 were charged with retail theft, a summary offense, according to the arresting officer, Barry Hosterman of the East Buffalo Police Department.

Boone declined to comment about the arrest. Bashford could not be reached for comment.

Hosterman, who questioned the individuals, said that "Boone was a customer in the store and brought four items to the register operated by Bashford. One of the items was correctly rung, one was incorrectly rung up and two were not rung up at all."

Boone did pay full price for a t-shirt, but not for the other items—another t-shirt, a pair of shorts, and a hat, said Hosterman.

The total property value of the stolen items was $45.85, said James Middleton of the department of public safety.

The incident occurred at 11:06 a.m.

Vicki Benion, assistant director of the bookstore, reported the theft to the office of public safety.

Both were detained at the bookstore, and Middleton questioned the students before the

Crushed pipe closes library restrooms

Lengthy repairs may be near completion

BY JOHN GODBOUT

Cracked and aged plumbing pipes are creating problems of backed-up sewage in the Ellen Bertrand Clarke Library, but these problems should be corrected within the next week.

Bucknell University hired a local plumbing contractor to make the actual repairs, but the Bucknell Physical Plant will supervise the operation. Crews from Silvertip Incorporated of Lewisburg have been at work on the problem for close to three weeks, but feel that they are nearing the end of the procedure.

"There are no problems with the bathrooms themselves, the problems we are seeing root in the pipes that service the bathrooms," said Dennis Hollay, assistant director of the Physical Plant.

The problem is not a new one in the Bertrand Library, but the Physical Plant has seen increased deterioration of the situation this fall. Library staff have called the Physical Plant with reports of sewage backed up into basement vents numerous times. "We've had some real messes down there," said Hollay.

The problematic pipes are composed of clay tile, a material commonly used at the time the original library was constructed. The clay pipes are generally reliable, but as they age cracks begin to form around the joints and tree roots grow inward, causing potential blockages.

The Physical Plant has noted increasing occurrences of cracks in the last few years, but felt that the labor involved in correcting the situation was too great for the relatively minor problem. Now with the minor problems compounded, the entire community is sharing in what has become a major problem.

Because of the disintegration of old pipes, bathrooms in the Bertrand Library have been closed for several weeks. Students and staff have been seen trapsing across the quad to use facilities in Vaughan Lit.

Speakers present legacy of Native Americans

BY TARA GILLIGAN AND LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writers

Kicking off this weekend's conference, the second event in a two-year critical investigation of the Columbian Quincentennial, Ron LaFrance, director of the Native American program at Cornell and himself an active Native American, will lead a discussion tonight titled "Mohawk Oral Traditions Regarding Early Contact."

The conference, "Religion and Encounter: Mid-Atlantic Regional Contact Between Native American and Euro-American Peoples After the Voyages of Columbus," will present a number of historical viewpoints on the encounter of Columbus and native inhabitants, especially of the Mid-lantic region.

John Grim, assistant professor of religion, said the conference will point out a "very strong historical concern for past experiences."

"It gives us, the Bucknell community, a chance to look at our own diversity. We are much more diverse than we think we are. A conference like this makes us realize that we are already diverse," said Grim.

Grim spoke of today, as the world nears the end of a millenium, as a "transitional time." The conference, he said, "in a very small way is trying to enhance critical thinking."

Speakers at this weekend's conference will include both practicing and non-practicing Native Americans, as well as professors of European decent.

"The fact that there are native oral speakers and native academics, as well as non-native academics, is critical investigation," said Grim.

Rather than support certain preconceptions, this will be a "platform for all voices—Native, European, and American," he said.

LaFrance's presentation will be a "narration of his people's early memory" of the Columbian encounter as it has been orally passed down through generations, said Grim.

Grim will close the conference with a presentation entitled "The Encounter at Roanoke: A Comparative Discussion of Religious Values."

His talk will center on the relationship between early English colonists and a tribe of Algonquians along the outerbanks of North Carolina.

"I want to set the Roanoke people in the same type of large historical context in which we generally set the English settlers," he said.

In particular, Grim has investigated the relationsip between three English settlers and two native inhabitants.

Following each of the presentations, discussion will be open to a panel consisting of all of the conference speakers. After the panel discussion, members of the audience will be free to ask further questions.

The presentations will be based on papers, written and submitted by each of the speakers. But the pre-

The Committee on Complementary Activities (CCA) is undergoing a major revision process which will result in the organization's compliance with TIP recommendations.

A powerful governing body, the CCA directs the activites of Psychological Services, Residential Life, the Student Medical Center, Student Activities Committee, the bookstore, dining services, various religious programs and programs for minority and foreign students.

Chandra Guinn, president of CCA, described its mission by reading from the committee's charter, which states that the CCA is "the structure charged with providing oversight to those activities that compliment, extend, and support the mission of the University."

Furthermore, CCA is to "review and recommend policy" for the organizations falling under its umbrella.

CCA is composed of eight student representatives, including the BSG vice president; five faculty members; John Dunlop, dean of students; and Barbara Shailor, vice president for student services. Chandra Guinn '94, who served on the Bucknell Student Government

The crew from Silvertip gained access to the library pipes through a manhole behind the Sigma Chi fraternity house.

Workers are experiencing complications crossing "old lines;" they have had to deal with problems which include steam, electric, and other plumbing lines.

The new plumbing lines are composed of PVC pipe, a plastic composite material that does not require the numerous joints of the clay pipe.

Both the Silvertip workers and the Physical Plant believe that the new material should discourage roots from creeping in, so that this costly procedure can be avoided in the future.

Ann DeClerk, representing the library, offered no further comment other than "the Physical Plant has assured us that the problem will be corrected shortly."

Tour reveals lack of campus lighting

BY MICKI HAMILTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

On the night of Oct. 1, a group of students and administrators took a walking tour of Bucknell's campus to look for places that needed improvements in lighting as well as parking. This group identified at least 20 areas on campus that need illumination.

Robert Naugle, director of the Physical Plant, said that the Director of Public Safety and a representative from the office of residential life usually conduct this tour once or twice every year. Naugle said that to his knowledge, this year was the first time students accompanied the tour. Naugle commented that the students offered a different perspective to the survey.

After the members of the tour have commented on the list of 20 areas and prioritized them, the Physical Plant will be able to do its job, which includes adding outside lights to the dark areas of campus. Naugle said, "We will be doing the physical installation and purchasing once we know the priorities."

Naugle estimated that this project will take a couple of years to finish especially since other surveys will be taken and more areas will be found. Naugle said, "It is a never ending struggle."

Vincent DeCerchio, director of public safety, placed importance on the eventual results of the lighting tour insofar as they will enhance the safety of the Bucknell community. He said, "It is my responsibility to take the initiative to correct safety deficiencies."

His involvement in this tour began last spring when a number of students wrote and visited him indicating their concern over certain areas of campus that they felt were poorly lit. As a result, a formal date was arranged to tour the campus to try to eliminate those concerns.

Melissa Skelton '92, one of the students who accompanied the tour, said she got involved in this project on a personal level after the sexual assault incident which took place behind Roberts hall last spring. After expressing her concerns to Charlotte Weddle, former associate vice president for student life, she was encouraged to find other ways to make the campus safer.

As a result, Skelton took her own tour and compiled a list of areas she considered poorly lit. Skelton remarked, "I have initiated this from a student perspective."

Skelton said, "I think it is likely that the most important changes will be made in the next year or two." She also added that the challenge will be to get the money to fund the improvements.

Chandra Guinn, another student who attended the tour, said she saw her function to the survey as one to, "help Mr. DeCerchio identify poorly lit areas as well as areas with insufficient parking." Guinn also became involved in this project out of her personal interest in safety. She has concerns for herself as well as for her roommates and friends.

In reference to the tour, Guinn said, "I think it was very successful. I will be pleased if I see a significant increase in lighting." Guinn was also encouraged by DeCerchio's receptiveness to her concerns. She commented that the students' input let DeCerchio know the students have concerns about general campus life; things he would otherwise not know.

The group walked across nearly the entire campus, including Faculty Court and Bucknell West. During frequent stops to discuss poor lighting conditions and other safety concerns, DeCerchio recorded into a mini-cassette recorder, those areas which the group pointed out as trouble-spots. DeCerchio then circulated copies of the recommendations to individuals who went on the tour. See LIGHTS, page 4

Space committee considers use of Taylor Hall and Old Bison

BY THERESA KANE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

According to a recent decision by the space committee the Botany building will house the Personnel department and the Career Development Center.

With construction of the biology building nearing completion, the space committee, a standing committee composed of faculty and administrators, is still "considering alternatives" for future use of Taylor Hall and the Old Bison, according to Vice President for Administration Barry Maxwell.

Plans for the Old Bison are "more clear-cut" says Maxwell, noting it will probably be used for a new Craft Shop and additional "student social space."

Members of the Trustee Implementation Plan recommended that the space committee look into turning the Old Bison into social space.

However, before plans are finalized the committee will need to locate "suitable quarters" for the psychology labs presently housed in the building.

The future of Taylor Hall is, Maxwell emphasizes, a "complex" issue, with the committee considering "a number of academic and administrative departments" to occupy the space.

Maxwell said that while some departments are willing to move to Taylor, other groups requested that they not be assigned to the building.

The committee hopes to renovate the building for "linked" departments rather than filling the building with unrelated offices.

Maxwell predicts recommendations to the Board of Trustees will be made "very late this semester."

The committee's plans for renovation of the Botany building to house the Career Development Center and the Personnel office have already been approved.

According to Maxwell, the committee discussed the need of both departments to be located near a parking lot. More than other departments within the University, both are visited frequently by individuals not familiar with the campus.

The renovation process is expected to begin this winter and be completed late next summer.

Director of Construction James Hostetler says the new biology building is "almost done."

Though the building is currently open to the public, work continues on the fourth floor and the west elevation, the plot of land parallel See SPACE, page 4

"Mardi Gras" meets with positive response

BY K. LARS BRUNS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

This year's homecoming events, broadcasting the "Mardi Gras" theme, met with a large and positive student response.

A block party in the parking lot of Northern Central Bank initiated the Bourbon Street-style activities. Although attendance was lower than members of the Homecoming committee had expected, those in attendance enjoyed the music provided by local band Chequered Past.

Speaking about the block party, Homecoming committee member Bob Ritter '92 commented, "For a first-time event, it went rather well. Hopefully it can continue next year."

Saturday morning's annual Homecoming Parade boasted a record fifteen floats from residence halls, fraternities, sororities, and other campus organizations.

"The parade was very well received and it seemed to have gone extremely well," according to Homecoming coordinator Stacie Bershak '92.

Sponsored by Huffman's Office Equipment, Lamda Chi Alpha and Kappa Alpha Theta's float captured first place for Best Overall Appearance, which netted them $300 from the Bucknell Alumni Club of Philadelphia. The Smith/Carey House float won $200 from the 1991 Homecoming Committee for Best Incorporation of Theme.

Kappa Delta Rho and Pi Beta Phi, sponsored by the Wardrobe, won a $100 prize for being the Most Spirited entrance, donated by the Alumni Association Board of Directors.

Ritter, who also served as Parade Chair, said he was "impressed by the enthusiasm shown by the participants," which he attributed to the theme.

Major Handy and the Wolf Couchons provided live entertainment for Saturday night's tent party, held in Davis Gymnasium. Alcohol was not provided so as to permit freshmen to attend this event.

"Because of the rain we had to move it into Davis Gym," explained Bershak, "which probably cut attendance."

Rain also cancelled the fireworks originally planned for Saturday night, with no financial loss to the University.

Events this year were altered slightly to encourage freshman participation. The parade was opened to freshman halls and organizations, and freshmen were welcome at meals and tent party.

"We tried to plan more events to get everyone involved, especially freshmen," said Ritter.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

BEFORE TRUSTING YOUR FUTURE TO ANY COMPANY, ASK FOR SOME LETTERS OF REFERENCE.

You put more than just your savings into a retirement company. You put in your trust and hopes for the future, too. So before you choose one, ask some questions. How stable is the company? How solid are its investments? How sound is its overall financial health?

A good place to start looking for answers is in the ratings of independent analysts. Three companies, all widely recognized resources for finding out how strong a financial services company really is, gave TIAA their top grade.

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS, TIAA IS LETTER-PERFECT.

TIAA received A+ from A.M. Best Co., AAA from Standard & Poor's and Aaa from Moody's Investors Service. These ratings reflect TIAA's reliable claims-paying ability, exceptional financial strength, superior investment performance, and low expenses. With its guaranteed rate of return and opportunity for dividends, TIAA is one of less than ten companies, out of 2,200 nationwide, that received these highest marks.

CREF. FOUR MORE LETTERS EVERYONE SHOULD KNOW.

For further growth potential and diversification, there's the CREF variable annuity with four different investment accounts to give you the flexibility you want as you save for the future.

Together, TIAA and CREF form the nation's largest private retirement system, with over $95 billion in assets and more than 70 years of experience serving the education community. For over one million people nationwide, the only letters to remember are TIAA-CREF.

Some areas cited on the list for lighting improvement included, the south-west corner of Food Services Storage Building on 7th Street, Fraternity Road in front of Theta Chi and between Chi Phi and the Observatory, and the front of Swartz Hall on the campus road.

The group spotted the two sets of steps leading from the Academic Quad to Dent Drive and the north walkway directly above Freas Hall as places which need additional lighting. Also, Naugle and DeCerchio discussed the possibility of not turning off the inside lights of the buildings which surround the Academic Quad; the light from within buildings would help to illuminate the quad, they said.

In the downhill section of the campus some suggested placing additional light along the walkway from the rear of Smith Hall along Vedder Hall to Saint George Street, the Quad at the rear of Vedder, the Special Interest House Parking Lot, between Bucknell Hall and the President's House, and the Gateways Parking Lot.

Other suggestions included increased lighting of the creek side of Moore Avenue parking lot, Cemetary Road leading to the rear of Davis Gym, the Faculty Court Garage, the new Tennis Courts between the Fieldhouse and Route 15, Bucknell West, Moore Avenue on the Langone Center side of the avenue, and in front of Phi Psi.

Admininstrators and faculty on the tour included DeCerchio, Naugle, Butler, and Barbara Shailor, vice president for student services. Students on the tour were Skelton, Guinn, and Tara Gilligan.

as a freshman, is now the head of CCA.

According to Guinn, "The TIP guidelines have mandated the establishment of a residential life committee as a subcommittee of CCA."

However, the CCA already has the Committee on Greek Life (COGL) as a subcommittee. The revision is meant to establish a better relationship between COGL and the residential life committees.

Furthermore, the TIP recommendation states that "CCA be broken up so that it could more effectively communicate with the services under its umbrella." This will probably entail breaking up CCA past COGL and residential life into a myriad of subcommittees.

According to Guinn, the governing structure of the CCA is under review and the committee "is responding to this in light of President Sojka's review."

An altercation between Lewisburg middle and Lewisburg high school students occurred in the restroom at the stadium during the Lewisburg high school football game. Students were removed to the exterior of the stadium and East Buffalo Police Department were notified. Throwing knives were removed from the individuals. Investigation being conducted by EBPD.

Saturday, Oct. 12

Several Lewisburg youths were escorted from the Fieldhouse for being disorderly at that location. They were advised since they do not have passes, if they were seen at that location again, trespassing charges would be filed against them.

A student reported that his bicycle was removed from the bike rack in front of the Fieldhouse. This was at 2:45 p.m. At 6:24 p.m., this date, a report was received that a bike was found by the stadium. It was the victim's property and was returned to him.

Sunday, Oct. 13

Unknown person(s) poked three holes into the walls of the gameroom at the Langone Center. A pool cue was the apparent instrument to pierce the walls. Several holes were also evident in the ceiling tiles. Pool balls were also stolen.

Officers responded to a noise complaint in the area of University Ave. where 5 to 7 individuals were wrestling. Students were asked to leave and complied. Moments later, two of the individuals were seen in front of Coleman at which time they dropped a barricade and ran. One was apprehended; it was learned the barricade was removed from the library construction site. The apprehended student had been consuming alcoholic beverages under the legal drinking age. University charges will be filed.

Monday, Oct. 14

An investigation is being conducted on the report that an employee was hit by a tennis ball while walking behind Harris on this date at approx. 1:30 p.m. A male individual was observed in the window area from where the ball came and an identification was made of the perpetrator.

Tuesday, Oct. 15

Two Bucknell students will be charged for underage drinking as the result of an incident the date when officers were called on the report of unknown person(s) maliciously using the university telephone at the Gateway complex.

Officers were informed by student security that an act of vandalism had just occurred and perpetrators were in a vehicle parked on Lit Road. Vandalism consisted of flipping of a bench and tearing papers on the bulletin board to the east of the library. It was discovered that the two students were highly intoxicated and one was under the legal drinking age. To be charged by the University for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

Many CD's, a CD player, and two walkmans were removed from a student's residence room in one of the Mods. Door was locked while occupants were not within the room although one window may have been unlocked. East Buffalo Police were notified and responded to the scene. One of the walkmans was recovered and East Buffalo is continuing the investigation.

Amherst financial aid jeopardized

Amherst University has recently announced that it will no longer be accepting all students, regardless of their financial aid need.

In the past, the college has considered each applicant without looking at financial need, and now the Office of Admissions has decided to consider all applicants, but if a student's financial need should outweigh the amount that the university is allocated to spend, that applicant will be brought up for reconsideration.

Officials at Amherst suggest that this will not greatly affect the incoming class of '96, although financial aid for the class of '95 has been a record high.

Students score high on SAT's

Liberty University students in Lynchburg, Virginia, have recently proven that their school excels in standardized test averages.

In total scores, the college averaged 906 on the SAT's, compared to the state average of 890, and the national average of 896.

Nationally, the SAT's are only given to approximately 30% of all students, and the states with the highest scores have only 5% of their students taking the SAT's. Dr. James McCormick, school superintendent, commented that "if Lynchburg would have the top 5% of the students test, Lynchburg would be significantly above the national average."

CMU accidentally overpays workers

Some of those students working over the summer at Carnegie Mellon University received an unexpected bonus on their last August paycheck.

Due to a computer malfunction, Payroll Supervisor Jim Boshears discovered that some of his employees had been given paychecks which were worth twice as much as they would typically get. After discovering the blunder, Boshears wrote to all those affected by the payroll glitch, and gave them the option of either paying the money back, or having it deducted from their next paycheck.

Michael Colaianne, a junior who received one of the problem paychecks, said, "It's a real inconvenience. I think they handled the whole thing unprofessionally."

F&M announces tuition increase

Franklin and Marshall students will see an increase in their college tuition for next year of 6.9% making it a whopping $22,330. This follows on the heels of a 7.5% increase from the previous year.

According to Richard Hoffmann, vice president of budget and planning, "The College wouldn't have a prayer of putting together a budget without that 6.9 percent increase, without eliminating a large number of positions and cutting into the academic program... [The College] is raising tuition not because of cost but because other comparison schools are charging more also."

Those comparison schools mentioned include Amherst, Colgate, Haverford, Williams, Swarthmore, Oberlin, and Carleton. Bucknell was not mentioned.

—The College Reporter

Colleges hit by budget cuts

The Albrightian, Albright College's student newspaper, reports that nearly half of the nation's colleges and universities suffered from mid-year budget cuts.

This figure was obtained from a recent survey conducted by the American Council on Education.

Elaine El-Khawa, vice president for political analysis and research, said, "Challeges are facing...more serious financial problems than I've seen in a decade...This is a fiscal problem, not a student demand problem. It's because of the fiscal problems in 30 states. Institutions will face hard choices concerning cutting back academic programs."

The report, which was released in August, showed that 45% of all colleges and universities experienced mid-year budget cuts for '90–'91.

The only action that schools have been able to take thus far is to delay the construction of building and the buying of new equipment, as well as reducing the size of their faculty, which will slowly take place during the next half-decade.

How to eat healthfully when in a hurry

BY JOYCE DOLLINGER AND LISA LIPARI
Bucknellian Staff Writers

As hungry Americans who are always on the go, we often do not think about what we put into our mouths. For many people, especially college students who have no time or place to cook, frequently eating out at fast food restaurants seems to be the answer only too often. However, many of us do not realize that too much supposedly time-saving fast food and take-out can be hazardous to our health. Luckily, there are healthy alternatives easily within reach.

Why is it that health food stores have more goodies to offer than the average fast food joint, yet we still don't find them appealing? After all, both health food stores and fast food restaurants serve food from the four basic food groups. And why is it that when an average American walks into a health food store, his first bodily gesture is always a cringe? After all, isn't this supposed to be the era of "the healthy body?"

There are four basic differences between restaurant/fast food and health food: preparation, quality control, "empty calories," and the little "extras" that are served with your meal. The majority of fast food restaurants fry their food in oils and many of those who claim not to use oils during preparation use fatty foods instead.

Consequently, the quality of the food that is being served must be questioned. While we know what is being served in our own kitchens, we do not have quality control when we venture into the kitchen of others. For example, can we be 100% sure that those chicken nuggets we ate really weren't processed chicken? Probably not.

In addition to these concerns, the "empty calories" in these foods are of no use to the body. Foods with empty calories are defined as those that are high in calories, but low in vitamins and minerals. Therefore, they provide no nutritional value. The candy bar is a classic example of such a food. We know they say that Snickers "really satisfies," but what does it satisfy? It may satisfy your hunger, but not your nutritional requirements.

Traci Mellinger—The Bucknellian

The salad bar in the Bison is a lunch and dinner alternative for those who want to eat quickly and nutritionally. To top your lettuce and spinach, pasta salads, fruits and vegetables, and low-cal salad dressings are available. Turkey, chicken, and cheese can be bought from the deli bar to make the salad a meal.

The biggest source of empty calories is in the "extras" that are served with meals. All of the dressings, sauces, and other other various toppings, including ketchup, contribute to this evil category.

The United States Department of Agriculture developed a food pyramid which presents a categorization of recommended daily intake. Fats, oils, and sweets are on the top, where the pyramid is the smallest. Milk, yogurt, cheese, meat, poultry, fish, dry beans, eggs, and nuts compromise the middle section of the pyramid. Vegetables, fruits, bread, cereal, rice, and pasta are placed where the pyramid is the widest, meaning that we should eat the most of them.

Fast food restaurants which serve salads and grilled chicken and pasta are not the only places that offer healthy alternatives. Here at Bucknell, both the Terrace room and the cafeteria serve fresh fruit, skim milk, salads, and light bread. Even the Bison offers healthy snack alternatives.

While fast foods are alright once in a while, they are certainly not a strong foundation for a stable dietary pyramid. Students should be aware that there are speedy meal choices available to them besides the traditional fast food and take-out.

So the next time you order that McLean sandwich, think, "Is this McLean... or McFat?"

New light shed on an old problem

Campus has been in the dark for too long, but finally both the administration and the student body can see the light at the end of the tunnel.

Several students and administrators recently toured every inch of campus, from the Art Barn to Tustin Theatre. They were looking for areas which are dimly lit at night and which could serve to conceal an attacker from unsuspecting students.

What they found was nearly two dozen poorly illuminated areas — areas which need immediate attention.

As evidenced by last week's attempted sexual assault on the lawn between Rooke Chapel and the Langone Center, our campus is not immune from danger or crime. Bright, revealing lights scare away marauders and reassure late-night walkers.

While we agree with some critics that a poorly planned addition of flood lights would destroy some of the nighttime beauty of campus, aesthetic concerns can not be placed in front of concerns about students' safety. We recommend a carefully designed plan for strategic placement of new lights to illuminate dark areas which would simultaneously maintain the natural attractiveness of those areas.

While the lighting survey is being evaluated, we encourage students to make use of the provisions and suggestions already in place to protect their safety... that is, walk only in pairs, and if you must travel alone at night, call Public Safety for an escort. You might also wish to visit the Bookstore and pick up a free whistle or $5.99 electronic alarm. Most importantly, however, voice your opinions about the lighting situation on campus and get involved.

Congratulations to the student initiators of this most recent lighting survey and to the Public Safety and Physical Plant representatives who will make the survey's recommendations come to life. It seems the light has finally come on.

Junior criticizes beliefs about Judge Thomas

TO THE EDITOR:

I have read with amusement Rob Schroeder and David Barry's editorial decrying the dearth of information on Judge Thomas's personal philosophy. I'm afraid that liberals have no one but themselves to blame for this occurrence. The crucifixion of Robert Bork, a character assassination carried out by the honorable Kennedy-Biden duo, has left the President with no choice but to nominate candidates with a slim paper trail and tight lips.

In addition, I disagree with their belief in the right of citizens to judge who should and who shouldn't sit on the Supreme Court. Any investigation into the writings of the Founding Fathers on this issue will reveal that the potential for public influence was a major concern of the Framers. They envisioned the Supreme Court as responsible to no other entity other than the Constitution. At best, the system was designed to allow the public extremely limited control over its workings.

Questioning nominees on their political beliefs and selecting them on this basis amounts to citizen control over the Court, which is clearly out of line. Obviously, President Bush has done this; it is his right, not ours. The Senate is responsible for approving nominees on the basis of personal honor and integrity, something of which Thomas has plenty.

"...the President [has] no choice but to nominate candidates with a slim paper trail and tight lips."

It's too bad the same can't be said for those who sit in judgement of this man. In response to Senator Biden, who whined that 'the system is broken.' Yes, it is broken. You are to blame.

Alumna expresses support for Abowitz

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to applaud the views of Deborah Abowitz as stated in the Sept. 20 issue of The Bucknellian regarding the Intervarsity Christian Fellowship and the Panhellenic Council vis-a-vis Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur.

As a Bucknell graduate ('63), I am sometimes asked by Jewish friends whether I believe Bucknell is a place for them to send their offspring.

My positive response to my friends' questions has been validated by the heartening news appearing in various alumni publications over the last decade or so, as well as the recently articulated university goals set forth in the University Council's Foundations for the Future: A Strategic Plan for Bucknell:

there is an absolute, clearly stated intent to increase cultural diversity at Bucknell. I am also impressed with the many forms of active "outreach" which Bucknell currently engages in to try to achieve that goal. Various admissions and recruiting practices, as well as the program involving bringing non-traditional junior-college students, from Philadelphia, onto Bucknell's campus, are examples of ongoing activist university policies deriving (it would seem) from an authentic concern for making Bucknell more culturally diverse—racially, religiously, ethnically, socio-economically.

The advantages of greater diversity are self-apparent: a university milieu richer, more sophisticated and more intellectually exciting as a context for acquiring a truly liberal education; and a university more reflective of the society in which it exists (and thus arguably better able to prepare its students to become leaders of that society.)

Ms. Abowitz's article suggests that efforts may be the easy part. The really tricky part of diversification lies in the many gestures big and small, overt and subtle, which should take place on campus to accommodate the Jewish or African-American or lower middle class student who has opted to become part of the Bucknell community. If cultural diversification is an accepted goal, then it becomes the responsibility of the entire Bucknell community—administrators, faculty members, and students—to be aware of the various religious, cultural, and even emotional sensitivities of the small groups of students which constitute the University's several minority groups. This is not always easy. It is in fact often a nuisance. But it is absolutely necessary.

I will continue to encourage my own and my friends' children to apply to Bucknell. I received an excellent education at Bucknell, and while I did feel that the cultural environment was too homogeneous (1959-63), I am encouraged at the university's current continuing efforts to diversify.

I hope and trust that there will be a concomitant day-in, day-out effort made at all levels of theUniversity to make the minority member student feel more "at home" at Bucknell—to feel truly integrated into the community—to be regarded less as "other" in an alien sense, and more as "other" in an accepting, culturally enriching sense.

It's utterly appropriate, in my view, to have procedures in place to insure faculty, administrative, or student oversight to try to prevent such future occurrences as distributing Christian conversion material on Rosh Hashanah, or holding rush on Yom Kippur eve.

Finally, it's reassuring to know that Deborah Abowitz is at Bucknell as faculty member and student adviser. I thank her for her vigilant sensitivity and her clear-headed articulation of a problem she knows needs to be addressed.

Sojka calls for mutual respect among students

TO THE EDITOR:

As is pointed out in the brochure, "Let's Say It Up Front, The Sky Is Not The Limit," a University community depends upon mutual respect, trust, cooperation, acceptance of diversity, and an appreciation of the rights of others.

The "take-home lesson" in this publication is to affirm the University's commitment to considerate, moderate, and lawful behavior and to urge appropriate treatment of all members of our community.

One of those rights is the right to be free from the harmful effects of harassing behavior, which increasingly is an alarming problem on college campuses and is strong evidence of a growing disdain for persons from other cultures or religions or persons having different lifestyles.

There have been some instances since the start of the fall term of intolerance at Bucknell which have involved unprovoked harassment and insensitivity. Some of our University members have been subjected to offensive comments and gestures. These offensive comments have consisted largely of profane or lewd references to the presumed lifestyle, including sexual orientation, of the assaulted person. Many in our community are also aware of apparent incidents of insensitivity or unnecessary antagonism.

To be sure, some individuals who would engage in these kinds of behavior would cite their rights of freedom of expression to act in this fashion. That may be true, but I believe that in a special community of this kind, it is reasonable to expect more from its members.

Differences will exist, but all of us should be reminded that antagonism and insensitivity are inappropriate. On the other hand, harassment, whither sexual or racial, is unacceptable behavior at Bucknell and may subject an individual to disciplinary action. For most of us, this reminder is not necessary. Promulgating additional rules and regulations will not likely improve the climate on this campus.

Rather, let us all reaffirm the principle that we should treat others as we wish to be treated ourselves.

A letter to Senator Specter

TO THE EDITOR:

You have accused Anita Hill of "flat-out perjury."

I understand that you sought to protect Clarence Thomas's nomination to the Supreme Court. But nagging questions remain.

Why have you confused seeking truth with destroying a witness? Why have you brought the disgrace of rape trials, where the victim is put on trial, to the U. S. Senate? Why have you enacted the most corrupt of courtroom tactics on national television? Why have you disgraced us so?

I can only conclude the following. The nomination of Clarence Thomas in the first place used racial tensions to put one more conservative on the court. To oppose him would seem to be against African-Americans. The strategy works. Anita Hill's story was a real threat to the success of that strategy. She had to be destroyed in order to protect the project of packing the court with conservatives. It's that simple.

But it's not simple at all. The use of racial tensions for political purposes works, but it makes those tensions worse. The use of rape-trial tactics works as well, but gender too is a division that becomes embittered by such use. The bashing of gays and lesbians, the jailing of homeless people, the slaughter of Iraqi — all work to mobilize power. But they all leave wreckage, bitterness and distrust and rage that gets exploited once again by even more unscrupulous politicians.

Your treatment of Anita Hill is part of a deterioration of political clarity and decency. You have served us badly indeed.

A problem with the solution

BY ELLIOT FRANK

Please draw your attention to the following text, because its wisdom may provide you with a candle of reason to see by in this often murky reality we call life. This discussion deals with the new and improved Bucknell drinking policy, and how it mirrors the currently ineffective U.S. policy concerned with drugs and alcohol. The rule's main purpose: to curb the abusive use of alcoholic products at Bucknell University. Unfortunately, its methodology makes about as much sense as going shark fishing with a paper clip.

As understood by this scribe, the fact that each person is responsible for their own alcohol is commendable. We are all legally adults, though we don't always act like it. The biggest thorn in my side is the school's limitations on the fraternities and other organized groups. The Administration, like the Government, doesn't realize their solution is the problem. I have news for them: Rough times lie ahead for our "bubble,"and the pin draws ever closer.

Put on your rose-colored glasses people, because I have a scenario for you. Just suppose there were no alcohol or drug laws. By this I mean that we treated a beer as a drink, not as a crime.

Welcome to the world of decriminalization, a new perspective on an old problem. From this policy, I believe that not only would there be a downward trend in the abuse of alcohol, but also a noticeable decline in drug-related violence. The model deals with a world where drugs and alcohol could be treated like any other consumer good. In the auspices of the common market the products can be controlled for quality, price, and most importantly taken off the streets.

Learning about the effects of such mood-altering drugs could take place in a controlled environment at home. Often experimentation takes place in secret, where there is usually no one there to help you if trouble arises. People wouldn't have to kill for drugs, because their price would be significantly less and the "pusher" would go the way of the Dodo. If the money currently applied to the "Drug War" was applied to more social help and recovery programs, we might not have such abuse.

President Bush just doesn't realize that abuse is a disease, not a crime. However, the people who know what's best for you don't apply this strategy.

The game plan is to annihilate drug and alcohol abuse, and they "stab it with their steely knives but they still can't kill the beast" (Thanks Eagles.) This act of problem denial is principally why the United States has so many problems with abuse. We simply ignored the problem until it developed into a gigantic catastrophe.

A tooth makes a great analogy. If you brush your teeth and do all the good things your mom dictated, everything will be fine. However, what if you get a cavity? You don't make a law that the tooth will not hurt, because your tooth is not obedient. One goes to get it fixed, and while a trip to the doctor will not cure the alcohol problem, confronting it will at least alleviate the pain.

In conclusion, let me say that I realize some of the readers who started this article have already put it down. However, those who remain should look around you and observe the course of life.

Someone famous said that those who do not remember the past are doomed to repeat it. Bucknell must have forgotten about prohibition. Has the dorm room next to you turning into a "speakeasy," serving alcohol under raps? Are people walking around (and maybe even driving around) heavily under the influence? Are there more Jack Daniels bottles in the recycler than Busch cans? This is because it is a whole heck of a lot easier getting a bottle up to the room than two cases.

This text is not the edict of God, just an alternative view from a person looking at our problems from a different direction. I'd like to quote Sesame Street in saying, "Who are the people in your neighborhood?" Are they beer chugging, pot-smoking monsters, or are they pristine members of society?

Before you judge them, think about the restricted position society places us in. I strongly believe a solution will come about only when alcohol and drugs are accepted as an ingrained part of the American past, and future.

Greeks should uphold Bucknell's values and goals

BY TIMOTHY W. KIRK

Events over the past four weeks have really led me to wonder at the apparent ignorance (if not ignorance, then forgetfulness) of many Greeks at Bucknell. It was less than two years ago that Greeks were called to band together and create a unified front to combat the threat of the faculty passing George Jenks' motion to disband the Greek system.

"The Greek system [should utilize] the resources of a group of individuals sharing a special bond to effectively lead the way in academic, social, and philanthropic pursuits."

Rallies were held in front of the library, men and women donned letters and badges to proudly display their Greek affiliation, and students were empassioned with emotion and conviction.

Not only were you a Chi Phi or a Kappa, you were a part of a strong tradition at Bucknell which, it was claimed, upheld the values and goals of the University in an exemplary manner.

What happened? Several incidents in the past weeks have started to rekindle old Greek rivalries and create new ones as well. These are not merely harmless pranks.

What we have here are criminal offenses: criminal trespass, burglary, theft, disorderly conduct, terroristic threats, and arson just to name a few. Our activities as Greeks are not only breaking the law and costing innocent persons and organizations money, more importantly they are overshadowing the positive aspects of fraternity and sorority life.

We tend to forget that although we have made it through one threat to our existence, there are many out there who are stockpiling evidence with which to launch another offensive on the Greek community, and we are playing right into their hands. When you wear letters, non-Greeks aren't thinking, "Oh, didn't your house have that philanthropy for the homeless last week?" They're saying, "Hey, that's the house that stole 'x' last week."

My concern rests not only on the impression we're giving to non-Greeks, but to the tension and animosity we are creating within our own community as Greeks.

Fraternities and sororities were not created to break the law and be organizations plagued with rivalry and fractionalization.

The Greek system should be a vanguard, utilizing the resources of a group of individuals sharing a special bond to effectively lead the way in academic, social, and philanthropic pursuits.

We are losing sight of our purpose. Many of our members don't even know what our purpose is. We are being given the proverbial rope, and, should we continue on this same path, we will hang ourselves in front of an eager and joyous audience.

Reminders for joggers

TO THE EDITOR:

Each year we find that there are problems that develop between students who wish to jog on the roads in the area and local residents who drive on the roads in their neighborhoods. Many of these drivers become irate when confronted with the prospect of having to share the road. Often they call and complain, tell of being verbally abused by joggers, or having rocks thrown at them.

This problem is a dangerous one for our students. Fortunately, we have not had a serious injury to this point in time, but unless some safety precautions are taken this activity is one which can lead to a dangerous situation for joggers. We encourage you to carefully adhere to the following:

A. Jog on the shoulder or far-outside part of the road.
B. Jog facing traffic.
C. Run in a single line when oncoming traffic approaches.
D. Remember that the roads are built for cars. You need to yield the legal right of way. Failure to do so could result in an accident.
E. Use alternate, less traveled roads for jogging or bicycling.
F. Wear bright-colored clothing.
G. Wear reflective clothing if you run at night.
H. Run only in lighted areas at night.

It is very important to remember that in an accident with a car or truck you will be badly hurt. Especially at the end of the day, drivers often have a low tolerance level for other frustrations in their daily activities. Please be careful, move to the side of the road, and be considerate of the use of the roadways. It can only help the relationship with the community and it will be better for your safety.

Performance artist disappoints viewer

TO THE EDITOR:

I purchased my Laurie Anderson tickets almost immediately after the announcement of her Weis Center appearance. Ten years ago, I was stunned by this brilliant performance artist at a concert in Pittsburgh. At that time her Big Science album was innovative and exciting, in stark contrast to other lifeless pop music. It was my good fortune to interview Ms. Anderson about her music and her even livelier stage performances. Obviously, I am a fan. Following last Saturday night's performance I'm a disappointed fan.

"There was precious little of the vibrancy and humor of the Laurie Anderson that I've known."

There was precious little of the vibrancy and humor of the Laurie Anderson that I've known. Yes, everyone changes and has the right to change, especially a performance artist, but this performance was flat and dull. I found this odd because while she has become more political and more outspoken this added weight appears to be an uncomfortable load. Laurie seems troubled and angry yet unable to harness that energy in her usual creative fashion. Consequently, we get a rambling monologue about complex social problems, interspersed with a personal narrative about family, friends, and the problems of being an artist in these repressive 90's. I had flashes of the annoying self- absorption of Lenny Bruce when he read his obscenity trial transcripts during his concert.

Ms. Anderson did give the audience several outs. "If you're looking for the common thread," she quipped, "refer to the title." We looked at our program "Voices From the Beyond." Oh, that explains it. This is just a bad dream. Later, she almost points the audience to the exits announcing, "This is almost over, so if you want to stretch or dance to...one of my favorite tunes." Without explanation we get a recording of "How Much is that Doggie in the Window?" I'm sorry, even the title didn't help this intrusive break in the performance; even Laurie left the stage.

I'm disappointed not just because of a poor performance, but because Laurie Anderson is capable of comment on war, sexism, racism, homophobia, challenges to free speech in a manner that is much more provocative, stimulating, and even entertaining. It's good that she is motivated by such issues. MTV should hire her as a political analyst for the presidential election. She's still courageous and feisty, but this isn't enough. She lost an opportunity to reach a large, mixed-age audience who rarely have a chance to see such a dynamic and different artist. As I left the Weis Center, one elderly gentleman succinctly summed up the evening. "Well, that was a dud," he said to his companion. I fear that the programming staff of the Weis Center is already feeling a backlash and it may be a long time before we see another avant-garde performance artist. This is the most disturbing consequence of Laurie Anderson's lackluster effort.

OPINIONS

On my mind...

Every once in a while we as individuals are confronted with a situation that allows us to find out who we really are. Experiencing the college life as a whole over the span of four years provides a general answer to this ongoing question, but I find that we truly learn and grow from specific experiences.

A variety of personal accomplishments or events occurring at school develop into the memories that people take with them as they leave the university environment: how the person managed to succeed in a particularly memorable (and difficult) class, how he or she was able to commit to a significant relationship for the first time, what obstacles were overcome for the person to make the athletic team or honor society, and so on.

One challenge that I'm currently working through is living with an injury. Despite the fact that I've only had to function with this debilitating state for less than two weeks, the experience has already been both enlightening and memorable. A few years from now when I reflect upon the beginning of my junior year, I'll likely recall the following conclusions that I've drawn from sustaining an injury.

As I work through my temporary and relatively minor setback, I've developed a tremendous admiration for those individuals who are permanently disabled. I have been able to understand better the my new situation, and I must learn how to adjust and excel with my remaining abilities. Yet at the same time I must allow others to take class notes for me and help me tie my shoe. It's a frustrating experience, but a character-building one as well.

I've always been guilty of looking too much into the future rather than the present. If there is one lesson to be learned from this "event," perhaps it is that I should slow down and primarily think about what is going on in the present, and plan how I intend to accomplish what needs to be done just in the next week, day, or hour. Working with an injury calls for immediate attention, as everyday achievements which normally appear mundane suddenly become major projects.

I'd be hard-pressed to find a more stressful and crucial time in my life than the final two years of college, but this whole experience has helped me recall one of those philosophical quotes that I keep in the back of my mind. The author's name escapes me, but the scribe noted, "Now and then it's good to pause in our pursuit of happiness and just be happy." Pretty sound advice.

"I have been able to understand better the frustration people go through when they don't have full use of their physical capabilities."

Peace activist from The Washington Post speaks

BY DAVID BARRY
Bucknellian Staff Writer

"The United States spends 800 million dollars a day on military programs. That's $300 billion a year, $1.5 million a minute, and $13,000 a second," said guest lecturer Colman McCarthy on Wednesday October 9, in the U.C. Forum. McCarthy is a nationally syndicated columnist for the Washington Post, teaches courses on nonviolence at Georgetown University law school and is an adjunct professor at the University of Maryland, in addition to being a volunteer at a local high school. In 1985, McCarthy founded the Center for Teaching Peace. Members of the center include such notables as Senator Mark Hatfield, Joan Baez, Nobel Peace Laureate Adolfo Perez Esquivel, and Sargent Shriver.

McCarthy delivered his very powerful speech on effective peacemaking by using a very low key style of delivery. He intermixed jokes with very strong messages about violence in our society. This technique achieved his desired affect. It was very easy to feel that this man cares about his audience and their opinions on today s pressing issues. His speaking style led to an atmosphere that was conducive to thought and discussion.

McCarthy did not condemn people because they happen to believe in something different than he does, he just asked them to give his ideas a little thought. McCarthy was sure that people would see his way when they realized how easily nonviolence could work. He pointed out that we have tried to achieve peace through violence for to long of a time. This has obviously not worked with almost "eighty million people dying in wars this century." He stressed that the most important aspect of life is peaceful coexistence among people.

At the end of the lecture, McCarthy showed a moving slide show made by one of his former students. The audience was visibly upset when they saw some of the slides. These slides made the audience wonder how society could do these things to each other and to the animals of this world. To him, the way that humans treat animals is representative of how easily violence can be ignored and forgotten about. We can never be a peaceful society unless we treat every living thing with dignity.

McCarthy also visited campus to help organize a peace studies course. He visited a number of classrooms and talked with students about his ideas on nonviolence. He also spoke about how helpful a peace course would be in the educational experience for all Bucknell students. Such a course is on the books for the spring semester. The course is being coordinated by psychology Professor Ernie Keen with the help of other faculty and students. The course will be a 200 level University course that will have rotating lecturers. McCarthy believes that there is a great need for peaceful alternatives to be taught on campuses. He believes that it should be started from the beginning of a child's education. Unfortunately, this has not been the case in the past. Now people need all the information they can receive about pacifism.

We, as students are flooded with information concerning wars and military leaders, but it is vary rare to hear about successful and important nonviolent thinkers. There has to be a rethinking in the way we, as a society, view violence.

Delgado fulfills his American dream

Spanish professor wins the Teaching Award of Excellence due to commitment to students

Traci Mellinger—The Bucknellian

Professor Delgado won his award for excellent teaching because of his dedication to truly helping his students learn. Four other professors were given such distinguished awards recently.

BY ELIZABETH DANNEBERG
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The American Dream. While only a vision for some, it is a living reality for Spanish Professor Manuel Delgado, who has spent most of his life in Granada, Spain. When he arrived in America, Delgado not only had to adjust to the American way of life, but at the same time he had to adapt to the American university system.

Delgado, who teaches two intermediate Spanish classes and a Spanish literature class, came to the United States in the 1970's to receive his Ph.D. in Spanish from the University of Texas at Austin. He then came to Bucknell as a visiting professor for one year in 1981, only to return seven years later. In between his years at Bucknell, Delgado taught at MIT for four years and at Virginia Tech for two years. In 1988, he came back to Bucknell University, where he belongs! Now, Delgado is in his fourth year of teaching here, and plans on staying. "I love Bucknell students, so I was very pleased to come back," Delgado says cheerfully.

Delgado's philosophy of teaching is simple. He says, "If we enjoy learning, we learn more." He aims to "know each student's needs in particular, as human beings, not as a class." He feels, "I am not only testing them, I am helping them to learn." Delgado prefers to keep his classes small, so that he can give himself fully to each student.

With this philosophy in mind, it should be no surprise that Delgado was one of three recipients of The Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Award For Distinguished Teaching. The nominations were solicited from faculty and student evaluations. He says "I was very pleased that my students and colleagues respect my work. My American dream has become a reality." Philosophy Professor Jeffrey Turner and Management Professor Nancy Weid were the other two recipients of the award. The awards were announced at commencement and convocation.

At that time three other awards were given. The other winners were: Professor David Cartwright (Class of 1956 Lectureship), Professors. Gerald Levin and Tom Travis (The Sears-Roebuck Foundation Teaching Excellence and Campus Leadership), and Dorothy McRae (The Virginia Travis Lectureship In Social Justice).

Calling all "rioters," police,and pagans

Halloween's history provides enlightening insights into last year's party, offers new ideas

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

There's nothing like being potentially hosed, arrested, jailed, or chewed to death by dogs just because you are trying to carry forth Halloween tradition. Just ask any participant in last Halloween's Seventh Street celebration.

While the "rioters," the police, the rudely awakened President Sojka, Dean Dunlop, and Head of Security probably did not realize it in the early a.m. hours, the block partiers were actually carrying out a traditional, ritualistic celebration of Halloween that dates back 2000 years ago to the rowdy Celts.

The Celts' new year began on November 1, so the night before (October 31!) they would hold a celebration to mark the start of the season of coldness, darkness, and decay. The big party was held in honor of the lord of death, Samhain. To celebrate, the Celts would build bonfires, make sacrifices, and dress in costume.

Later, after these pagan people converted to Christianity, their church established November 1 as All Saints' Day. These people, who were now called the English, were still allowed to honor the dead, but the occasion was changed to All Souls' Day and moved to November 2. Soon afterwards, the church of England abolished the holiday altogether. Still, some Protestants continued to celebrate the holiday by playing pranks and games, lighting bonfires, telling fortunes, and decorating the graves of the dead.

These Protestants called their informal celebration Halloween, since the service held on All Saints' Day was called Allhallowmas. We celebrate Halloween in America today because a number of the pranksters in England sailed to America to seek their religious freedom from the abolitionist church of England.

The truly American custom of "trick-or-treating" did not start until the late 1940's in most parts of the country.

This Halloween, in our celebration to mark the start of coldness, darkness, and decay in Lewisburg, may the Lewisburg, East Buffalo, the PA state police, and even the Federal Penitentiary guards not act like the prohibiting church of England and may we make the pagans proud, but without becoming one of the dead to be worshipped next year.

Craig Bitter—The Bucknellian

Legitimate Halloween traditions to try

(these won't put you in jail, but will please the pagans, especially if used in conjunction with other forms of celebration.)

—On Halloween night, while out scoping, peel an apple and toss the peeling over your left shoulder. The letter formed will be your future spouse's first initial.

—Walk around your house or town three times with a mouth full of water or other liquid refreshment. The first man/woman you meet will be your husband/wife.

—Bake a cake with a coin in it. Whoever gets the coin will be wealthy.

—Build a bonfire.

—Get dressed up and go trick-or-treating. You won't have to buy penny candy in the Bison for weeks and can use the money you save for other aspects of your Halloween celebration.

—Buy a pumpkin and make a jack-o-lantern to show your Halloween support. Pumpkins are plentiful on the lot next to Days Inn in Lewisburg and in the center of Montandon on both the left and right sides of Route 45.

IF YOU'RE INTO DOPE, YOU MIGHT AS WELL SMOKE THIS.

There's one sure way to see your future go up in smoke. Do drugs. Last year alone, America's businesses lost more than $60 billion to drugs. So this year, most of the Fortune 500 will be administering drug tests. If you fail the test, you're out of a job. The message is simple. Doing drugs could blow your whole education.

WE'RE PUTTING DRUGS OUT OF BUSINESS.

Alumna returns to design Shakespearean costumes

BY NICOLE COBBAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The actors in the Department of Theatre and Dance's production of Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream seem to float across the stage, their costumes flowing behind them like waves. Beth Kalbach-Phelps '83, the costume designer for the show, modeled the costumes after the drawings of Arthur Rackum, a fantastical illustrator who depicts mostly woodland, or fairy scenes.

Kalbach-Phelps entered Bucknell determined not to get involved in theater. She warns that, "Theater is a really difficult thing to decide to do." Instead she wanted to enter into a profession that was more stable than the positions offered in the theatrical world.

Despite her own advice, Kalbach-Phelps saw a few productions and was involved with costume designing for others by Spring of her freshman year. She graduated from Bucknell in a three year independent study program with a major in theater and a minor in education.

The real attraction for Kalbach-Phelps, however, is in puppetry. She cited Jeffrey Walter's production of Minimada as exciting her to enter into the theater program. Under Harvey Powers, Kalbach-Phelps' independent study program concentrated on puppetry.

After graduation, Kalbach-Phelps went to work for Artists in Education, an agency committed to funnelling artists into the school system. She also entered into a puppet company where she has worked for the last eight years.

In addition, she and her husband opened an interdisciplinary art center for collaborative and developmental work. Presently Kalbach-Phelps presides as the executive director and artist in residence.

Allie Zadroga—The Bucknellian

Beth Kalbach-Phelps '83 displays some fabric that will be used to make costumes with "the rich, luxurious patterns of the Victorian era."

The center houses two theater companies and has a theater program geared especially towards children 6–12 years of age in which they use "lots of puppets."

Kalbach-Phelps re-entered Bucknell's theater program as a freelance artist. Kate Pogue, the director of A Midsummer Night's Dream handed Kalbach-Phelps the task of designing costumes suited to the period of the play, ancient Greece, but that also incorporated the ideas of Arthur Rackum, turn of the century high Victorian. Kalbach-Phelps returned with designs fashioned to the play, but with "rich, luxurious patterns of the Victorian era."

Freelancing for other organizations as well, Kalbach-Phelps has directed, designed, and done make-up for various television, summer stock, and local college productions.

Kalbach-Phelps never regrets her decision to enter into the field of theater, despite her own initial hesitation. She loves meeting new and interesting people and she claims that, "in this business, you're constantly meeting people." She doesn't even consider what she does a job. "A job I think of as drudgery, work." Instead she's participating in something that gives her the "chance to be constantly challenged and stressed."

Two midsummer nights

Kennedy Center Acting Company

The Acting Company from Kennedy Center of the Performing Arts will present William Shakespeare's classic comedy, A Midsummer Night's Dream at Bucknell University. The performance will take place on Friday, October 18, at 8:00 p.m. at the Weis Center.

"The Acting Company's design is inspired by Hieronymus Bosch, the Northern Renaissance Flemish painter of nightmares and fantastic creatures," according to William Boswell, director of cultural events at Bucknell. "This is the second time the Acting Company has performed Shakespeare at Bucknell. It is wonderful to see Shakespeare plays so well and professionally performed. This one will be a real treat; a magical play done clearly and with a fun, surreal approach."

Directed by Joe Dowling, A Midsummer Night's Dream brings together three enchanting worlds of the court, the fairy kingdom, and the woods in a delightful blend of misdirected love potions, quarrelling royalty and charming rustics, ending at last in a triumphant wedding ceremony.

Over the years, the Company has received numerous awards including the Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Award and several Obies. "The company has a history of first rate performances and has spawned such famous talents as Patti LuPone and Kevin Kline, among others," said Boswell. It has traveled more than 425,000 miles in 47 states as well as internationally in Australia, England, the Soviet Union, and Eastern Europe.

Department of Theatre and Dance

The Bucknell Department of Theatre and Dance is dipping into William Shakespeare's collection this semester. The comedy A Midsummer Night's Dream will be presented October 27, and November 1 through 3. All performances will be held in the University Theatre in Coleman Hall.

Inspired by the illustrations of Arthur Rackham, an art nouveau British illustrator of the turn of the century, the production "creates a magical, dark and mysterious forest world," according to director Kate Pogue.

"Into this world come Shakespeare's quarreling lovers and rustic journeymen," said Pogue. "In the mystical dream of this midsummer night, the lovers are reunited, the fairies reconciled and the rustics triumphant in a play-within-a-play that has delighted theatergoers for nearly four hundred years."

Because of the universal appeal of this classic comedy," said Pogue, "it is a good way to introduce students of high school and even middle school age to Shakespeare."

Artistic director for the Shakespeare by the Book Festival in Richmond, Texas, Pogue has directed productions for the Houston Shakespeare Festival and the Houston Community College. She is a guest professor in the department of theatre and dance.

Set design and lighting for the production are by Elaine Williams, director of theatre, and Steven Draheim. Elizabeth Kalbach-Phelps, guest artist and 1983 graduate of Bucknell, designed the costumes for the production.

A night with Maynard Ferguson

BY KENT LINDEMAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Maynard Ferguson brought his famous high-register trumpet playing along with his Big Band to Susquehanna University two weekends ago for a lively and well-received performance at the Weber Chapel Auditorium.

The 63-year old Canadian band leader, whose musical career began as a trumpeter with big bands led by Charlie Barnet and Stan Kenton in the early 1950's, showed off both his own talents as well as showcased the youthful talent that was backing him. Ferguson's incredible high-register playing, which often hit A and B above double-high C, was breathtaking, but not the most notable aspect of the concert.

The key to the performance was the energy of his eight-piece Big Band. Instead of carting a number of vastly experienced and road-hardened players across the country, Ferguson has tapped the resources of university musicians from places such as Miami, Tennessee, Los Angeles, and Paris. While something may have been lost in technical precision due to lack of performance experience, the band's enthusiasm for the pieces they were playing and their interaction with Ferguson (which included a rhythmic rendition of the Atlanta Braves' tomahawk chop) strengthened the overall performance.

Ferguson's program reflected the spectrum of musical genres through which he has passed during his career—from jazz to fusion to pop. The band opened with "In a Mellow Tone," a colorful tribute to Duke Ellington. Ferguson was content to sit back for a great portion of this song and let the band establish themselves as a cohesive unit for the audience. As it would happen all night, he blared high-register, and alternated arranged and improvised passages and solos to accentuate the selection.

Next was the ballad "But Beautiful" from Ferguson's latest album, entitled Big Bop Nouveau. It featured Frenchman Christian Jacob in a somber but moving piano solo. The band then moved into a cover version of "Birdland" by the popular 1970's jazz-rock-fusion group Weather Report. This piece was particularly noteworthy due to the use of an "ewi," or electronic wind instrument by tenor saxophonist Matt Wallace. The ewi was also used in the band's tribute to Dizzy Gillespie, "A Night in Tunisia."

Ferguson and his Big Band ended with a lively and extensive medley of his most noted covers and compositions, including "McArthur Park," "Chamelon," "Maria" from West Side Story, and a subdued version of the Beatles' classic "Hey Jude." Brought back on stage for an encore after a three-minute ovation, Ferguson told the audience that the band would play one more selection. "The title, you ask?" he joked. "You'll know what it is, trust me," Ferguson said before launching into his Grammy-nominated "Gonna Fly Now" theme from Rocky.

The concert was only a little over 90 minutes long, which disappointed quite a number of people in the audience once Ferguson squealed the final note of the evening. However, this is a relatively small complaint considering the high quality of this concert, given by one of music's finest performers.

Midnight Cowboy: not your standard great film

-VIDEO REVIEW-

Midnight Cowboy, Rated R.– Jon Voight stars as Joe Buck, a young Texan who moves to the big city, New York, to make it as a prostitute. He makes a friend in Ricco Rizzo (Dustin Hoffman) streetwise, homophobe. The combination is strangely interesting and so is the movie

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

This is undoubtedly one of those rare films that has the power to evoke any number of reactions from its viewers. Released in 1969, this classic is the story of Joe Buck (Jon Voight), a full-blooded Texan with a boylike simplicity.

The movie begins with Joe quitting his dishwashing job and taking a bus to New York City where he aspires to prostitute himself to glamorous women. His ambitions are quickly hustled away. His innocent smiles vanish into the harsh reality of destruction as even a desperate attempt at homosexual prostitution leaves him embarrassed and empty-handed.

He is taken in by a homophobic cripple named Ricco Rizzo (Dustin Hoffman) who has nothing to show for himself, but at least knows the way of the streets. As their fight to survive reaches critical stages, Ricco fights an ever-worsening cough and Joe is plagued by sexually violent flashbacks that the viewer never truly comes to understand.

The film gets stranger with each new scene and depending on your interest in cultural clashes, sexual confusion, and the most unlikely of friendships, you may either be confused, intrigued, or asleep, to name a few possibilities. You will never feel right at home with this picture, unless you have been starving on the streets, but you cannot help but be amazed at the transformation that occurs in Joe Buck. By the movie's end, he will have killed and robbed a gay, Catholic businessman who has solicited him, fulfilled Ricco's dying wish to go to Florida, and shed his cowboy persona, boots, hat, and suede jacket, once and for all.

This is only a surface look at a film that arouses more than its share of disturbing images. If you are looking for something heavy, it might by the appropriate call. Just don't get it to liven up the party; it will soak up your thoughts and energy like a sponge.

Four new alternative albums

BY CRAIG BITTER

Album Review

The first album of enough musical importance to write about this week is Die Wartzau's latest release Big Electric Metal Bass Face released by Atlantic progressive. Die Wartzau presents a fantastic progressive—with Rap/Industrial roots—type album. A quick glance at the back cover will reveal that the songs are rated in BPM or beats per minute. Obviously this album is somewhat dance-oriented. A quick glance at the front cover will reveal the "explicit lyrics" sticker: moralists please take note.

Significant tracks, (aka: my favorites) are "Burning," "All Cut Up," and "Suck It Up." Each song contains fast electronically-driven rhythms surrounded by an entourage of cut-up samples, short, pulsing keyboard blasts, and horrific, screaming lyrics just slightly beyond comprehension. Die Wartzau shys away from placing any vocal over a music track without running through a series of fuzz/distortion boxes. Their sound is strong, original, and excellently offensive. If you want to annoy your roommate, and can stomach music like this, I highly recommend it.

My second review is an extremely similar album. MC 900 ft Jesus' Latest Nettwerk/I.R.S. album Welcome to my Dream, (it really ought to be renamed Welcome to my Nightmare) MC 900's previous release received enormous notoriety with tracks such as "UFO's Are Real" and "Truth is Out of Style." Their new album blends MC 900's strong anti-political messages with a much mellower sound. Songs such as "Falling Elevators" and "Killer Inside Me" are surrounded by a rhythmic and often seventies-retro sound, while the postic lyrics suggest the secret thoughts of a disorganized madman. The next two tracks, "Adventures in Failure" and "The City Sleeps" are rap—sound deranged mad-man. Both songs attempt to point a criticizing finger at the "rat-race" and middle America. The music is strong and melodic, and the words are poetically lyrical. I highly recommend this album.

Some of you may be familiar with the "Acid Jazz" compilation released by Scotti-Bros. last year. Well, afficiandos of that album will be excited to know that "Acid Jazz—Collection Two" is now available. A careful blend of rhythm and blues sound with dance beats creates the new genre of Acid Jazz. The new collection is just as fantastic as the first. Yet, the novelty appeal has vanished. Scotti-Bros. has focused primarily on the sound and surprisingly less on the digital remixing. "Collection Two" is much more jazzy and much less "acidic" than collection one.

The final album reviewed this week is Overlord's release Organic? on Caroline Recordings. Both strong and dark, the Overlords comment on the failures of society in a black comic style. Songs like "Hell's Kitchen" and "Holiday in Cambodia" are both humorous and critical. A definitive interpretation of the sound of Organic? is relative to the listeners interpretation of the lyrical content. The sound is definitely heavy, leaning toward industrial, invigorating and darkly rich.

Old faces form new band

BY PAT MCCORMICK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

You may not be familiar with this newly formed six-man ensemble that came together last spring, although you will recognize some of their faces from bands which have played on campus in the past. Having finally found each other, the members of Chequered Past performed for the first time last semester during house party weekend. The group consists of all juniors; members have experienced backgrounds on their instruments—backgrounds well-established before coming to Bucknell.

"We aim to please ourselves," says Carl Walker, bass and vocalist for the band, noting that although they do try to play a wide variety of songs, their primary purpose is to do songs which the members agree they will have a good time playing. Some of their favorites include a "funked up" version of "Day Tripper" and "Been Caught Stealing" by Jane's Addiction. Everyone seems to have his favorite, and as names like Hendrix, Clapton, Aerosmith, and The Smithereens were being suggested as favorites, the feeling was that they would try to play just about everything out there.

It is clear that Chequered Past tries to differentiate itself from the bands that many students are used to seeing on campus. The band has so many different characteristics that to put their music into one category is impossible. Although they play songs that are probably considered "classics," they wouldn't be considered a hard-rock or a classic-rock band. They like to play their music with "heavy energy which comes through the volume," says Walker. Not to be mistaken for a metal band, they are careful to add that, although they are not playing dance music, their high energy produces a good beat which makes the music a great sound for dancing, In summary, the band combines adjectives to classify their style as "hard, classic rock with a dash of heavy metal and funk."

Rather than making any more efforts to describe their sound, I submit the best way to get a feel for Chequered Past is to get out and see them. Band members include along with Walker; Dave Stuntz, guitarist; Kevin Shinal, drummer; Russ Parker, keyboardist; Kevin McElvene, rhythm guitarist; and Jeff Pennington, lead vocalist. They will be performing next during Greekfest at Swartz Field on October 19, where they will be splitting time with "The Lopes." They can also be found around town, and at many fraternity and campus functions.

Kopp shines, but football falls, 20–16

Freshman QB named League Rookie of Week as Bison (1–5) lose to Lafayette Saturday

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

As most Bucknell students left campus for Fall Break, the football team left for Easton, PA and a Saturday encounter with Patriot League rival Lafayette. In previous years, Bucknell has relied on the pass to gain a large portion of their yardage. That was no surprise with names like Auchenbach '91, Hatajik '91, Erb '91, and Scocca '91 leading the Bison.

On Saturday, the Bison added a couple more names to the list of its offensive aerial arsenal. New quarterback Travis Kopp '95 threw for a freshman record 304 yards, completing 17 of 34 passes. Wideout David Berardinelli '93, continuing his impressive season, had his best game with eight catches for 170 yards. Unfortunately, this outstanding tandem was unable to overcome five Bison turnovers as Bucknell fell 20–16 to the Leopards.

Early on, it looked as though Lafayette would be the team that would be hurt by fumbling the pigskin. Bucknell defensive back Ian DiBernardo '92 intercepted a pass from Lafayette quarterback Tom Kirchhoff to stop the game's opening drive. Two minutes later, after the Bison had been stopped on three plays, DiBernardo scooped a punt that had been inadvertently touched by Lafayette. Runs of nine and 14 yards by tailback Brian Henesey '92 moved the Bison into striking distance at the Lafayette 13-yard line, but on third down from the eight, Kopp overthrew tightend Jeff Pape '92 in the endzone. Coach Maranzana opted for a field goal attempt. Normally reliable Justin Frick '94 missed the 25-yard effort wide to the right.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Quarterback Travis Kopp '95 had one of the finest games ever for a Bucknell passer in terms of yardage. The freshman earned Patriot League rookie of the week honors as he completed 17 of 34 passes for 304 yards and two touchdowns.

Lafayette took advantage of the miss and moved the ball to midfield where it appeared their drive failed, but Lafayette had apparently been stealing pages from Bobby Bowden's playbook. The Leopards lined up in punt formation on fourth and two, but they snapped the punt to shortman Ron Kulbacki who threw to Al Rainey on the right hash. Rainey cut back to the middle of the field and outran the Bucknell defenders to the endzone for the game's first score. The successful punt-rusky netted 45 yards capping an unusual 80-yard drive.

After three plays and a punt from Bucknell, Lafayette began to drive the ball again. The Bison defense again produced the big play as John Lusk '93 got to quarterback Kirchhoff forcing a fumble that was recovered by Cecil Boone '94.

The turnover halted a good drive at Bucknell's 22-yard line. Bucknell's offense then took to the air on second down as Kopp hit Berardinelli for 29 yards. However, in a trend that would repeat itself, the drive was stopped on the Lafayette 36 when Joe Vargo '93 fumbled.

The Bucknell defense, however, kept things moving in the right direction. Lafayette began a drive at their 30 -yard line, and punted from their own 11. Bucknell took over at midfield and marched toward the endzone on the strength of two key, third-down completions by Kopp and strong running by Henesey. The drive stalled six feet from the Lafayette goal line as Henesey was stacked up for no gain on third and goal. Coach Maranzana again opted for the field goal try, and again Frick missed, this one bouncing off the upright.

That disappointment would soon be erased. On their second play after the missed field goal, Lafayette committed their fourth turnover, a fumble recovered by Hew Woodward '93. This time, Bucknell wasted no time. Kopp dropped straight back and lofted a 31-yard touchdown pass to Tom Martin '92, who made a tough over-the-shoulder catch. Frick converted the extra point to tie the score at seven apiece.

Lafayette countered with a 46-yard kickoff return which seemed to take the momentum away from the Bison. The Leopards marched 34 yards on ten unspectacular plays to regain the lead 14–7. John Kahn scored the go-ahead touchdown as he broke three tackles on an eight-yard run. The first half ended with no further scoring. Despite having out-gained Lafayette by ten yards, recovering three fumbles, and intercepting a pass, the Bison went to the locker room down seven.

The Bison's situation did not improve in the third quarter. Lafayette controlled the football for more than ten minutes of that quarter because Bucknell was unable to hold onto the ball. Two fumbles and an interception stopped all the Bucknell drives before they could gain any momentum. An amazing defensive effort kept the game reasonably close. The overworked unit only allowed a 12-play, 58-yard field goal drive midway through the quarter, and Bucknell then began the most exciting 15 minutes of football of the season, down by just ten points.

Lafayette drew first blood in the period on an eight-play, 48-yard drive for a field goal. Bucknell began the ensuing drive from its own 34. After a twenty-yard holding penalty, a 17-yard completion to Barardinelli, and an 11-yard run by Kopp, Bucknell was forced to punt on fourth and two. The Bison, however, had seen the Florida State highlights as well. Punter John Toman '92 completed a pass to Don Klingensmith '93 for a gain of three and a first down. Kopp didn't waste the unexpected opportunity. He immediately completed a 35-yard pass to Berardinelli to get to Lafayette's 20, but just when it appeared the Bison would not be denied, their season-long nemesis struck again. Henesey fumbled after a run that would have given Bucknell a first down on the Lafayette ten.

Bucknell got the ball back with seven and a half minutes left. Down by fourteen, they could ill afford to waste time, and they didn't. Their second play from the scrimmage was quite strange, but very effective. After fumbling the snap, Kopp picked up the ball and threw to Matt Walsh '93 in the right flat. Walsh beat a defender and ran in for a 16-yard touchdown to get Bucknell back in the game at 20–14 with 7:16 still to play.

The Bison's defense performed well under pressure, as it has at many crucial points over the season. They forced Lafayette to punt the ball to the Bison's offense with 3:19 left. Bucknell began the drive they hoped would produce the winning touchdown on their own 22. Henesey ran for eleven on second and two and Kopp completed a pass

Men's soccer defeats Shippensburg, 3–0

BY ANDY LABOVITZ

The Bison soccer team began its most recent two-week span of games with a well-played 3-2 loss to the nationally ranked Army Cadets, and ended it with a convincing 3–0 victory over Shippensburg. In between, however, the team suffered two tough losses, one of which all but eliminated the team from the possibility of post-season play. A 6–0 defeat at the hands of Towson State and a 3–1 loss to Patriot League rival Lafayette were the least encouraging results for Coach Craig Reynolds' 4–7 squad.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Foward Leon Hayduchok '94 evades a Bloomsburg defender in action earlier this season. The Bison are struggling with a 4–7 record.

The Saturday before Fall Break weekend, the Bucknell soccer team travelled to West Point to face the Cadets, ranked 23rd in the country. Playing such a powerhouse on the road did not have expectations running high on the Bison sideline, but the men exceeded those expectations and dropped a tough 3–2 decision. The first goal of the game was scored by Bucknell's Jon MacKenzie '93 nearing the end of the first half. MacKenzie's tally proved to be the only score of the half as the Bison went into halftime with a slim 1–0 lead. The action intensified in the second half, when a three goal flurry within four minutes left the game tied at two. Army tied the game at one 21 minutes into the second half. Bucknell regained the lead on a goal by Ed Siddons '93 four minutes later, but just 21 seconds after that, Army tied the game again. The score remained knotted at two until, with less than five minutes remaining in the game, a handball in the goal box by a Bucknell defender awarded the Cadets a penalty kick, which Army converted into a 3–2 victory. The game was surprisingly close, considering the discrepancy in shots. Army had 13, while Bucknell had only five. In fact, the Army goalie did not save a ball all night, as the only two shots that were actually on goal by Bucknell went in.

The Bison may have been demoralized by this tough loss, as they travelled to Towson State to take on the Tigers. The team never got off track, and were outplayed in all facets of the game by the Tigers, who scored six goals on 18 shots against

Gibbons carries women's soccer to undefeated week

BY SCOTT BROWN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Fall Break is a time for Bucknellians to relax and get their minds off any type of work. But the exact opposite proved to be the case as the women's soccer team won both its games over break raising their win streak to three games and their overall record back to .500 at 6–6.

The Bison's difficult four-game, seven-day schedule began ominously as Bucknell fell to Patriot League foe Army 4–0. The Bison had a difficult time penetrating a staunch Cadet defense that has only allowed six goals in their first 12 games. Army outshot Bucknell 26–8 while raising their League record to 2–0.

The Bison though responded well to halting their three-game losing streak with a win against Gettysburg. The 3–1 victory was the Bison's first road win in their fourth attempt this season. The Bison took control of the game early as Sara Patiro '95 scored unassisted just thirty seconds into the contest. Bucknell extended their lead to 2–0 by halftime as Janine Hudson '93 took a pass from Jen Giordano '95 and scored her first goal of the season.

In the second half Gettysburg drew closer scoring first, narrowing Bucknell's margin to just one with over twenty-five minutes left in the game. But Lisa Gibbons '95 put the game away with a goal on assists from Joanne Crane '95 and Megan Coyne '95. The win was the Bison's fourth straight over Gettysburg.

On just two days rest the women took on Bloomsburg University. Bucknell battled back to gain an impressive 5-3 come from behind victory. The win was sparked by the Bison's leading scorer Gibbons who tallied four goals and assisted on the fifth. The Bison offense was able to outshoot their opponent for only the fourth time this season. The momentum kept rolling for the Bison as they traveled to Lafayette. The Bison disposed of the Leopards 5–3. The win gave them their third win in a row, the longest string in the short history of Bucknell women's soccer. Again Gibbons led the way as she scored a hat trick while adding an assist. The win raised the Bison's Patriot League record to 2-3 as Lafayette dropped to 0-2. For the week Gibbons scored a total of eight goals and added two assists for a total of 18 points. She was a part of 10 of the 13 goals the Bison scored in their three-game win streak. She was named the Patriot League Player of the Week for her efforts. For the season she has tallied half of the Lady Bison's total goals scored.

The Bison continue their grueling schedule this week as they play three games in five days. The start the week with a two-game homestand playing Fordham and Penn St., tomorrow and Tuesday, respectively. They finish off the week traveling to Scranton on Thursday.

to Walsh on third and ten for a gain of 33 yards and first down on Lafayette's 26. The Leopard's defense stiffened, and after two incompletions and a two-yard scramble by Kopp, Bucknell called a time-out for the fourth and eight play. Unfortunately, Lafayette was ready, and Kopp overthrew a well-covered Matt Walsh. The ball went back to Lafayette on downs. The Leopards wisely took a safety on the game's very last play to finish the scoring at 20–16.

The game was the most exciting of the season, and one the Bison probably would have won with the wider goal posts of a year ago. The Bison, however, cannot hold the NCAA rules committee responsible for their six turnovers. Regardless of the outcome, Bucknell should take some momentum into this week's match-up with Princeton from the 433 yards of total offense they accumulated.

Making his first collegiate start, Kopp's total yardage was the sixth-highest total in school history, the highest since Auchenbach threw for a Bucknell record 358 yards against Towson State in 1989. Kopp, who discovered that he was starting on Saturday morning, passed for two touchdowns, the most for a Bison quarterback this year.

The scouting report on Princeton is dominated by one name: Michael Lerch, a wide-receiver who caught nine passes for 370 yards and four touchdowns last week against Brown. To put that in perspective, Lafayette gained 320 yards against the Bison.

Bucknell, however, by virtue of a 14–9 win in Lewisburg last season has a one-game winning streak against the Tigers. If the Bison can continue to move the ball the way they did against Lafayette, and eliminate the mistakes, there is no reason why they can't extend that winning streak against the Ivy League's leading team.

goalkeeper Mark Wrigley '94. Towson scored less than two minutes into the game, and it was all downhill from there, as Joe Layfield '92 reeled off three tallies. The Bison, who were never in the game, managed only five shots.

Last Friday night, as most Bucknellians were heading home for a weekend of fun, the Bison soccer team was hosting rival Lafayette in a game that was crucial for Bucknell's chances to qualify for the Patriot League tournament. A loss would drop the Bison to 1–4 in the league and, for all intent and purposes, eliminate them from the tournament contention. Lafayette struck first blood 25 minutes into the game, and extended their lead just two minutes later, as Wrigley, who played a stellar game, saving 8 shots, was fooled. The 2–0 score stood at halftime. The Bison came out for the second half fired up, and pulled within one goal on a penalty shot by Alex Kogan '94. The game went back and forth for the remainder, with both teams having scoring opportunities but not converting. Bucknell ended up with 16 shots in the game, and Lafayette finished with 17. The final 3–1 score came about on a controversial goal by Lafayette with just one second remaining on the clock. After deliberation among the officials, it was decided that the ball went in before the gun and the 3–1 score stood.

Bucknell finally got an easy victory on Tuesday, soundly defeating visiting Shippensburg 3–0. Dan D'Angelo '92 led off the Bison scoring with his second goal of the season 21 minutes into the game. Ryan Bucceri '94 put the Bison up 2–0 with four minutes remaining in the first half, and Siddons rounded out the scoring with 13 minutes remaining in the game. Wrigley played another excellent game in goal, recording seven saves in his second shutout of the season. His play this season has been phenomenal thus far, a fact not evidenced by his statistics this season.

This Saturday, the Bison travel to Fordham in a battle of 1–4 league teams trying to stay out of the Patriot League cellar. Bucknell then hosts Delaware on Wednesday. MacKenzie, with his two assists against Shippensburg, took over the team lead in points from Greg Beaty '95. MacKenzie has 11 points this season on three goals and five assists, and Beatty leads the team with five goals, but has no assists for a total of ten points.

Women's tennis finishes 2nd in Patriot League tourney

BY MIKE MARKOVICH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's tennis squad finished its last week of the season by setting two school records during its match against Millersville Tuesday.

The highlight of the week, and the season came over the weekend at Lehigh, where the women took second place to Lafayette in this year's Patriot League Championship tournament.

Individual titles were captured by Stacey Duffy '95, at number six singles, and Julia Diaz '95 and partner Kymm Carlson '94 at the number one flight. Other Bucknell finalists were Diaz at number one singles, who lost 6–3, 6–2 to Lafayette's Monica Yurconic, and Kristina Lutter '95, who lost 6–2, 6–4 at number five singles to another Lafayette player, Lori Reynolds.

The final tournament point standings saw Lafayette's 42 points far outdistancing the second-place Bucknell total of 26, with Army's 21.5 points good enough for third. Colgate took fourth with 19.5, hosts Lehigh took fifth with 12, Holy Cross was sixth with 4.5, and Fordham took the bottom spot, amassing 3.5 points.

In the week before the tournament, the lady Bison continued their domination of regular season opponents in matches versus Lafayette on the 8th and Shippensburg on the 9th. Bucknell stuck with their proven lineup in this, the warm-up week before the tournament. Running down the six singles flights in order were Diaz, Carlson, Mary Ann Benack '92, Karen Stagliano '92, Lutter, and Duffy. The three doubles teams in the Lafayette match were Diaz and Carlson, Benack and Stagliano, and Lutter and Duffy.

No doubles matches were played against Shippensburg, as the match had already been decided by the singles outcome, which was 5–1 in Bucknell's favor. The final score of the Lafayette contest was 7–2, with Bucknell's only losses coming from Lutter and the Lutter/Duffy combination.

The climax of the tournament weekend was followed by more excitement for the women, in the form of two more of their usual lopsided wins which set school records for the season.

The first match was at the University of Maryland at Baltimore County on the 14th, and it ended in an 8–1 victory for the lady Bison. The singles lineup was the usual, except the substitution of Ashley Crary '95 for Duffy at number six, where she provided Bucknell with its only loss of the day. The doubles lineup was somewhat altered from the norm, with Lutter teaming with Christine McMillan '95 at number two, and Crary and Jennifer Markewich '95 playing together at number three.

It was more of the same the next day, and it was this victory over host Millersville that provided the women's tennis squad with their thirteenth straight win and their fourteenth on the year, both school records.

The singles flights were filled as the previous day, and the doubles action saw Benack and Stagliano give Diaz and Carlson a rest at number one, Lutter and McMillan together again at number two, and Crary playing with Markewich at number three. They dropped that match, Bucknell's only loss on the day, as the Bison once again triumphed 8–1.

The women will look to extend one or both of these records this weekend with their only action of next week, a match at home versus LaSalle on Saturday. The season will end next weekend after that with three consecutive matches on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday.

Athlete of the Week

Lisa Gibbons '95

Women's soccer's Lisa Gibbons has been named The Bucknellians' Athlete of the Week for her outstanding play in the squad's three consecutive victories last week.

Gibbons' unbelieveable week began with the Lady Bison's 5–3 comeback victory over Bloomsburg. She had a hand in all five goals, netting four of her own and assisting another. She continued by scoring three more with another assist in Bucknell's Patriot League victory over Lafayette. She added her final goal of the week in a 3–1 win over Gettysburg.

The freshman's total of 18 points on the week raised her season total to 30 for an average of 2.50 per game, which ranks her as the League's most prolific scorer.

Gibbons will lead Bucknell's women's soccer team in matches against Fordham and Penn State this week.

Equestrian team gallops to third place finish

BY JENNIFER WALSH

The Bucknell Equestrian Team is again in the saddle and off to a good start after finishing their first of three fall season competitions this semester. The Bucknell riders placed third out of nine teams at the Scranton University horse show, and were just three points behind their perennial rivals, a huge team of forty or more riders from Penn State University. Wilson University, an all-girls school which offers a major in horseback riding, took top honors at Scranton, coming in first overall.

Despite slight disappointment over falling short of Penn Sate, the Bucknell team remains optimistic for the shows to come, and with good reason.

"Our team has increased at least two-fold over the past year, to the point where we now have riders in every class," commented team co-captain Cathy Retallack '93.

To be exact, the Equestrian Team now sports 21 members ranging all levels of IHSA competition, from class one walk-trot up to class nine open over fences. The team's increase in numbers should prove to be a great advantage in a sport such as horse showing, whereby the scores of the highest-placing riders of each team are added together to determine the final outcome of the show.

While awaiting their next competition at Seton Hall, the Bucknell riders are busy training under Jan Phillips, owner of Summer Breeze Stables in Milton. Though their next show is not until November 10th, team members are practicing on a daily to weekly basis at Summer Breeze, fine-tuning their riding skills with high anticipation of an even better finish at Seton Hill. Led by riders such as Cathy Retallack, Kelly Kordish '92, Jo Meszoly '94, defeating Penn State does not appear out of reach, nor even finishing first overall. With the pressure of the first show over, it will now be up to the Bucknell Equestrian Team to remain in the high standing they have begun to receive as competitors on the intercollegiate level by continuing their success in the upcoming shows.

Bison Afield

BY MIKE CORRELLI

I have noticed that many of the single-minded students that attend Bucknell have not taken the time or the energy to noticing since the very first day of classes, freshman year. Lewisburg is surrounded by a wealth of outdoor sports and recreation opportunities that range well above and beyond the varsity and club sports that the campus offers.

The range of these activities is emormous, spanning from the relatively simple activities of jogging and roller blading to the game sports, including bass fishing in the Susquehanna River, trout fishing in the local streams, deer, bear, bird, and even moose hunting on Pennsylvania state gamelands, hardly a rifle shot from our campus. For the even more daring and diverse of the Bison outdoorsmen, one can partake in bungie jumping, skydiving, hang gliding, mountain climbing, extreme skiing, white water rafting, kayaking and wreck diving.

Beginning next week and hopefully running throughout the semester, I will attempt to relate both my knowledge and experiences in pursuit of these breathtaking outdoor adventures. In each week's column I will attempt to profile a different one of these activities available to the Bucknell student. Join me next week as we start our experiment with mountain climbing.

Water polo breaks into nation's top 20

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's water polo team has broken into the American Water Polo Coaches Association Collegiate "Top 20" Poll. As they secured a rank of 20th in the nation, they also became Bucknell's only athletic team to be ranked within the top 20 in their sport thus far this season. The Bison moved into the position two weeks ago after posting a victory over Iona College, a team ahead of them in national ranking. The Bucknell men then went on to beat Harvard last weekend, keeping them at 20th while knocking Harvard off the top 20 list.

Two weeks ago, the Bucknell team hosted their Homecoming Tournament at Freas-Rooke Pool, where they played to a 3–2 weekend record. On Friday night, the Bison began the tournament by losing a 9–10 heartbreaker to number one Eastern power Slippery Rock. Bucknell came out strong early in the game to go ahead 3–0 by 6:24 of the second quarter, with goals from Dan Brown '92 and co-captains Walter Kelly '92 and Kevin Schroth '92. Slippery Rock's offensive strength then took over when they scored five unanswered points prior to the last minute of the quarter. The final 30 seconds saw three changes in score, due to Schroth's second goal at :31, a Slippery Rock goal at :13, and Brown's second goal with two seconds remaining. The period finally ended at 5–6.

The third quarter virtually belonged to Slippery Rock, who scored three more unanswered goals before Brown scored his third and Bucknell's only goal of the quarter at 1:37. Kelly opened the fourth period with his second successful attempt before Slippery Rock answered with their 10th goal at 3:10. The Bucknell men then enjoyed a late surge behind the strong support of their large, homecoming crowd. At 2:43, Chris Retzler '93 netted a goal, followed by a successful shot by Sean Tierney '95. Bucknell then quickly called their final time-out for some last-minute strategy and regrouping. Unfortunately, excellent defensive play by Slippery Rock stopped Bucknell's attempts to tie in the final 1:16, and the game ended in a 9–10 Bucknell loss. Against Slippery Rock, goalie John Bradbury '92 recorded an impressive 14 saves to keep Bucknell in much of the game.

Bucknell opened Saturday's events with a 4–11 slaughter at the hands of Navy, the number two team in the East. Two of the four Bison tallies were credited to Kelly, while Brown and Schroth split the other two. Bucknell's second game of the day ended on a more positive note, as they beat Iona, who is ranked 16th in the nation. The Bucknell men scored the first goal of the game at 5:27 in the first quarter.

The lead then exchanged hands four times during the first half before Bucknell took a 5–4 lead which it never relinquished at 1:57 in the second quarter. The Bucknell team played smart and tough throughout the entire game and went on to win by a score of 12–9. Bucknell's Retzler played easily the best game of his collegiate career against Iona, in an effort which included two steals, two assists, and an incredible, personal high seven goals. Other scorers included A.J. Zottola '92 with two, and Brown, Tierney, and Schroth, each with one. Bradbury also collected 12 saves in the game.

The final two games of the weekend proved to be easy outings for the Bison. Later Saturday night, the Bucknell men defeated Queens 11–8, and they trounced Fordham 15–7 on Sunday morning. Against Queens, Bucknell looked to Schroth, who led the offensive attack with five goals. Brown and Kelly also each added two, while Retzler and Zottola netted one apiece.

The Fordham game allowed the Bison starters some much deserved rest as their bench took over during the second half. This time, Brown led the team in scoring with five tallies; Schroth followed with four of his own, and Tierney netted two. The remaining four points were distributed between Kelly, Retzler, Brad Benningson '95, and Nick Bijur '95, with both freshmen scoring the first varsity goals of their college careers.

This past weekend, the polo team participated in a varsity league tournament at Brown, where it added two more to both its win and its loss columns. Bucknell's best effort of the weekend came against Harvard, a team previously ranked ahead of the Bison in the top 20. The Bucknell men fought their way from a 4–4 tie at the half to a three goal lead, which they kept to win the contest 10–7.

"Beating Harvard was the pivotal point in safeguarding our newly earned top 20 position," according to Head Coach Jim Harvey. The Bucknell men also beat Army 7–6, but dropped another game to Navy by a score of 7–11; they suffered a tough 7–9 loss to Princeton as well. Schroth led the team with 11 goals on the weekend, while Kelly followed with six, Retzler with five, Brown with four, Steve Benson '92 with two, and Dan Killinger '92, Tierney, and Zottola with one apiece. Bradbury came up with 42 important saves at Brown, averaging 10.5 per game.

The water polo team now holds a deceiving 9–9 record, with all nine losses coming against teams ranked ahead of the Bison in the top 20. Six of those nine losses were to the top two teams in the East. This weekend, they are scheduled to play Army, Princeton, and Villanova.

"This weekend is important since it will seed us for the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships. If we win all of our games at Army, we will go into MAC's seeded third," says Harvey. Overall, he feels that: "We've seen steady improvement. As other teams in the East are dropping down or out of the top 20, we continue to move up, from 23rd originally to 20th." After the tournament at Army, the polo team will be preparing for a trip to California, where they will be playing in the "49er Tournament" at Long Beach.

X-Country finishes season undefeated

BY SCOTT ALBRIGHT

Just how good is the Bucknell men's cross country team this year? After witnessing the team emerge victorious from its own invitational two weekends ago, maintaining a perfect undefeated season record and moving up in the national rankings to twenty-second out of a field of about 300 Division I cross country teams, one would not exactly be going out on a limb to say that the team is pretty darn good.

But while the Bison are enjoying the successes and kudos that have almost become a tradition for Bucknell cross country teams over the years, the squad has a chance to go even a step further in achievement as it entered the Iowa St. Invitational this weekend.

In what could almost be termed a warm-up meet for the Blue and Orange, Bucknell annihilated its three guests on homecoming weekend in commanding fashion. The Bison defeated both Delaware and Drexel 50-15, and James Madison 42-17.

Three Bison runners, Matt Deardorff '92, Bob Kelly '92, and Tom Wuchenich '92, tied for first in the 8K race with identical times of 25:33, while Jeff Loomis '92 captured sole possession of fourth with a finish of 25.36. Head Coach Art Gulden noted afterwards, "It was a pretty easy meet for us."

But moving from their last meet to the invitational this weekend is similar to suddenly moving from little league baseball all the way up to the major leagues.

Among the 12 other teams competing along with Bucknell this weekend will be second ranked Iowa State, sixth ranked Wisconsin, fourteenth ranked Texas, eighteenth ranked Kansas and Kansas State, which is currently ranked just out of the top 25 men's cross country teams in the nation.

While Gulden admitted that knocking off powerhouse Iowa State, which has even drawn some number one votes this season, might not be a realistic goal for his squad, he hopes to at least upset Kansas, which is seated only four spots above Bucknell.

To achieve an upset or two, Gulden does not believe the team will need any miracles. He only asks that each member gives his best possible effort. "They know how good they are," said Gulden. "We've got six seniors on the team. They've been doing the work for four years, so it's just a matter of them doing the best they can do on this given day and that sounds really pretty simple, but it's the same as any other team. They've got to perform on that day."

Gulden continued emphasizing the fact that the team doesn't necessarily have to overachieve to pull out the the 'W's' against the higher ranked teams but instead explained, "It's just a matter of showing up and holding our poise and doing the best that we can under that kind of pressure. . ."

When one thinks about it, it's amazing that, despite its relatively minute size, Bucknell is ranked among the top 100, not to mention top 25, of Division I men's cross country teams. It's only logical to assume that schools like Texas and Iowa State, with their comparatively enormous enrollments, would have a much greater edge in putting together winning teams. Yet there sits Bucknell, with a student population of only about 3,500, not only posing a challenge to the teams of these much larger schools, but also standing a serious chance of defeating them.

Volleyball rallies vs. Robert Morris

BY DON REINHART
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's volleyball team saw some tough Division I and II competition as it stayed home this week going 1–5, rounding out an overall record of 8–15. The Bison hosted their own Homecoming Tournament where they picked up a win against Robert Morris, but dropped two home matches to Duquesne University and the University of Delaware.

Homecoming action began Friday, October 4 in the fieldhouse. The Bison could not overcome a first game battle as Youngstown pulled out a 16–14 win and then bagged the remaining two games 15–6 and 15–5 for the defeat. The frustration continued as Bentley College took Bucknell in four games.

Bucknell's opponents split the first two, with the Bison winning the second game 15–10 and dropping the first 11–15, but the final two games went down to the wire as Bucknell could not hold on, losing both 14–16.

Coach Cindy Opalski saw her team play well and was not disappointed in its performance but was concerned about its mental adjustments. She pointed out, "We were playing well against good teams as was evident in the Youngstown and Bentley matches. We must eliminate a few mental errors."

The tournament action drew to a close Saturday afternoon when the Bison fell in three straight games, 15–4, 15–5, 15–3, to the hands of undefeated tournament champions Ashland University. However, Bucknell rallied in their final match of the tournament against Robert Morris, coming back from a two game deficit and then going extra points in the final game to win the match 10–15, 13–15, 15–8, 15–8, 17–15.

Bucknell finished fourth in the tournament ahead of last place, winless Robert Morris. A key player in the Bucknell win and a standout during the weekend, rookie Laura Spinney '95, earned a spot as one of six players on the All-Tournament Team, a superior accomplishment for a first year athlete.

On Tuesday, October 8, the Bison hosted Duquesne University and Division I powerhouse, the University of Delaware. Despite some excellent individual performances, Bucknell lost to Duquesne in four games, 15–13, 15–13, 2–15, 15–13.

Once again Spinney, the freshman, stood out as she proved to be threat at the net, pounding home 15 kills while second-year co-captain Kara Forosisky '92 contributed 13 more. Dee Scinta '92 hounded the floor, accumulating 13 digs, and other co-captain Kathleen Sullivan '92, tallied two blocks with four assists.

In perhaps their best match of the year, the Bison took the University of Delaware three hours and four games into the match but could not muster the strength to overtake the Blue Hens and lost 15-6, 11-15, 15-12, 15-14. Forosisky and Sullivan killed a combined total of 24 balls. Sullivan tallied 13 of the 24, committing only one error. In addition Forosisky scrapped for a tremendous 16 digs.

Opalski saw the Delaware match as a device by which to measure the growth of her program. She commented, "The significance of us almost beating Delaware can be better exemplified by realizing where we were last year against them. Last year when we went to Delaware, the match was over in 20 minutes."

Individually, the most distinguished achievement of the week belonged to Sullivan. Sullivan was ranked second in the Patriot League in blocks-per-game with 1.83. This gave her a national ranking of eight in Division I competition.

As an established team leader, Sullivan has provided outstanding leadership on the team. She is not only a top blocker but also a leading offensive player in kills and service aces.

Distinguished BU grad returns to campus

BY LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

One of Bucknell's most musically distinguished graduates, D'Anna Fortunato '67, mezzo-soprano, will return to campus tonight to perform with the New York String Soloists and the Rooke Chapel Choir.

Fortunato debuted in 1971 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has since gone on to become "one of America's finest singers," according to the New York Post.

Noted by the New York Times for her "warm, emotive mezzo-soprano," she has performed with the New York Philharmonic, as part of the New York City Opera, and with orchestras and opera companies throughout the United States and abroad.

Described by the Village Voice's Leighton Kerner as a "mezzo-soprano of profound musicality and technical aplomb," Fortunato will give an unusual performance aided by the string quartet and choir.

Featured in the American/Romantic program, along with Brahms, Copland, and Schubert, will be a performance of "A Sweet and Triune Harmony" by internationally esteemed Bucknell composer Jackson Hill, associate dean of arts and sciences and professor of music.

Though a classical artist, Fortunato is at home in music from the Renaissance to the present and exhibits her curiosity for the new and unusual as well in her work as a recitalist and chamber musician.

She has researched and performed extensively the little-known vocal works of Liszt and Loeffler, as well as music by women composers such as Clara Schumann, Fanny Mendelssohn, and Amy Beach. In fact, her album of songs by Amy Beach was voted "Best Record of the Year" by the New York Times, The Boston Globe, and New York Magazine.

Greater need for financial aid worries faculty, administration

BY TARA GILLIGAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

News Analysis

In a year which saw more freshmen entering Bucknell than almost any time in the past, the careful distribution of financial aid money has presented itself as a challenge to the University.

For the first time in several years, Bucknell University admitted students but could not meet their financial aid needs. Unexpected demand for financial aid money all but sent the University turning pockets inside out to come up with extra funds. The financial budget promises to continue growing, and administrators and faculty are beginning to look critically into what can be done to more wisely distribute money.

"The issue of financial aid has become a matter of very deep concern to trustees, to faculty, and to administrators," said John Miller, professor of management and chairman of the Planning and Budget Committee.

Barbara Shailor, vice president for student services, said, "We were very much over budget. That represents a real problem. That was because there were more students who required financial aid then we had anticipated."

According to Barry Maxwell, vice president for administration, the office of financial aid exceeded its nearly $6.5 million budget this year by approximately $537,000.

Because financial aid went so far over its projected budget, the University is left with only a $150,000 surplus to the overall budget which tallies up to $81 million dollars. While the University generally tries to maintain as a surplus one percent of its total budget, or nearly $800,000, this year that total surplus is less than one fifth of a percent.

The University did not have to disturb its reserve funds, some of which still contain millions of dollars, to cover the exorbitant cost of financial aid. "Revenues increased as a result of the larger than expected freshman class," said Maxwell.

Tuition money from additional students had to go toward covering the costs of financial aid, according to Miller. "About a quarter of the money went to financial aid. That's an awful lot," Miller said.

Although rising financial aid expenditures are not unique to this year, the University did, for the first time in several years, deny aid to the 33 students it admitted from the wait list. Only about eight of the 33 decided to attend Bucknell, according to Ron Laszewski, director of financial aid.

For two years, the University was able to avoid having admit-denies, the term given to students who are admitted to the University but Financial aid exceeded its projected budget by $537,000 according to Barry Maxwell, vice president for administration. Increased tuition revenue, due to a large freshman class, alleviated part of the financial burden.

Sexual assault policy tightens adjudication

BY JOHN GODBOUT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Committee on Complementary Activities and President Gary Sojka gave final approval to the Interim Sexual Assault Policy and Adjudication Procedures; students will be informed of the revisions through an appendix to the Student Handbook which will be mailed out shortly.

Significant changes to the previous system involve the arrangement and membership of the board that hears cases of sexual assault, a time limit for hearings, and rights of counsel.

Sojka appointed Sally Nyquist, chair and associate professor of biology, to the post of Judicial Administrator for Sexual Assault (JASA). The JASA is responsible for overseeing the investigation and adjudication procedures.

Under the JASA are four investigators, who are responsible for researching cases and reporting their findings to the Board, which is a specially trained standing subcommittee of the Committee on Student Conduct (CSC).

The four newly appointed investigators are: Gerard Turbide, area coordinator for Developmental Programs; Kristin Skarie, director of Student Activities; Nancy Caine, associate professor of psychology; William Hauck, professor of education.

The Hearing Board on Sexual Assault is composed of two faculty members, two students (one male and one female for each group), and one administrator from the CSC.

All board members will receive special training from Arlene Hoyt, director of Psychological Services, and Elias Abelson, general counsel to the University. "We hope that

Class of '92 gives generously

Despite the controversy which surrounded last year's Senior Gift Drive, the class of 1992 has proved generous. "Although there was some negativism surrounding last year's Senior Gift Drive, this year the response has been overwhelmingly positive," said Sarah Brown, assistant director of annual giving.

The Senior Gift Drive had raised a total of $78,000 as of last Thursday approaching the goal of $120,000 according to Brown. To date, 388 students out of 805 have been contacted and 290 of those have contributed.

"I'm optimistic about the final outcome; although it started slowly, people have had a while to warm up to the idea of donating to Bucknell," said Scott Searle '92, member of the Senior Gift Drive steering committee. "Considering all that the fraternities have endured from the University the past few years, the response has been better than I expected."

One of the three goals for the 1992 Senior Gift Drive is to improve upon last year's 54 percent pledge rate by getting 80 percent of this year's class to contribute.

In addition, the campaigners are trying to achieve a 100 percent contact rate, effectively reaching all seniors.

Seniors have a choice of four different funds to which they may donate their monies, and within those funds they may earmark their donation for a specific area, such as an academic department, an athletic team or an artistic program.

The Annual Fund is the main,

Nostradamus prediction gives campus goosebumps

BY TRAVIS ELLIOTT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Some students have speculated that this year's Halloween massacre rumor is actually a plot by security to get students off campus and prevent a recurrence of last year's near riot. Others think it is just plain ridiculous.

The rumor, for the most part, states that Nostradamus, a Sixteenth Century French astrologer, prophesied a mass murder which will occur on October 31. The location of the murders is supposed to be a college campus in between a grave yard and a river in a residence hall which is either T-shaped or U-shaped.

In addition, the rumor states that the prophecy was discussed on the Oprah Winfrey Show and Bucknell was mentioned as one of four colleges which could possibly fit the description.

According to an article which appeared in the Georgetown Hoya, the Nostradamus quote which has caused the panic reads: "Between two rivers shall he see himself enclosed, tuns and casks shall be joined together in order to pass across: after eight bridges have been broken up, the chief shall at that moment be run though, and perfect children shall have their throats cut with a knife."

Lisa Disarro '93, a Residential Assistant in Larison Hall, said: "Many freshmen have expressed concern over the rumor. Some are not sleeping in the building, and some of them were even planning on going home for Halloween."

While Disarro believes the prediction is ridiculous, she believes that the fear of some freshman is justified. She said, "People are afraid that some weirdo will hear about this and fulfill the prophecy."

The October 11 issue of the Holy Cross Crusader quoted a slightly different version of the rumor. According to the article, the murders will occur in a year with a reversible number on either October 31 or November 1, in a L, F, or T-shaped building which overlooks a cemetery. The Crusader also reported that the rumor had been discussed on the Oprah Winfrey show.

Two separate representatives of Harpo Productions in Chicago, the production company for the Oprah Winfrey Show, have emphatically denied that the topic was ever discussed on the show.

One spokeswoman in the research department said, "We have been receiving about a dozen calls per day asking for the transcript of the non-existent show."

The rumor of a Halloween massacre has spread to college campuses throughout the Northeast. Syracuse University, Mount Holyoke, Georgetown University, Boston College, and Holy Cross have all reported rumors of a similar strain being spread among its students.

Vince DeCerchio, director of public safety, said, "I think the prediction is silly; Nostradamus' epigram is too generic to have any specific relevance to North America, let alone Bucknell."

However, he did issue a memo alerting local law enforcement authorities of the rumor and he announced that extra patrols would be increased on Halloween as a precautionary measure.

According to a letter to all Bucknell Students for Barbara Shailor, vice president for student services, "...Rumors of a mass murder that will occur at a college residence hall on Halloween have appeared periodically over the years."

During a special broadcast by WVBU, the college radio station, President Gary Sojka said, "This is not the first time Nostradamus and Halloween have been brought together on college campuses."

Glenn VanAlstyne '90 said, "The same absurd rumor circulated around Bucknell before Halloween of my freshman year. The Oprah Winfrey Show claim, however, is a new twist."

Unfortunately, no Lewisburg area psychics could be reached for comment.

POLICY

through their training the students will see the seriousness of a sexual assault charge and punish guilty students. The previous Board was made up of twelve members, but there are now only five voting members. "Our concern was that a student who had been victimized did not want to tell her story to twelve people. It is also a matter of confidentiality; with less people, there is less chance that rumors will spread," said Butler.

Concern for the parties involved was a primary consideration, according to Chandra Guinn, chair of CCA. "There has been extensive time and energy put into the creation of this document," asserted Guinn, "in particular, to be sensitive to the people involved."

Another change was in the creation of a ten-day time limit. All hearings must conclude before the deadline, and all investigative files from the case will be compiled into one file which will remain with the general counsel of the University. There is no statute of limitations under the new guidelines.

The final major change is in the alleged victim's right to counsel. Previously only the accused was allowed an advisor, but the Committee felt that the victim should have the same rights as the accused.

"In the American court system, both parties have the right to counsel if they so desire, and we felt that the same rules apply at Bucknell. We made a point not to take rights away from the accused, but we expanded those of the victim so that they have the same rights," said Butler.

The victim now also has the right to decline a personal appearance at the hearings, a right the accused always had.

The creation of the position of JASA means that the system of using a Preliminary Investigation Committee is also outdated. While the JASA does not make a ruling, that person does decide if there is enough evidence to merit the Board hearing the case. This system is styled after the Magistrate system, commonly used in Pennsylvania.

The old system was written 23 years ago, but was not created to deal with sexual assaults. The Committee on Respect and Equality wanted to revise the entire disciplinary system two years ago, but decided to put off the changes.

"We felt that this problem warranted special attention. We saw that these were cases that involved special handling. People have gone to report incidents to security, but changed their minds at the last minute because of what they would have to go through in filing charges," said Butler.

"We're hoping that the changes will bring more women forward, so if there is a serial rapist on campus, we can rid our community of that person. We're trying to bring forward the people that know incidents are occurring, but are not reporting them," said Butler.

"I feel that this is a major step forward. We'll have to see how the new changes work before we discuss the possibility of further changes," commented Butler.

"I have reviewed the details of the policy," said Guinn. "This is the best possible document that could have been prepared."

Sojka pens letter citing apparent discrimination in Pell Grant law

BY MICKI HAMILTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

In a September 27 letter to the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, President Gary Sojka voiced the concern of selected faculty members and administrators that the mandatory signing of a pledge relating to drug use by Pell Grant recipients constitutes discrimination.

"The concern of our faculty," writes Sojka, "is that this creates a dual standard for Pell Grant recipients which sets them apart from other students on campus."

In a motion to the Bucknell faculty last fall, Dean Baker, assistant professor of economics, proposed altering the circumstances under which Pell Grants are accepted by students.

Pell Grants offer federal aid to low income students. In order to receive this money, recipients must sign a statement certifying they won't use, possess, or distribute drugs.

If students are later caught in one of those situations, then they lose the grant and have to repay all the money received until the time they were caught.

According to Baker, this clause does not appear in Federal loans given to upper and middle class students. He accuses the federal government of partiality since it does not apply the same standards to each class.

Baker believes this is not fair because it targets the lower-income students. Baker said, "You have this whole pattern of practices initiated by the federal government to declare war on drugs which is really a war on the poor."

As a result, Baker proposed a motion at a faculty meeting last fall to eliminate this bias in aid. He asked that the same drug standards applied to everyone on campus or no one at all. The motion was approved by a majority of the faculty at that time and passed on to President Gary Sojka and the University Council as a recommendation to take action.

In March or April of last year, Chuck Longley, a political science professor at Bucknell, proposed a motion to reverse Baker's original proposal. The faculty voted to devise a letter to Pell Grant students to disassociate Bucknell from the government's drug policy.

Baker wanted the letter to include a statement certifying that Bucknell would make up the funding lost by a Pell Grant recipient who the University considers to b a student of good standing. However, Sojka objected to this idea.

When the issue was presented at the September 1991 faculty meeting, the faculty supported the President's version of the proposed letter which excluded Baker's idea of Bucknell supplying the grant should the recipient refuse to sign the drug statement. This led to the letter's death, since Baker did not care about its existence if it did not contain the clause to make up lost funding.

Sojka suggests in his most recent letter that the current policy be modified "by asking Pell Grant recipients to sign a pledge which obligates them to meet the drug regulations of their own campus."

Since many colleges and universities have drug policies prompted by the drug-free schools and drug-free workplaces, Sojka feels this suggestion would improve the ethical problem "arising from holding Pell Grant recipients to standards different from other students."

Furthermore, Ron Laszewski, Director of Financial Aid, reported in Notes & Notices on October 18, 1991, that the United States Congress has been reviewing the Higher Education Amendments of 1986. Laszewski is a member of a national response network that reviews and provides input about federal aid programs that are a part of the Higher Education Amendments.

Laszewski wrote that the draft of the Reauthorization Bill currently being considered by the House Education and Labor Committee would delete the drug clause requirement. Laszewski predicts "these efforts will be successful in the very near future."

Student cyclist hurt in collision with car

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A student bicyclist was treated at Evangelical Hospital yesterday for injuries sustained when he collided with a car at the intersection of Seventh Street and Moore Avenue.

According to Public Safety Officer Christopher Plafcan, the accident occured about 7 p.m. last evening. Pat Ciccarelli '92, bicycling north on Seventh Street, failed to obey the four-way stop and struck a southbound car, which had crossed the bicycle's path while turning left onto Moore Avenue. The car, driven by a Bucknell junior, sustained minor damage.

Ciccarelli was transported by ambulance to Evangelical, where he was treated for facial bruises and abrasions and a broken nose, according to Dean of Students John Dunlop. Ciccarelli was released a few hours later after tests and x-rays showed no other injuries.

Members of Lewisburg Police Department also responded to the scene and are investigating the incident, and it was unknown Thrusday night whether either student would be cited for traffic violations.

FINANCIAL AID

despite an illustrated need are denied financial aid. Laszewski pointed out that many schools who have eliminated admit-denies are not entirely true to their policies when accepting students from the wait list. "To a certain extent, its a problem of definition, as opposed to a whole blanket statement" Laszewski said.

What can be done?

Nevertheless, the question posed by faculty and administrators seems to be "how can the University possibly continue to provide for needy students?" The answer comes in several forms. An assortment of committees have begun to meet and to explore every facet of the existing financial aid program.

Basically, the issue is being approached from two broad avenues: determining the amount of money to allocate to financial aid and addressing the allocation of money to needy students.

The University has reached a point where simply taking small portions of money from several sectors of the budget will no longer be an effective remedy. "I think we've about reached the ethical and practical end of what we can do with our budget," Sojka said.

Trustee guidelines sought

The faculty's Planning and Budget Committee met last week with the budget subcommittee of the Board of Trustees' Finance Committee. According to Miller, the faculty is asking Trustees to establish guidelines about the use of tuition revenue as funding for financial aid.

Traditionally, the financial aid budget has increased by an amount paralleling the rise in the comprehensive fee. "We're making a suggestion that they not be coupled," said Miller.

Also, Miller's committee hopes the Trustees will be able to develop a set of guidelines to establish a ceiling which the financial aid budget will not be able to exceed.

Such a guideline would be presented at the Nov. 8-9 Trustee meetings. During this weekend Trustees will also present other budgetary decisions, such as increase in the comprehensive fee.

Most importantly, the guidelines which the faculty committee hope to see cleared by the trustees "should not be a guide that represents a cut for anyone," said Miller.

After the meeting with the board's budget subcommittee, Miller said, he felt encouraged by the concern which members of the committee seemed to express about the matter.

Craig Bitter—The Bucknellian

Richard Skelton, dean of enrollment planning, chairs the new committee on the philosophy of financial aid.

Aid philosophy examined

The other area of financial aid which is being closely examined concerns the distribution of funds to students who qualify for aid. A newly-formed committee, chaired by Richard Skelton, dean of enrollment planning, will conduct a "more broadly-based discussion on the policy that we've been working under for the last seven to ten years," said Shailor.

According to Skelton, the committee will explore "whether financial aid is used to enable students to enroll or as an inducement to attract" prospective students. Presently, he said, the system is a combination of the two.

Currently, the University provides only need-based aid. In recent years, the University has attempted to eliminate admit-denies. But because of budgetary restraints, continuing this policy is "a substantial financial committment," said Laszewski.

The committee chaired by Skelton will examine the University's financial aid philosophy. As Laszewski asks, "Do we concentrate on eliminating admit-denies and basically furthering opportunity for a large number of people, or do we concentrate aid on a few student?"

The committee Skelton chairs will examine the possibilities of limiting future admit-denies. And it will try to determine alternative ways to allocate the money.

As the policy stands, some students do receive preferential aid packages, "talent grants," for excellence in a number of areas: athletics, music and drama, and academics. Students who receive such aid packages receive University grants, rather than being expected to take out loans and participate in work study programs. According to Skelton, the reason behind the preferential scholarships is to attract specific types of students to the University.

"I think the realities of the marketplace are that Bucknell has to be involved in the bidding," he said. And to keep Bucknell competitive with other schools of similar standing, the University offers aid packages, though still need-based, to individuals it would like to attract.

Skelton did add that he thinks the University should clearly define the type of students it would like "to bid for."

Laszewski, on the other hand, does not believe the University should award preferential aid packages to students. The difference in the caliber of Bucknell students, he said, is slight.

"If you look at the population as a whole, they are all certainly top people and top potential," said Laszewski, pointing out that distinctions between levels of talents is often too fine a line at Bucknell.

The lecture, open to the entire campus community, is mandatory for all student-athletes.

Students file suit against Ed. Dept.

Seven students have recently filed a discrimination lawsuit against the Department of Education. They claim that setting aside money specifically for minority students jeopardizes those white students in need of financial aid.

Said Daniel Young, a junior law student at the University of California, L.A., "It is a form of racism... when awarding financial aid, it shouldn't be based on your race, but based on your need."

Young originally applied for a grant solely reserved for African-Americans. He received the financial aid, but when the university discovered that he was not a minority, they withdrew the grant.

During the suit, the plantiffs allege that the federal government has failed to enforce the Civil Rights Act of 1964, prohibiting programs or awards based only on race.

Adds Young, "Clearly, they thought I had the economic need. I guess I was the wrong color."

Meese speaks at Franklin & Marshall

Edwin Meese, the former United States Attorney General, attended a banquet at Franklin and Marshall College this month, and spoke to the students and staff. His lecture, "The Reagan Years and Beyond," endeavored to address the issues with which he deals as a member of the Heritage Foundation.

He called the Foundation a "think tank," and said that it provided "information on politics, policies, and social issues that Congress and people within the administration can use."

The Foundation is composed of 150 members, and 175,000 supporters nationally. It provides information, such as the short documents which were available every 24-hours during the Iraq War crisis; additionally, the Heritage Foundation occasionally gives advice to developing countries.

Office of student life plans Halloween Week activities

BY K. LARS BRUNS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

In an attempt to make the upcoming Halloween Week exciting and fun, many campus organizations have scheduled various events, parties and special appearances.

Director of Student Activities Krisitin Skarie said, "It should be a really great week, with all of the various events taking place."

Her only concern was regarding the Nostradamus prediction, as she "hoped that the prediction doesn't keep people in."

Beginning on Monday, Oct. 28th, the freshman class will be selling pumpkins from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m.

On Wednesday, the Bison Programming Committee has a Creature Coffeehouse planned at the Bison starting at 9 p.m.

Also at the Bison, Kappa Alpha Theta and Delta Gamma sororities will host a pumpkin decorating and carving contest from 8:30 p.m.to 11 p.m. with pumpkins and prizes provided.

Anyone interest should bring his own decorations.

On Halloween, Phi Mu has scheduled a trick-or-treat from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and Alpha Phi Omega will have a haunted house on tap in Larison Dining Hall from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. and everyone including faculty and local families are welcome.

In an effort to thwart a repeat of last year's events on Halloween, there are numerous events taking place Halloween night, including hypnotist Astonishing Neal Anderson who will perform at the Weis Center at 10 p.m.

Immediately following the Astonishing Neal at 11:30 p.m. a Monster Munch including free hoagies, donut holes, and cider will be provided by Dining Service.

If the Astonishing Neal doesn't float your boat, you can watch Frightful Films in the Bison from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m.

"Overall, it should be a really fun week. Now all we need is for the weather to cooperate and it should be great," commented Skarie.

Ad hoc committee develops new regulations for smoking

ELIZABETH DANNEBERG
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Keeping pace with the nationwide spread of smoking policies in the workplace over the past decade, Bucknell is now hosting its own smoking policy committee.

The ad hoc committee, which consists of ten faculty and staff members, aims to develop smoking regulations for all on-campus buildings other than residential halls. Smoking in residential halls will be addressed later by the Residential Hall Association.

Bob Thomas, Coordinator of Drug and Alcohol Programs and the co-chair of the committee along with Judy Compton Ellis, assistant director of admissions, explains that the group is, "looking at policies at other colleges so as to explore options, and to take the recommendations given by organizations, such as The American Cancer Society, into consideration." He cites Stanford University, Temple University, and Penn State as examples of universities which have implemented successful smoke-free regulations.

The committee plans on sending its recommendations to Barry Maxwell, vice president of administration, by the end of this semester, so it can then be shown to the President's council which will make the final considerations.

According to Thomas, numerous buildings on Bucknell's campus are already "smoke-free." These buildings include Olin Science, Taylor Hall, the new chemistry and biology building, the botany building, the psychology lab, Dana engineering, the computer centers, and Freas Hall. As of Oct. 8, Cooley Hall will also be smoke-free.

Several issues involved in the committee's decisions pose complications for the future reforms. One complex issue centers around the consequences of assigning designated smoking areas within the buildings.

Gerald Commerford, assistant dean for housing, and a committee member, explained the situation. "If a person smokes, let's say, five cigarettes at a time [in a designated smoking area], that's about twenty minutes in which they could have worked. The nonsmokers would then be getting more work done."

Another issue highlights concerns with University restrooms, where many smokers hide. In the interest of others' health and comfort, Commerford suggests that smoking be prohibited in the restrooms. The committee may also discuss programs to help smokers quit.

"Everyone [on the committee] is really interested in health, and sympathetic to smokers and nonsmokers, so it is likely that we will develop reasonable policies," adds Commerford.

All of the members were chosen by Barry Maxwell because of their direct experience with smokers. Four of the members are smokers themselves. Others are exposed to family members who smoke.

Commerford admits to being a former smoker, although he has not touched a cigarette in three years and, "has got it licked on a day to day basis," he says.

Center Gallery a top-notch museum

Unfortunately, many students do not take advantage of the Center Gallery's numerous educational and innovative exhibits

BY DOUG HONABACH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

"All first-rate institutions have first-rate museums and a really great university will have an outstanding gallery," according to Professor Robert Metzger, director of the Center Gallery. On the third floor of the Elaine Langone Center, protected by a guard and a security system, is the temperature and humidity controlled Center Gallery, Bucknell's outstanding art museum.

Three types of exhibits are displayed at the Center Gallery: those that originate here, the University's permanent collection, and traveling exhibits. The permanent collection is a strong one, but Bucknell is best known for assembling exhibits of exceptional quality and diversity.

Bucknell is a major source of exhibits and "certainly the major organizer in central Pennsylvania," according to Metzger. Most of exhibits in the Gallery are conceived by Metzger and organized with the help of his assistant, Cynthia Peltier. Rather than restricting the Gallery to local and regional works, like many of the smaller museums in the area, Metzger draws upon national and international collections to find his pieces. The Gallery does not, however, overlook exceptional regional art. For instance, there was a popular exhibit of Pennsylvania German Hex signs two years ago and a show of paintings by J. Wesley Little and Blanchard Cuomo, entitled "Two Pennsylvania Painters," in 1988.

Describing the exhibits originating at Bucknell, Metzger comments, "We try to do things first. We try to make a real statement." The Gallery often accomplishes both, which may explain why as many as half the exhibits organized by Bucknell travel to other museums. "Reagan — American Icon," a 1989 exhibit of images of President Reagan, conceived by Metzger, caused a lot of discussion on the conservative Bucknell campus as well as on a national level. The exhibit was scheduled to travel to Japan but was diverted by Nancy Reagan to New York instead. The New York Times, in a favorable review, questioned why such an excellent and controversial exhibit did not open at Berkeley instead. "Reagan—American Icon" remains the only exhibit in United States history to use the sitting president as the subject.

Craig Bitter—The Bucknellian

Robert Metzger, director of the Center Gallery, notes that many exhibits complement programs sponsored by academic departments.

The exhibits in the Gallery are designed to appeal to a wide range of people. "We try to make the Gallery as broadly appealing as possible," said Metzger, and this goal is reflected in the exhibit scheduled to open Nov. 16. "Young Hollywood" will present a number of antique and contemporary toys inspired by popular American movies. Never before has there been an exhibit with this specific focus. The toys were manufactured in large quantities for mass consumption as opposed to the one-of-a-kind pieces normally associated with art exhibits. Among those famous characters to be represented in some fashion are Tarzan, Betty Boop, and Marilyn Monroe.

The Center Gallery is closely tied to the academic side of Bucknell; it is not just an arena for aesthetic appreciation of art. "The Gallery is a branch within a teaching institution and our exhibitions are designed to educate first and foremost," according to Metzger. The Gallery works closely with the academic departments when developing many exhibits. "We try to coordinate each art exhibit with the departments and curriculum as much as we can in a cross-disciplinary approach in order to get classes more interested." The current exhibit, "St. Petersburg Realism: The Unbroken Tradition," was done in conjunction with the Russian department. Two upcoming exhibits will be of the Quincentennial recognition. The first will be an exhibit of Latin American women's art in conjunction with the Spanish, Latin American studies, and theatre and dance departments. Next fall there will be an exhibit of Native American art that is being coordinated with the religion department.

> "All first-rate institutions have first-rate museums and a really great university will have an oustanding gallery."
> — Robert Metzger
> Director of the Center Gallery

Though the exhibits are only on display for one to two months, they are planned and organized for years in advance. Describing the process, Metzger explains that, "First you have to get the idea, then you have to find the objects. It's not just like selecting a play." Finding the pieces of art is often the most difficult part of the process because Bucknell is in competition with schools and museums all over the world to get the best art. Once the artwork is located, it must be transported to Bucknell, something that Metzger often does himself with the help of a motor-pool station wagon.

The University's permanent collection consists of about five thousand pieces, including paintings, prints, sculptures, and objects from various cultures. The paintings are mostly American and European paintings from the Hudson River School. The permanent collection has been acquired slowly over the years. Most of the early collection was donated, and the Gallery still relies significantly upon donations. On permanent display in the gallery is the "Samuel H. Kress Study Collection." It consists of 21 works of art, mostly Italian paintings from the 14th through 17th centuries. The main use of the collection is as a teaching tool, but it is open to the public as well.

With the opening of the Gallery, more and more works are being purchased for the collection. Most of the purchases are contemporary pieces or prints, because they are the least cost-prohibitive. The Gallery is always trying to fill gaps in the permanent collection. "We may not get the most important person in a given school of painting, but we like to get a representation of a given type or style," according to Metzger.

The Center Gallery is only nine years old and Metzger is only the second director. "The Gallery is still a young institution. We are building a strong reputation, but we have a long way to go." Metzger would like to see the Gallery move to its own building in the near future to "give it its own identity." The Gallery attracts approximately 250 visitors a week, about 60 percent of whom are from the Bucknell community. It is likely that more visitors would be attracted if the Gallery we not hidden on the third floor of the ELC. "We would like to get more students. It's always one thing that is uppermost in our mind."

Metzger points out, "Lots of people discover art later in life and will wish they had done more with it earlier. Art can be rewarding on many different levels if people will just take a little time to visit the Gallery." The Gallery, and the artwork on exhibit there, is a wonderful resource for the Bucknell community and has much to offer in many different ways to everyone who visits. It is almost impossible to visit the Gallery and not leave with something more than you came with. But, as Metzger points out, "It's a shame that some people, both students and faculty, will never visit the Gallery."

Russian art with U.S. influence

BY ALISON REYHER

Though she was born in Russia and studied art in Moscow, Irene Yastremski does not consider herself to be a Russian artist. "I'm not traditional," she says. At first glance, one might say her work stems from the same mold as old Russian icon painters, but a closer inspection will disclose the old-world images reveal that a free hand has rendered them. Yastremski's art includes collage-like paintings filled with traditional Russian pictures against a black lacquered background and large-scale oil paintings of exotic flowers that have a curiously American appearance.

After reaching the United States 17 years ago, Yastremski took the traditional techniques and styles she had learned in Moscow, and—much like she lays colors and glazes on canvas or ceramics—she layered an American education on top of her background. Yastremski graduated from the Kansas City Art Institute, where, she notes, she was free to take her work in many directions. "In Russia, the teachers are very strict about how you work," she explains. "Here, you can invent new work."

Bucknell Public Relations

Artist Irene Yastremski creates old-world images in modern colors in her paintings, silk-screen prints, ceramics, and lacquer panels.

What Yastremski wanted to create was art covered with vividly colored flowers, which are her favorite things. Her ceramics began as standard American slipware, but they evolved into beautiful collector's items after she painted and glazed them to look like gardens of lilies, hibiscus, and tulips. She has also experimented with glazed iridescent-colored backgrounds to compliment other more traditional Russian glossy black backgrounds.

Yastremski has also adapted her designs for use in silk-screen prints, which are simultaneously Russian and American. She also creates ceramic boxes, plates, and cups covered with flowers. Her most traditional work—Russian lacquer panels, which span the development of her artwork from the traditions of Russia to the modern, floral world of Irene Yastremski.

Yastremski's work has been shown in New York, Washington, D.C., and New Haven, CT, which are all places she has lived. Her Husband, Slav Yastremski teaches Russian at Bucknell and their son Alex is a senior at Lewisburg Area High School.

Irene Yastremski's work is on display in a special section of the Dogwood Hill store on market street through November.

Dancer teaches master classes

BY KATIE DEBONVILLE

The applause at the end of one of Barb Grubel's master classes in contact improvisation is evidence that Bucknell dance students enjoy taking her classes as much as she enjoys teaching them. Grubel conducted a series of classes in the Tustin Dance Studio during the week of Oct. 20–25.

"I came to Bucknell to introduce to students basic contact skills," Grubel said, adding, "The students seem bright and willing to try new things."

Grubel describes her area of specialization as "partnering work" rather than contact improvisation. She feels that dancers need to have a commitment to movement in order for partnering to work. "My work has to do with getting people to feel the tactile sense of partnering as will as the photo-perfect finish," Grubel explained.

Grubel's training in dance was of a technical, structured background. She earned a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree and studied ballet technique at Cunningham and Limon before going on to dance with a Cunningham-based company. Grubel has taught on tour with several companies, including an assignment in teaching improvisation with Dan Wagner's dance company. She credits Will Swanson with teaching her that energy from movements can be used in a relaxed manner to aid in lifts and partnering. "If you stop short in partnering, it doesn't allow movement to flow, especially in modern dances in which movements can go from the floor to off the floor," she said.

Grubel feels that an awareness of movement and energy is important for people in all fields. "One reason dance still exists is that it brings people together in a healthier setting rather than a competitive setting," Grubel stated.

Grubel says she has greatly enjoyed her stay at Bucknell. The dancers at Bucknell have greatly benefited from her teaching.

Richie Sambora's debut has promise

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Album Review

It would seem as though Richie Sambora has something to prove with his first solo album, Stranger In This Town. Rock fans familiar with Sambora know him as the driving lead guitar behind Bon Jovi. What most fans do not know is that he has co-written a number of the band's biggest hits, including "Never Say Goodbye," "Bad Medicine," and "Livin' On A Prayer," among others. Moreover, his voice is arguably superior to lead singer Jon Bon Jovi's, although Sambora has always held a back-up role. Now that Bon Jovi's future has been put on hold by Jon Bon Jovi's own solo career, it would only seem appropriate for Sambora to step out of the shadow and strike out on his own. Commeding on his new release in Billbard, Sambora had this to say, "Though this record I wanted to become friends with people. I want to start a relationship with the listener. The record was me, now it's everyone else's."

©1991 Polygram Records, Inc.

With the elp of Neils Dorfsman, award-inning producer for such artis as Dire Straits and Sting, Sambo has crafted a style that is predminantly his own. With the exption of two miserable tracks "Rosie" and "River of Love," he has clearly avoided some of the pitfalls of his former band in the appeal to adolescent-oriend hard rock. Instead, he has opte for a much smoother R & B inused style. His voice is well-matched for this sound and his guar work is precise and remarkabl cleaner than any of his previds work. These ingredients should add up to something substantial. Instead, the album see a series of highs and lows that are brought about by inconsistent lyrical quality.

With its long wails and protracted uitar and synthesizer chords, he first track serves as little more than a three-minute and 47-econd introduction for the secod cut, "Church of Desire." When things finally get off the ground, Sambora wastes little time cranking up a fluent blues guitar that remains potent throughout the album. He also does well to establish the strength of his voice. Unfortunately, the lack-luster lyrics add little to what is otherwise a fine song.

The strength of this album undoubtedly lies in its title track, "Stranger In This Town." The melody works nicely and the vocals are passionate. In this case, the lyrics are sufficient and the sound is not dissimilar to that of the Allman Brothers. The same can be said for the album's last song, "The Answer," which is a delightful, lullaby-like, acoustic track.

"Ballad of Youth" is billed as the first single off the album and while it does not quite have the charm of the aforementioned songs, it is still a heartfelt track that encourages the listener to forget about the downfalls of youth and "yesterday's blues."

Perhaps the biggest disappointment is "Mr. Bluesman," a dedication to Eric Clapton. The song features a guitar solo by Clapton and while the words are not altogether unflattering, they are bland and uninspiring at best. This seems to be a recurring problem on a number of songs. Tunes like "Father Time" and "One Light Burning" just do not seem to reach the listener.

Sambora has succeeded in presenting a mature-sounding effort with Stranger In This Town, but he seems to have left his audience largely undefined. This is problematic due to his background. Teenage Bon Jovi fans salivating for hard pop hits will not find this album appealing. At the same time, Sambora may be alienating more discerning listeners with his often flimsy songwriting. Consequently, this effort seems to fall short as a coming of age album. Although the music contains a high degree of listenability, it is unclear who this album will appeal to. This makes it a suspect choice for the prospective buyer.

A Midsummer Night's Dream to be traditional production

Titania (Jill Emery '92) kisses the strangely transformed Bottom (John Pfeiffer '92) as the fairies (Becky Harlan '95, Joanna Fassl '95, Vanessa Jones '95, Jodie Eash '95, Stephanie Gunter '94) look on in amazement in the department of theatre and dance's production of A Midsummer Night's Dream.

BY JOHN PFEIFFER

Mysterious fairies glide across the water beneath the haunting moon. Gentle Puck, in service of the fairy King, leads four young lovers through the tangled underbrush as they search, with a little help from a magic flower, for true love. Six "hempen homespuns," who "never labored in their minds 'til now," meet secretly to rehearse a play to present to the Duke and his new bride; until one of their cast is transformed into an ass and wooed by the fairy queen. All of this takes place in the shadows of the forest that has overgrown Coleman Theatre in preparation for tonight's opening of Cap & Dagger's production of William Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream.

In the play, three different worlds: those of the fairies, the Duke of Athens, and these "Rustics" collide. When fairy magic intrudes into the lives of the four young lovers and the six laborers, the quiet wedding of Theseus to Hippolyta turns into quite an adventure.

Those who think that Shakespearean plays are all tragedies in which the characters wind up dead are in for a pleasant surprise. Audiences are treated to a happy ending, complete with a play within a play descending into comical chaos.

Chaos is also the fate of the four lovers. Having gone into the woods in love with Hermia, and spurning Helena, both men, Demitrius and Lysander, soon fall under the influence of the Fairy King's magic. They chase each other through the woods determined to fight, not for their former love, but rather for the hand of Helena.

The Department's interpretation of the piece remains true to Shakespeare's script, as the company presents a traditional rendering of the show. Their challenge as student actors was to make their rendering of A Midsummer Night's Dream different from the modernized version skillfully presented by the Acting Company last week in the Weis Center. They rely heavily on the language itself and Shakespeare's own humor in exploring the lighter side of this comedy.

F. Elaine Williams, Director of the Unversity Theatre, has created an exciting set for the production. Full of concealed entrances, pools and streams, a towering tree and several playing levels, the forest presents plenty of opportunities for the unexpected to happen. And with Shakespeare's fairies playing havoc with mere mortals, it usually does.

Editor's Note: John Pfeiffer will be playing the role of Bottom in the Department of Theatre and Dance's production of A Midsummer Night's Dream.

[THE] to open Gallery

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell University's Gallery Series will open Tuesday, Oct. 29, with a performance by [The] in the Langone Center Gallery at 8 p.m.

This offbeat duo is composed of trumpeter Edwin Harkins and baritone Philip Larson. Although the two have been together as [The] officially since 1976, their origins stretch back to days when they performed as Rockefeller Fellows at the Center for Music Experiment at the University of California, San Diego. They were also active in the Extended Vocal Techniques Ensemble before forming [The].

Their repertoire contains over thirty works, of which more than half are their own compositions. It would be a mistake to put them in any musical class. Noted specifically for their creativity, their bizarre antics are of both a musical and theatrical nature. [The]'s performance incorporates elements of avant-garde, jazz, rock, traditional, and ethnic music in meaningful improvisations.

Critically acclaimed for their balance of wit, charm, and poignancy, Harkins and Larson have often been likened to John Cleese and Eric Idle of Monty Python. According to Kyle Gann of the Village Voice, "Their gags aren't delivered one by one as in stand-up comedy, but in the kind of Cagean counterpoint familiar to anyone who followed '70s theater pieces. Many of the jokes asymptotically approached a punchline that never arrived, others exploded." He adds, "If Harkins and Larson were just being silly, they'd still be worth their newsprint."

The performance is sponsored grants from Meet the Composer and the Bucknell University department of music.

EDITORIAL

Does Bucknell need a breath of fresh air?

Recently, a committee was formed to discuss directions for a new campus policy on smoking in University buildings. While many issues arouse passions around campus, a ban on smoking is particularly inflammatory — those who insist on clean air are vehemently opposed to those who want to protect their right to light up whenever and wherever they wish.

As the new policy is being formulated, we encourage the committee to err on the side of caution. Passive smoking (that is, inhaling smoke from other people's cigarettes) has been recognized by former U. S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop as one of this decade's largest health problems. Smoking has now been banned on nearly all domestic airline flights, and many corporations have eliminated smoking from all of their office buildings across the country.

While smokers correctly contend that they have the right to smoke, they can not impinge on others' rights to clean, smoke-free air. Particularly troubling are those professors who smoke during class. Also significant is the number of people who smoke while in public campus restrooms. This activity is especially troubling because of the close, confined nature of such a space.

We therefore recommend that the newly formed smoking policy committee ban all smoking in the academic buildings, offices, and classrooms. Student social spaces like the Bison must also be smoke-free. Similarly, as the Residence Hall Association plans its own smoking policy, we suggest that residents should still be permitted to smoke in their own rooms, with the door closed, but no smoking should be permitted in the hallways and common areas of residence halls.

At the same time, we encourage the University to sponsor a series of 'stop smoking' programs to encourage those employees and students who wish to quit to do so. Not only would such programs improve the University's public relations image, it could even save some lives.

Furthermore, the University might also consider offering monetary incentives to those employees who stop smoking because of the greatly decreased burden on the University's health care insurance system.

With this new evaluation underway, the campus as a whole can breathe a sigh of relief.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

College Republicans president criticizes Keen

TO THE EDITOR:

The last issue of The Bucknellian carried a letter by Ernest Keen, a professor of psychology. In his letter, Professor Keen accused President Bush of attempting to "pack" the court with conservatives, and tried to pin the blame on Republicans for the Senate's embarrassing performance during the Clarence Thomas confirmation hearings.

I was not surprised to see someone revive the tired "court packing" cliché that we hear every time a conservative president nominates someone for the court.

This sort of criticism is a typical manifestation of the frustration liberals feel every time they are reminded that they are hopelessly out of touch with the American electorate.

When George Bush was elected president, the electorate expected him to make appointments and nominations that were in tune with his beliefs. Why would any president fill positions with people who held views contradictory to his own? Are you, Professor Keen, naïve enough to believe that a liberal president would not nominate liberals for court positions?

Keen also states that conservatives in the Senate exploited the issues of sex and race for political gain. When an anti-Thomas senator illegally leaked the FBI report that the Judiciary Committee had dismissed as inconclusive, was this not exploiting the issue of sex? That slimy senator nearly ruined Judge Thomas with highly dubious charges that pandered to the worst anti-black stereotypes. Come on, Professor Keen, which side of the aisle was exploiting these issues for political gain? Certainly not the Republicans.

I defy you to find a major poll in which Americans did not support Judge Thomas by a 2-to-1 margin.

Lastly, may I point out that your indignation about Senator Specter's outstanding performance during the hearings will probably fall on deaf ears. I defy you to find a major poll in which Americans did not support Judge Thomas by a 2-to-1 margin. And, this is not just white males: Blacks, whites, women, and men all support Judge Thomas by roughly the same margin. His support is strong, and it reaches across all demographic groups. Please don't trick yourself into believing that Senator Specter will give your opinion any credence.

I wish I could continue to point out everything wrong with your letter, Professor Keen, but The Bucknellian is only 18 pages long. Have a nice day.

Senior challenges status-quo political values

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to respond to Paul Triplett's letter concerning the Clarence Thomas debate in the October 18th edition of The Bucknellian. Not only do I disagree with his political commentary concerning the nomination and confirmation of Thomas, but, and possibly more importantly, I feel that his statements are indicative of the current state of political discourse in this country.

Mr. Triplett first states that due to the character assassination of Robert Bork by Senators Kennedy and Biden, the President has "no choice but to nominate candidates with a slim paper trail and tight lips." This seems to ignore the fact that there are plenty of potential candidates who have both the quality and respectability to be Supreme Court justices, and that these candidates were overlooked because neither of these are the qualification which the President was concerned with when choosing his nominee. The problem is not the Senate Judiciary Committee or the Democrats in general, as Mr. Triplett states. The problem is that Mr. Bush and his conservative friends are trying to use the court as a political weapon to further their extreme right-wing agenda. As such, their criteria for choosing a candidate include extreme conservative beliefs, as well as the ability to serve on the bench for as long as possible. Quality and character have never been, I believe, involved in their decision-making process in the least, and the current Court serves to prove that point emphatically. Mr. Thomas, at the sprite age of 43, is a perfect example of this combination of conservative criteria. The point is that there were plenty of other potential candidates which George Bush might have picked who could have been warmly received by the Senate Judiciary Committee and the American people. But he did not choose them, and for no specific reason other than those Mr. Triplett has put forward. If the President was limited at all in his choice of a candidate, it was only due to his own narrow interests.

Secondly, Mr. Triplett, in stating that we as citizens have no right to "judge who should and should not sit on the Supreme Court," seems to forget the phrase "by the people, for the people." Is this not a democracy in which we live, even if it is a poor representative democracy?! Are not the leaders of this country, in theory at least, supposed to have a right, and I would say a responsibility, to voice our opinions and participate in the goings-on of our own country? I would agree that the Founding Fathers (all of whom were white, land-owning men, remember!) were concerned about public influence over the Supreme Court. They seemed to have been concerned about anything which might have involved a threat to their power and property. And not much is different today. I think George, Orrin, and Arlen would be much happier if people would let them do exactly what they wanted without interference. I think they would love it if the American people would just shut up and submit. It would make it much easier for them to convince themselves that their views on poverty, health care, reproductive freedoms, the debt, the environment, etc., etc., make any sense at all.

Our leaders are supposed to represent, and even care about, the opinions of us as citizens. Therefore, in a case such as the Thomas confirmation, if we doubt that he is someone who we want to be on the Supreme Court, we have every right to expect that our government would welcome and respond to our opinions and criticisms as citizens. And not, as one Senator did, vote for a candidate even when receiving a majority of calls in opposition. We should not accept such paternalistic attitudes.

Lastly, I think that Mr. Triplett's article epitomizes how lethargic political debate in our country has become. Bush, the Justice Department, and other conservatives need only to use a little media manipulation, cover up some important issues, tell some touching stories, and back it all up with the right photo session, and all of a sudden everyone is convinced. I was amazed at how commentators could repeatedly explain the Republican's strategy of diverting people's attention away from important issues (i.e. away from sexual harassment and onto sympathy for Thomas), and people could still fall victim to these Republican traps. Are we that willing to be manipulated? Can we not think for ourselves anymore? Will we follow the Republicans wherever we might be led (i.e. Grenada, Panama, Star Wars, the Gulf, Clarence Thomas, etc., etc., etc.)? I personally will not accept the "sit in front of the TV and nod" approach to political discourse. There is too much at stake in the world not to question and challenge the views of people in authority. I cannot believe that in a time when people around the world are putting their lives on the line to make this world a more just and peaceful one, that we can accept such a passive approach to politics, while the dignity and freedoms of people in our own country are being eroded away under the flow of the right-wing political agenda.

Are not the leaders of this country, in theory at least, supposed to have us in mind when making decisions?

Student name-publishing policy draws questions

TO THE EDITOR:

I think that it should be brought to your attention that in two previous issues, articles concerning the disclosure of names in criminal offenses has been inconsistent.

These articles dealt with a "certain" fraternity vandalizing the golf course, and two students named for thefts in the bookstore.

I feel that The Bucknellian not only interfered with the privacy of these students, it contradicted its policy by not printing the name of the fraternity in the previous case.

Does this suggest that you feel it necessary to single out individuals in such a small community, when a large group is allowed to remain anonymous?

The article states that the fraternity asked that The Bucknellian not release their name, and The Bucknellian complied.

Was this option made available to the two students involved in the Bookstore incident? I would also like to know what the priorities of The Bucknellian are if it selectively caters to people's interests?

NAACP accuses The Bucknellian of discriminatory practices

BY REGIS B. BINGHAM, TERENCE M. RILEY, AND RICHARD K. SCOTT

Do you realize your paper is being seen as inconsistent, which leads to the question of whose interest The Bucknellian is serving? In the wake of the article entitled "Students arrested for bookstore theft" (October 11, 1991), we, office-holding members of various traditionally African-American organizations find differential treatment in the presentation of African-Americans in your paper. We have selected two articles to reinforce our argument.

We first draw your attention to the previously mentioned article in which two African-American students were charged with theft from the bookstore. This front-page article discussed the theft of two t-shirts, shorts, and a hat.

What isn't mentioned, which might be equally newsworthy and as interesting, was the incident(s) which contributed to the overhaul of the entire Copy Vendor machine network. This involved students using a copy machine card and a piece of gum (or something "McGyverish") to regularly steal soda from the vending machines, but in this particular incident, two of the violators were apprehended and found to have stolen 76 cans. This event epitomized the campus-wide scam, forcing the University to issue new copy cards to each of the 3,200 Bucknell students. This story merely made the Security Log without a mention of the perpetrators' names; while the theft in the bookstore, which isn't a first, made the front page, complete with names and a full account of the event.

Our intent is not to weigh the crimes, rather it is to understand why differential treatment is present in these various incidents of theft.

This is not an isolated incident. For example, the 19 April 1991 issue of The Bucknellian involved another African-American in an empty-hand assault charge on the front page. In the 20 September 1991 issue, there was another assault. This assault specifically involved a "lock-blade knife."

The latter apparently was not worthy enough to make anything more than the Security Log where names were withheld while the 19 April article splattered the names of those involved across the front page.

In effect, we are taking two assaults no matter the degree of the crime and asking: why the two extremes? Are the two crimes that much different from each other that one makes front-page headlines with all the names included while the other goes nameless into a couple of lines in the Security Log beside a fire alarm activation?

No accusations are being made, for we are sure that these are just mere oversights on your part; however, the inconsistency of your newspaper creates a feeling of exploitation among a specific group. It hurts the credibility, pride, and respect of some individuals while others escape unscathed. This brings us back to the original question: Whose interest are you serving???

Editor's note: Originally intended for a letter, this piece was signed by Michele M. Simms, president of Bucknell's NAACP.

University's name policy hinders fairness of campus news coverage

BY TARA G. GILLIGAN
Bucknellian News Editor

The letter submitted by several members of Bucknell's NAACP chapter has brought into focus a significant issue: the prioritizing and placement of news stories. The letter deals most specifically with an article from last week's issue: "Two students arrested for bookstore theft." On a much broader scale, however, it addresses an issue over which The Bucknellian unfortunately has very little control.

Members of The Bucknellian's editorial board decide when to print the names of students allegedly involved in crimes; in making its decisions, the board considers it pertinent to include reports of felonies, many misdemeanors, and any crimes directly affecting the Bucknell community. Because the responsibility of any newspaper, campus or national, is to provide the community with pertinent information, names of students involved in serious crimes will generally appear in print.

In deciding content and placement of stories, The Bucknellian does not take into consideration race, gender, income, or any other discriminatory factors.

What might appear to be an inconsistency in our policy is actually a much wider inconsistency on the part of the University. Quite simply, The Bucknellian is not always allowed proper access to certain information concerning student crimes.

Information about crimes reaches The Bucknellian through both the Department of Public Safety and the Lewisburg and East Buffalo Police Departments. Police records, because they are considered to be public records, include the names of individuals.

On the other hand, security reports and information from other University departments do not reveal the names of students. Because the University does not furnish the names of students charged by the University's own internal disciplinary system, The Bucknellian cannot print those names; it does not have access to them. Thus, if the University in a particular instance chooses not to inform local police departments about a crime, The Bucknellian has no way of confirming the identities of students involved.

The Security Log, which contains information about student crimes on campus, appears on The Bucknellian's pages exactly as we receive it. The Department of Public Safety submits the log each Thursday afternoon, after the deadline for news articles. Because of its nature, student names do not appear in the log; allegations are handled confidentially within the University.

Bucknell bookstore policy mandates the University to report all shoplifters to the police. Other campus crimes are not reported to the police; instead, the University handles them in-house, through the Committee on Student Conduct and other like committees, none of which publicizes names.

As a result, The Bucknellian faces an uncomfortable decision. As a campus newspaper, we have a responsibility to inform the community about crimes. Yet, we are hindered by the University's attempt to shield students. As the system currently stands, two students charged in similar crimes, one on campus and one in town, are dealt with differently.

In order to be fair, we must be able to print the names of all students who commit serious crimes. The root of this problem is a University with policies which prevent our access to all of the facts.

Skena's Prescription

It's silly to think that a rumor or a party or anything so frivolous could possibly result in hundreds of 'perfect children' being surrounded by hundreds of men with guns and dogs ready to spring into action.

Rumors are great aren't they? The campus favorite these days is the 'Halloween massacre' as prophecized by that ancient figure Nostradamus who lived long before the University at Lewisburg was even thought of. This particular rumor has been around for some time (I heard it when I was a freshman) but of course the wholesale destruction of human life is allegedly 'fated' to take place in 1991.

Well, as incredulous as it sounds, I've heard that some students and parents regard this as no laughing matter but a legitimate threat. Because of this, I've decided to try to provide a way for all of us to escape the dreaded 'Halloween Massacre of 1991. First off, it's obviously dangerous to be in a U or a T-shaped building or for that matter anywhere on campus. For safety, we should all head downtown. The murderer will undoubtedly be after students so, for safety, leave the J-Crew tunics, the L.L. Bean shoes and the Bill Cosby type sweaters at home. Instead, flee to the town in any traditional Halloween costume.

These precautions may not be enough to deter the killer though. The students should be surrounded by armed policemen, water cannons and K-9 units for their own protection. Additionally, hundreds of policemen in full riot gear should be hiding in the graveyard out of sight; still others should be behind the police, waiting for something to happen. No murderer could penetrate such a blockade, no student could escape it.

Sure, the above scenario is utterly ludicrous. It's silly to think that a rumor or a party or anything so frivolous could possibly result in hundreds of 'perfect children' being surrounded by hundreds of men with guns and dogs ready to spring into action. With that many people and that much firepower anything could happen. Such a situation could almost lead to a massacre. Fortunately, events like this just don't occur at Bucknell, we can all sleep easily.

In any event, the real horror is that an ancient prophecy could generate so much excitement and perhaps even some fear while real problems like vandalism, theft, assault and even sexual assault occur with relatively little expressed student concern. Shouldn't student concerns and administrative letters be directed at things that impact our common life reality and not prophecy?

Well, whatever, have fun with the rumor, it makes for a good party theme, but I have to wonder about anyone who is taking this seriously. Happy Halloween.

Bison Tales

Abdul Boasts P. C. T & A Does Her End Justify The Mean?

Long, long before Machiavelli was even a princely heartbeat, there was a drumbeat. There was music. Shortly after music, a second discovery: Sex sells music. Perhaps they noticed it as the world's first trumpet player dexterously pushed and manipulated glistening valves, while vibrating finger tips ever so slightly to achieve a subtle vibrato. Or maybe they realized earlier, as they admired the first mandolin with its stiff strings stretched tautly on its firm, long neck. Possibly, the inherent relationship between sex and music can be traced back as far as the Neanderthals...

Newt: (banging rocks together) You ain't nothing but a herbivorous mammoth, crying all the time. Yeah, Yeah. You ain't nothing but a...

Other Neanderthals: Booo...What a geek...Sounds like a saber-toothed tiger in heat...Quick, someone get the club....etc.

Elvo: (banging rocks together while rotating hips in a sexy and controversial manner) You ain't nothing but a herbivorous mammoth, crying all the time...

Other Neanderthals: Yeahhhh...What a stud...He's totally dinorific...Quick, someone get Dick Clark...etc.

As the metronome of time beat on, and the human race slowly evolved, the sex/music continuum began to flirt with blatant violence, protest, and self-destruction. Soon, the formula became sex, DRUGS, and Rock and Roll.

But then, thanks to Nancy Reagan, we discovered that you can still be sexy, if you say 'NO' to narcotics (but YES to Frank Sinatra, evidently). Protest and self-destruction were "out." Jellybeans were "in." Music, for the most part, drifted away from drugs and eased back into pure sex.

Enter Prince. Enter Sheila E. Enter Vanity. Enter Madonna. Hot sex and tepid music equaled big money...but not big enough. Some of those pesky people from the moral minority just weren't digging into their pockets. "We know it when we see it! We know it when we see it!" They'd scream, as they waved their holy Bibles at Madonna's holey jeans... Enter Paula Abdul.

She was the perfect blend of black and white, talent and hype. Her well-formed juxtapositions won America's heart. And somehow, we never consciously tallied the implications, as we stood Straight Up and watched Abdul croon every so coyly about being Knocked Out by a Cold Hearted Snake.

Now, she has a new album and a new gimmick. The featured cut is innocently entitled, "The Promise Of A New Day." The upbeat lyrics of the song enthusiastically assert that although the rain forests are in bad shape, we can easily save them if we all work together as one big, happy planet. According to the music video, Abdul's environmental-protection strategy involves two simple steps:

1. Meet a large group of leotard-clad people at the local rain forest.
2. Collectively clutch your groins while writhing you hips for approximately three minutes.

The climax of the video depicts Abdul planted under a mountain spring. She emphatically sings about "hope," and "the winds of change" as she fondles her bosom and arches her back towards the trickling water. Eventually, the picture and music fade leaving a bold message on the screen. "THE INDIANS SAY: WHEN THE FORESTS DIE...WE ALL DIE...also, there will be no place left to collectively clutch our groins and writhe our hips."

When I first saw the video, a cynical picture of the production process came to mind. I imagined the video crew drinking coffee out of Styrofoam cups while spraying Abdul with aerosol hair-spray and making suggestions like, "Okay, if you point to the tree by flexing your thigh in a suggestive manner, we can sucker the concerned environmentalists and the horny adolescents at the same time. That way, you can make enough money to invest in Exxon."

Is this bad though? Perhaps heaving cleavage is the only true means of jolting us into reality. Take the psychology used in Sunkist commercials for example. The goal of these advertisements is to make the viewer think along the following lines: Sunkist=Attractive People In Skimpy Bathing Suits Jumping Out Of Planes=SEX=Good=Me Buy Sunkist Even Though It Tastes Like A Mixture Of Lemon Rinds and Baboon Snot And I Pee Neon Orange For Two Weeks After Drinking It. The unintended residue of the Abdul video can work along the same lines: Rain Forest=Paula Abdul Clutching Her Groin And Writhing Her Hips=SEX=Good=Me Help Save Rain Forest!

Armies of change from all over the world should take a cue from Paula's specially blended "Mandragola." Didactic speeches and hostile lectures can be replaced by efficacious bosom-fondling and torso-twisting.

In fact, this new movement towards P.C. change progresses as we speak. The feminist movement has recently nominated Playwoman Of The Year, Tawny Ticklestripe, as their spokes-model. In special commercials (patterned after the popular new 1-900 advertisements), Tawny, crouching in a red bikini (the red symbolizes empowerment) will make inspirational statements like, "Some of you big handsome men (seductive wink) out there, just aren't being nice to us poor girls (second, even more seductive wink). These days, a big handsome man can get a lot further by being nice, if you know what I mean (yet another wink so seductive that the commercial is banned in Ohio and Pennsylvania)."

New York governor, Mario Cuomo, demonstrated knowledge of Abdul's methods in his dynamic announcement of the new underground public works project: "NOW I FIRMLY BELIEVE THAT THESE STIFF NEW PROGRAMS WHICH I AM SPEAR-HEADING WILL WHIP TRAFFIC AND MAKE IT EASIER TO THROTTLE OVER TO THE AIRPORT AND MOUNT THE DESIRED PLANE PUMPING NEW BLOOD INTO OUR ECONOMY."

I urge all activist groups to be ruthless with this new found tactic. Finally, there is a way to MAKE THE MASSES ACT. All it takes is a few socks, a quick trip to Victoria's Secret, and a well-strung guitar. Success will soon be ours..."Onwards and Upwards."

Is it monkey see, monkey do at the Mods?

Four types of primates live at Bucknell for students and psychologists to observe

BY COLLEEN RUSH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

An outburst of typically jungle noises breaks through the calm of a still night in Lewisburg. Is it merely another victim of overstress and undersleep that cries out for help? Though a likely answer, the noise or smell emanating from the Mods is not a student, but one of the estimated 50 primates residing in Bucknell West.

For approximately 20 years, Bucknell has been one of the few undergraduate liberal arts colleges in the nation with a sizable primate program. Along with vast amounts of research, the psychology department boasts a plethora of published or recognized research in numerous prestigious journals. Students are involved on a day-to-day basis with the primates and are given the opportunity to contribute to the researching process.

And what exactly does a day in the life of a Bucknell monkey entail? The typical day is comprised of a variety of entertaining activities, as well as educational tasks. The day starts with a series of observations performed by caretaker Mary Gavitt, a licensed veterinary technician, who knows the personality of each monkey. Gavitt spends a few minutes observing each monkey to determine whether he is sick. "The key to knowing what is wrong is knowing what they act like normally," said Nancy Caine, associate professor of psychology.

The next vital event of the day: breakfast! Though the amount and type of food varies according to each species, the primates' diet generally consists of fruit and monkey chow, in addition to biscuits made to conform to the dietary needs of a monkey. The two smaller species, the squirrel monkey and the red-bellied tamarin, have a more varied diet, while the two larger types, the Hamadryas baboon and the Japanese macaque, stick to a more basic one.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

The squirrel monkeys are used for students to observe primates in a community situation. Studies show how monkeys delegate tasks.

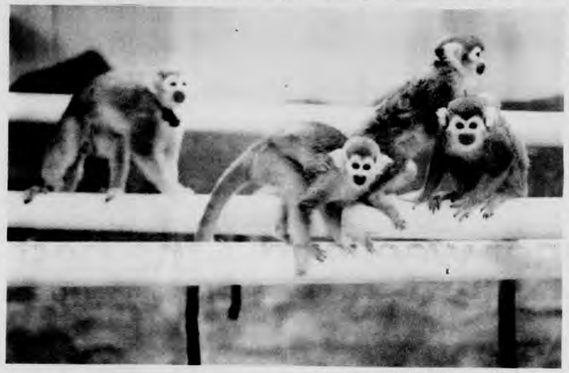
Next, the primates are observed by students or faculty. The Hamadryas baboon and the Japanese macaque, known as Old World monkeys, are given a series of slides. The monkeys are taught to push buttons and switch the slides at their leisure. The slides depict species different than and similar to the observing monkey, thus allowing the monkey to choose which species it prefers to look at. "By determining what kinds of social stimuli they like, we get an idea of what is and what is not important to them," Caine said. Studies involving this are still being conducted.

The squirrel monkey and the red-bellied tamarin, referred to as New World monkeys, are observed in community situations. The monkeys are given a frightening stimuli, such as a stuffed cat or bird, and the observing student records how they avoid the predators. "Although in captivity, the smaller primates still respond similarly to predators," Caine noted. Coordination within the primate group when a task is presented is also a prime research target.

As far as the humanitarian aspect is concerned, the primates are never isolated by themselves. They live in social groups according to their species and adapt to their own type of community living. The monkeys are never subjected to invasive research, such as experimentation with needles, drugs, or physical pain. "Our research is purely hands-off," said Caine.

Though in captivity, the monkeys are put in environments as close to realistic as possible. A series of bars and climbing contraptions are set up in every cage to allow the monkeys a more typical jungle atmosphere.

Students are encouraged to visit the primate facilities, though an advanced appointment is required.



Colin Bridgewater —The Bucknellian

Pyschology students present the Hamadryas baboons with pictures of different types of primates. The baboons learn to push buttons to see the slide they like the most. The Hamadryas baboons, Japanese macaques, squirrel monkeys, and red-bellied tamarins are kept in a very natural environment.

Great local places to take your family

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

No, the Patriot League was not gracious enough to change the football schedule so that the Bison could play at home on Parents' Weekend. Nonetheless, there are plenty of other things to fill the gap of time between dinner on Friday night and the next big meal on Saturday. The Susquehanna Valley is actually full of interesting activities to try, and there is something sure to please any member of the family. Take a look, you might be surprised to see what you find.

Right here on campus, the family can get a free haircut. This Sunday afternoon, in Larison Dining Room, James Martin's Salon will be cutting hair. Donations will go to Teach for America.

For the athletes, there is nothing like a game of tennis, basketball, or golf. Pair up with friends' families or just pretend that you're the Kennedy clan and have your own family competition.

In Lewisburg, there are two Victorian houses that serve as museums. The Packwood House, located on North Water Street, served as the home of Edith Fetherstone, a painter. Her home, which is filled with antique Victorian furniture, tells the history of her life and Lewisburg. It is open on Saturday from 1–4 p.m.; Sunday from 2–4 p.m. The Slifer House, on Water Road, by the United Methodist Home on Route 15N, is also furnished in the Victorian period. Samuel Sloane, secretary of the Commonwealth during the Civil War, lived there. The tour costs $2 for adults, $1 for children ages 10–16.

There is also a House Tour in Lewisburg on Saturday from 10 a.m.–3 p.m. Tickets to see eight historic and contemporary homes cost $5 and can be purchased at the courthouse on Market Street on Saturday morning. The houses on the tour range from Federal to Gothic Revival to Tudor. President Sojka's house can be toured for free.

For those who don't mind driving a bit, the Peter J. McGovern Little League Museum is located in Williamsport on Route 15N. It features batting and pitching cages, World Series highlights, and the history of Little League and its famous players. It is open from 9 a.m.–5 p.m. on Saturday and from 12–5 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $4 for adults and $1 for children ages 5–13.

Reptiland is located ten miles north on Route 15 and specializes in all kinds of snakes, lizards, exotic birds, tortoises, alligators, and crocodiles. On Saturday, there are "touch and hold" programs at 10 a.m., and 12, 2, and 4 p.m. To see this collection of cobras, iguanas, pythons, and other reptiles, it costs $6 for those over 12, and $3 for those under 12. On the way there, be sure to stop at the Purity Candy Company's factory store. You can watch the candy being made and buy enough of it to give yourself a tummyache. The factorystore is located on Route 15 in Allenwood.

In Liverpool, there is the Hunter's Valley Winery. Here, you can take a tour of the vineyards and learn about the winemaking process. You can also sample a variety of wines. They are supposedly superb. The best way to get there is to take Route 15S to Sunbury, catch 147S and take the ferryboat ride across the Susquehanna in Millersburg, a quaint Victorian town. From the ferry, take Route 104 towards Penns Creek. The winery is two and a half miles north on Heister Valley Road. The trip takes 45 minutes.

With the beautifully-colored leaves and countryside right at your doorstep, why not pack a picnic? R.B. Winter, 20 minutes away on Route 192W is a state park which has hiking trails and grills to cook on. Rickett's Glen has hiking trails which run along over a dozen waterfalls. There are also picnic areas in this state park, an hour away, past Bloomsburg. The local grocery stores on Route 15 have tasty delis for picnic food, as does our own Bison. Kentucky Fried Chicken is always a good standby.

If you're not tired by Sunday, Amish watching is an option. Unique to Pennsylvania, these people who don't believe in automobiles or electricity, can be spotted on Route 45W near Mifflinburg. They are typically on their way to or from their all day religious services.

My mom and I sampled the delicious whole wheat pizza at Walnut Acres when we had lunch at the headquarters/plant.

Sample the organic food of Walnut Acres

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

This Saturday why not visit and have lunch at the headquarters of the largest organic food catalog in the country? Walnut Acres, which also specializes in "health food," is located only 20 minutes away from Bucknell.

Paul and Betty Keene founded this chemically-free farm in 1946. Their first product, an apple butter called "Apple Essence," sold well locally and pleased a writer from The New York Times. Soon customers were calling from out of state. Now Walnut Acre products are in such high demand that they cannot supply them all from the original farm, so they also use produce from other chemical-free farms from across the country.

Today, from Texas to Vermont, customers order the company's homemade breads and fresh peanut butter. Here in central Pennsylvania, customers can just drive over to the store and make their own selections. New items can be sampled for lunch at the little restaurant area of the store.

The restaurant, which serves lunch from 11 a.m. – 2 p.m., specializes in whole wheat pizza, a nutritious soup of the day, vegetable burgers, pita sandwiches, carrot juice, and organic soft drinks. Cookies and muffins are also available. All items are homemade and homegrown.

In the store, all kinds of goodies from homemade mushroom-flavored pasta to blueberry syrup can be purchased. Posters depicting such things as herbs used for cooking and perennials as well as "earthy" tee-shirts can be found. There is also a section filled with natural soaps, shampoos, and fragances.

The store is open on Saturday from 9 a.m.– 5 p.m. Walnut Acres is located on Route 104 just before Penn's Creek. Take Route 45 west to Mifflinburg to catch Route 104.

On the way to or from Walnut Acres, there is also a pottery shop owned and run by artist Bill Lynch. His original works attract customers from across the state and surrounding ones. His shop, which is housed in an old mill, is also located on Route 104.

Free dinner weekend—the best places for parents to take you

BY TRAVIS ELLIOTT AND LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writers

Fine dining

In close proximity to campus, The Lewisburg Hotel (Downtown Lewisburg) is one of the more popular Parents' Weekend stops. The dining room is nothing short of classy and so are the prices. We strongly recommend this one, but make your reservations early and be prepared to pay for first-class.

Tedd's Landing, across from K-Mart in Shamokin Dam, must rank as the second most popular place to drag your parents for dinner. Fish is one of their top priorities, but they also do beef, chicken, and pasta. Reservations are a must!

The Pine Barn Inn (Danville) is strictly white tablecloth. The filet mignon is good, and they also have a diverse menu.

If you find yourself in Muncy, you might want to sample the cuisine of The McCarty House. The colonial atmosphere is accented by an antique store located in the rear. Unlike colonial times, however, The McCarty House does not offer grog, but their water isn't bad.

The Marina (Northumberland) is the sole seafood restaurant that we know of in the area. Their seafood is fresh and well prepared, and their other dishes are terrific as well.

The Temperance House (North Second Street, Lewisburg) specializes in what was perhaps the best prime rib ever tasted in this part of the state. Unfortunately, it disappeared from their menu, and we do not know if it has returned yet. Their seafood and steak plates are adequate but not spectacular. When making reservations, be sure to request the dining room to avoid being pigeonholed in the basement.

Williamsport, home of the renowned Peter Hurdic House, is but a mere thirty minutes north of Lewisburg. While we have not personally experienced the Hurdic legend, rumor has it that it is absolutely elegant and well worth the drive. Bring your wallet (or your 'rents') and your appetite.

French

The Lewisburg Inn (Market Street, Lewisburg) is the tops. Fans of fine French cuisine will not be disappointed. Their award-winning wine list provides over three hundred selections. The atmosphere is elegant, yet homey. The average plate runs $22 and includes appetizer and dessert. At that price it is a true bargain, so make your reservations early!

Italian

Tag's Grille (Williamsport) is an inexpensive, informal dinerette with superb homemade Italian cuisine. It is hard to find, but it is worth the search if you like a good Italian bargain.

Ghezzi's (Route 60, Sunbury) has excellent Italian fare as well.

Chinese

Lung Fung (Route 15, Shamokin Dam) offers a full list of Chinese specialties which include spicy dishes. The decor, although Chinese, is, none the less, far from elegant. Prices are average. It is the best we know of in the area, but that is not saying much.

Yung Tin Restaurant (Route 15, Ames Plaza, Lewisburg) offers mediocre Chinese cuisine at reasonable prices.

Peking Gardens (Route 15, Lewisburg) has a Western-style interior which is the perfect prelude to the Western-style Chinese cuisine they serve. If you enjoy true Chinese food, this is one to miss.

American Grills

BJ's, A Place for Ribs (Danville and Selinsgrove) serves fabulous barbecued ribs and chicken dishes in a relaxing, casual atmosphere. It is also a popular watering hole among college students, possibly because it offers Yeungling drafts at an incredibly low price (Pennsylvania law prohibits us from disclosing the exact amount; this is what Harrisburg legislators term, freedom of speech.) Beef fans should try their Black Angus cuts.

Harry's Grille (20 West Main Street, Bloomsburg) provides a plethora of beef, chicken and seafood entreés in a relaxed dining atmosphere with just the right touch of class. It is perhaps overpriced, but nonetheless noteworthy.

Front Street Station (Northumberland) offers a railway atmosphere along with beef, chicken, seafood, and pasta dishes. The food is generally mediocre, and the selection is limited. If you are really thirsty, we recommend their "Derailer" (but we don't recommend driving afterwards). On Wednesdays and Fridays, the Station offers a variety of Cajun dishes.

Other than McDonald's, The Bull Run Inn (Lewisburg) is the only place in town that we know of to get fajitas. They also offer sandwiches, ribs, and chicken, and their appetizers are the perfect accompaniment to a cold draft. If you want a glimpse of the most popular bar among Bucknellians, this is the place.

Rusty's (Lewisburg) menu includes numerous affordable and tasty sandwiches, pasta dishes, seafood, steak, and chicken dishes. Rusty's provides a reasonable meal within walking distance from campus and downtown Lewisburg.

Passengers board the train here to tour the Susquehanna Valley.

Take a scenic train ride

BY DEB MANASSE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

As another Parents' Weekend approaches, the inevitable question of how to entertain your family before the traditional dinner and cultural event, once again becomes an issue. While parents are generally suckers for any activity you are able to dream up, several semesters worth of trips to the Country Cupboard can tend to get a bit monotonous. So, if you want to try something a little bit different this year, why not take a train ride through West Shore Excursions?

The train makes two one and a half hour trips on Saturday, leaving at 11:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. The Saturday excursions, known as the Susquehanna special, begin with a ride through downtown Victorian Lewisburg. The train then runs past Bucknell before winding its way along the Susquehanna River and the cliffs of the Buffalo Mountains to the village of Winfield before its return to the station.

Two different excursions are available on Sunday. The Susquehanna Special runs at 4 p.m. At 1 p.m., a two and a half hour ride called the Buffalo Valley Limited runs. This longer trip begins in north Lewisburg and continues past the Lewisburg Industrial Park and Brookpark Farm. It then takes its passengers through the Amish and Mennonite country of the Buffalo Valley, through the village of Vicksburg and on to Mifflinburg before returning.

Both train trips board at Delta Place station, two miles north of Lewisburg, near the Country Cupboard complex on Route 15. Prices are, for the Susquehanna Special, $5 for adults, $4 for seniors over 60, and $3 for children ages 3-12. Buffalo Valley Limited prices are $6.50 for adults, $5.50 for seniors, and $4.00 for children.

So this Parents' Weekend, instead of settling for the usual standbys, why not take your parents and yourself on a trip around your "home away from home."

Tag's Grille in Williamsport is supposed to have perhaps the best Italian food in all of north-central Pennsylvania. Unfortunately, we never found out because they are closed on Mondays. In a frantic search for another food Shangri-La, we stumbled across a little Greek eatery, The Olive Tree.

Although there were no patrons present, we decided to take our chances after scrutinizing the menu. Once inside, we found the atmosphere to be cheesy, yet romantic. The corner diner had been converted into an ethnic paradise by white Christmas lights, plastic grapes dangling from the latticed ceiling, and fake fish trapped in cheap netting on the wall.

Sophia, the proprietress and our most gracious hostess, led us past the tempting bakery case to the window table with an incredible view of downtown Williamsport (if any view of downtown Williamsport could be described as incredible). After lighting our table lantern, Sophia went home with the rest of the family, leaving a single employee to wait tables, cook, and do the dishes. Not surprisingly, the service was not speedy.

The food, however, was delightful and unique. The meal began with an assortment of perogies and kreatopita, both of which were greasy and delicious. Never having sampled Greek cuisine, Laura went with the safe dish, Grecian chicken with garlic ($10.99), while Travis, being a bit more daring, ordered the Souvlaki Platter ($12.99). Both dinners came with a crisp Greek salad and bread. The salad consisted of Romaine lettuce and a variety of vegetables sprinkled with feta cheese and garnished with Greek olives; it left us wanting seconds.

The Grecian chicken breast was marinated and grilled to seal in The Olive Tree's own spicy special flavor and was coupled with equally tasty rice. The Souvlaki consisted of two skewers of marinated shish-ka-bob highlighted by a tangy yogurt sauce. The Souvlaki was delicious, but paled in comparison to the chicken.

Eager to try some of the homemade bakery goods, Travis requested the baklava, a sweet mixture of honey and nuts embedded in filo pastry. Sophia's baklava truly tickled the taste buds. Meanwhile, Laura went for the chocolate-covered cherry chocolate log, and if that sounds redundant, it was. This was enough chocolate to satisfy the fiercest chocoholic craving.

The Olive Tree also has an extensive take-out menu which includes pizza exotica, sandwiches, and hoagies (which are rightly called subs) in addition to their Greek specialties. Sophia's place registered three-and-a-half out of five on our Bisonometer. As for Tag's, stay tuned to this column for further updates (i.e. are they ever open?).

It's a family bonding type of weekend

Whether you're excited or nervous, be your real self, actually communicate, and have fun!

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Is your most recent memory of your parents one of arguing over your summer curfew? Or is it of them sadly leaving you at the curb of your dorm, making you feel lonelier than you'd ever imagined being? As Parents' Weekend arrives, many old, tucked away emotions resurface, leaving us all, including our families, with a mixture of feelings.

While most students are genuinely excited to see their families, it is due to a variety of reasons. Some, like Renee Cannon '95 from Louisiana, have not seen their parents since the end of August. Although she says, "I haven't really been homesick," she is still "really excited." What Cannon is looking forward to the most is talking about the pressure here and finding out what's going on at home.

According to Dr. Rosaria Gabriele, assistant director of Psychological Services, "It is harder for students with families from farther away." And no matter where you are from, she says, "those with a supportive, close-knit family feel lonely for a long time." Dr. Gabriele often hears from students that they don't have anyplace where they feel that they can be themselves. She observes, "At home they could let all their emotions show. Here they feel as though they have to put on a happy face all the time."

Parents' Weekend serves as a great opportunity to sit down—in their hotel room, over dinner, on a bench in the quad, or over a game of golf—and really talk to your family. Let them know what you like about your professors, maybe why you're not doing well in a course. Tell them what you really do on weekends and whether or not you actually enjoy it or wish that you felt you had other options. Express your true desires for your future or your lack of plans. Most of all be yourself.

Allison Zimmerman '93 says of her parents, "They enjoy seeing what really goes on." Remember that you have lived at home and have seen basically what your family does everyday. They, however, have not lived with you at college and are curious about your new life without them.

Surprisingly, you and your family may get along better now than you did while living at home. Daniel Hutta '94 says, "My parents have always been lenient, but now we have a more adult-like relationship. Also, since I'm not at home, we don't get on each other's nerves as much."

Students who have divorced parents may also find their parental relationships eased now that they live on neutral territory. Now parent will not necessarily have to share the child since there are two Parents' Weekends. One parent can visit in the Fall and the other in the Spring.

While this two-day opportunity to visit is looked forward to by many, some students will always be apprehensive about spending this much "quality time" with their family in front of their peers. Reminds Dr. Gabriele, "Be willing to show gratefulness." Even if you have a difficult time talking to your parents, at least tell them thank you for sending you here. Let them know that you appreciate their support.

Says Dave Koerner '92, "Before I came here, I didn't know how much my parents did do. Now I'm on my own and have to do it all myself."

Show your parents that you're grateful, try to communicate, and most of all, have fun together.

The Collegiate Perspective (and other fairy tales)

Peter Lalos

And now, let's take a look at the insider's guide to Bucknell University's Parents' Weekend 1991:

• Friday, 8 a.m. – 4 p.m.: Classes are open to all parents who want to join their sons and daughters in their lecture... Especially if they aim to ensure that their offspring will offer absolutely nothing to the class discussion that day and keep a low profile due to extreme self-consciousness.

• Friday, 11 a.m. – 10 p.m., and Saturday, 8:30 a.m. – 2 p.m.: Registration in Walls Lounge. Parents are expected to check in all firearms with the University before meeting with their students to talk about semester grades.

• Saturday, 11 a.m. – noon: President Sojka's address to parents in Rooke Chapel. Immediately following the address, parents are invited to take advantage of the appropriate settings and join the president in a group prayer for an endowment increase for the next academic year.

• Saturday, noon – 3 p.m.: All-University picnic and carnival, Swartz Field (in case of rain, all activities will be held in the Fieldhouse)—Ha! Like we ever really end up needing a fail-safe plan due to precipitation in the Susquehanna Valley. Worrywarts.

• I'd like to take a moment, if you will, and reflect on the amount of wealth that will accumulate on this campus over the next two days. One of these years, I really think we should just gather up all of the sports cars, clothing, and jewelry on University grounds during this weekend, donate it to the government, and pay off the national debt. We'd be famous!

• Orphaned students, read my lips: DON'T BE A MARTYR. Take up the friend who asks you out to dinner with his/her family. After all, isn't free, real food worth telling them your major, grade point average, religion, whether you drool in your sleep, etc?

• Saturday, 10 a.m. – 11 a.m.: Creating Leaders and Scholars: Making the Most of Your Bucknell Experience, Gallery Theatre, Langone Center. A panel of B.U. students will present their own out-of-the-classroom experiences while at the University... Although, there are certain stories that we should probably spare our parents, yes? Maybe this isn't such a good idea, here.

• Saturday, 10 a.m. – 2 p.m.: Mile of Quarters, Langone Center Mall. As you walk through, please donate your loose change to benefit Students Against Multiple Sclerosis. If, however, your change is not loose—for example, if it is tightly strapped down under your armpit with heavy duty electric tape—keep it. SAMS doesn't want it that badly.

• Saturday, 2:30 p.m.: Men's soccer vs. Robert Morris. Yeah, yeah, I know what you're saying... "Oh, let's line up a cream puff opponent for Parents Weekend." But let me tell you something: This Robert Morris guy is good. Experts predict that he's going to be on the Olympic team if we qualify for the '92 games.

• Sunday, 8:30 a.m. and 4:00 p.m.: Catholic Mass at Rooke Chapel. Parents and students alike are invited to view the big, amorphous, jelly-like Catholic blob that we've all come to know and love over the years at Bucknell. I mean, that is what they are referring to when they say "mass," right?

Is this camera on? HI, MA!

Professor and son publish textbook

BY SEAN MCCARTHY
Bucknellian Staff Writer

When Richard C. McGinnis, associate professor of civil engineering, first introduced his comprehensive student manual "Learning Cadkey," he was proud not only because it was a magnificent achievement, but also because the book was co-authored by his 17-year old son. Richard McGinnis, Jr. is still in high school and currently the youngest author in the college division of McGraw Hill. He has spent the last three years working with his father on the college-level text.

Cadkey is an advanced computer-aided design program that is available for several different computers. At Bucknell, it is used on the IBM's by many different disciplines of engineers. It is first introduced to students in the freshman course "Exploring Engineering" as a sample engineering lab. McGinnis felt that the texts that are currently available aren't very clear and tend to be too wordy. He wanted to create a manual that was user-friendly and interesting at the same time. For insight and help in preparing the manual, he enlisted the help of his son.

McGinnis junior grew up with computers all around him. "Some of my babysitters were students of my father and I learned about computers while they were watching me," he says. In fact, he used to accompany his father to work and would fool around with computers while his father taught. However, it wasn't until age eight that he actually sat down and started learning how to use one. At this age he began to play computer games and teach himself the BASIC computer language. Within a year, McGinnis was extremely adept at programming.

When he was a sophomore in high school, his father approached him with his idea and asked for his help, and the rest is in publication. The two would take turns writing, editing, and drawing diagrams for the manual. Working together was difficult since McGinnis Jr. went to high school in NJ at the Peddie School. They had to ship the material back and forth through the mail while school was in session.

This joint project offered many benefits to both father and son. "I learned to listen to my son, and we gained a great deal of mutual respect," the senior McGinnis says.

On the other side, McGinnis Jr. felt that his viewpoint gave his father an idea about how students would react to the manual. "My father's vantage point caused him to feel certain concepts were easier to grasp than I felt they were from a student point of view," he adds.

Now that the project is done, the two feel they have become closer through the experience. They have also produced the most up-to-date text for the Cadkey program and as the son points out, it is fairly easy to use and understand—"it holds your hand and provides step-by-step instructions and diagrams leading the student to the finished project."

In terms of future plans, the two may eventually reunite to work on a teacher's manual for Cadkey, but right now, the younger McGinnis has to concentrate on getting into college. He hopes that his publishing of a college textbook will help him get accepted. Even though he has spent so much time around computers, he plans to major in political science, industrial engineering, or economics.

Even today he spends some three hours a day on the computer, but that isn't all he enjoys doing. In what spare time he has McGinnis Jr. enjoys basketball and sailing.

Running Bison compete against Top 20

Wuchenich '92 leads men's cross-country squad to third place finish against nation's top teams; Women travel to Penn State

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Not many Bucknell athletes have had the chance to prove themselves amongst the nation's elite. The men's cross country team had just such an opportunity last weekend at the Iowa State Cross Country Classic.

The then-22nd ranked Bison hopped a jet to the cornfields to compete against second-ranked Iowa State, 14th-ranked Texas, #18 Kansas, Wichita State, Minnesota, Georgia Tech, and Illinios State. In order to be succe :ful at such a high level, it is crucial to be at your best when challenged. Unfortunatly for Bucknell, not everybody responded.

"We ran well, but not great. You have to run great to beat the top teams," reflected Head Coach Art Gulden. "You're not going to beat Kansas and Texas just by showing up. You have to be mentally focused and we weren't."

One needs only to glance at the outstanding academic achievements of the top Bison runners for any possible non-running focal points, such as law and medical school applications. Or perhaps it was having to answer the question, "Where is Bucknell?" numerous times.

However, the Bison's outstanding season and strong third-place finish at the meet did manage to put Lewisburg securely on the cross country map. The host Cyclones held their top two runners out of the competition and finished fourth. The Texas Longhorns and Kansas Jayhawks captured the top two spots, respectively.

Wichita State and Illinois State gracefully finished behind their host.

The last couple of teams to cross the finish line probably weren't focused either.

> "We ran well, but not great. You have to run great to beat the top teams."
> — Art Gulden
> Cross Country head coach

Minnesota had its mind on the World Series and Georgia Tech was concerned about having to replace Kenny Anderson on the basketball court. Both understandable, but not nearly as noble as visions of the court room or operating table.

Individually for the Bison harriers, Tom Wuchenich '92 ran one of his best races, finishing 11th with a time of 25:43. Following closely behind on the five-mile course was teammate Matt Deardorff '92. Bob Kelly '92, Jeff Loomis '92, and Tom Eagleson '93 all placed among the top 30. Judd Jarden '93 and Jim Farrer '93 rounded out Bucknell's scoring crop, both with top-40 finishes.

With its dual-meet season concluded with a perfect 8—0 mark and a currant national ranking of 23, Bucknell now must focus on the Patriot League Championships and districts. Having faced the caliber opponents that last weekend's trip provided, the team should be ready.

"Now they're aware of what we have to do," concluded Gulden. "We belong up there [on the national level], we just weren't focused."

No team in the Patriot League should force the Bison to break a sweat. However, as the contenders begin to weed out the pretenders, focus will once again become a key ingredient for national advancement.

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Not only did Penn State have the honor of hosting the Rutgers Scarlet Knights in football, but the Lady Lions cross country team invited ten other cross country teams to Happy Valley to partake in their homecoming festivities.

Among the eleven competing teams were the Bucknell Lady Bison. North Carolina, Cornell, Nebraska, Michigan, UPenn, Texas, Brown, Youngstown, and Clarion rounded out a field that Head Coach Art Gulden referred to as "possibly better than the men's meet." Joe Paterno would never hear of welcoming any form of competition to State College for homecoming.

North Carolina and Cornell finished one-two, while the host earned bronze medal honors. The Bucknell women, who placed ninth, found themselves not quite on par with the national powers. This was not due to a lack of effort. "I think some of them tried too hard," commented Gulden.

Kristin Opdyke '93 was the top Bucknell runner of the afternoon, placing 29th with a time of 18:17. Gina Abraham '93, Kathy Wurster '94, and Kris Deardorff '93 managed to traverse the 3.1 mile course ahead of teammates Becky Tobin '95, Jessica Wilhelm '95, and Beth Muehl '94.

If this experience can be viewed positively, it will give the Lady Bison a leg up on the rest of their Patriot League members come Championships.

"No one in our league has run against these people before," verified Gulden.

Fordham, if healthy, is expected to claim top honors. Should the Lady Rams falter, the Lady Bison could seize the opportunity to become champions.

Field hockey drops pair, falls to 7–7

BY NATHAN WOLAVER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell field hockey team lost two emotional games this week following three consecutive shut-outs. Injuries and lack of mental intensity kept the Lady Bisons from playing to its potential.

On Saturday, the team played C.W. Post on Long Island. After three victories, the team lost a game it should have won. The Lady Bison, usually renowned for their tenacious play, came out flat against their opponent. Yielding no goals in the past six halves of play, the Bucknell defense was jumped upon for two by C.W. Post.

"We lacked confidence in ourselves and in our teammates," commented Coach Jen Averill. "We were beaten by ourselves 100 percent."

The next game was played against Drexel University. Unlike the game against C.W. Post, Bucknell came out fired up and opened up a 1–0 lead in the first half. A problem for the team in the past has been its inability to sustain its intensity throughout the entire game.

Averill addressed this problem in the locker room. "You won the first half, now get out there and see if you can win the second," she told them. Unfortunately, a pumped-up Drexel team was able to tie up the score and send the game into overtime. The game was won on a scramble in front of the net in which one of the Drexel forwards jumped on the ball and fired it in for the 2–1 win. "You have to give the Drexel coach credit for the way those kids played out there today. I wish I knew what she was feeding them to get them diving on the ball like that." said a fustrated Averill.

The two losses this week evened the team's record to 7–7. With only four games left in the season, the Lady Bison are looking for their first season over .500 since Jen Averill began coaching three years ago. It's been a long road taking the team to the level of competitiveness it's at now. The team played very strongly against its Patriot League opponents, including a 1–0 overtime loss to defending champs Lafayette. According to Averill, "If we have a positive mental frame going into any of these four games, we can win."

Averill has explained to the team that the next four games should be treated like the playoffs. The first of these four games is home against Georgetown on Sunday. Last year, a less competitive Bucknell squad was able to beat the Lady Hoyas of Georgetown. The Lady Bison will be looking for the continued outstanding play of Stephanie Carfley '93 who has been anchoring a front line plagued with injuries. Also returning to the team after suffering injuries is Laurie Blue '94, who has been a spark plug in the past.

Almira Baldwin '94 summed up the team's attitude: "We're going to play each game like it's our last because we want to end our year with a winning record."

For any of you out there who are watching the World Series, you know the importance of home field advantage. Unfortunately, the stands have been basically empty for the last few home games. Coach Averill pledges, "If 100 fans show up for Sunday's game I personally guarantee a win for the Lady Bison."

Men's soccer shut out by Pat foe Fordham, 1–0

BY ANDY LABOVITZ
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The hard-luck men's soccer team continued its disappointing season last week with two losses. The Bison were edged by Patriot League rival Fordham last Saturday 1–0, before falling to an inspired Delaware team here at Bucknell Wednesday night 5–1. Coach Craig Reynolds' team, currently in a severe slump, has lost five of its last six, dropping its record to 4–9, and 1–5 in the Patriot League.

When Bucknell traveled to Fordham to play the Rams, both teams were 1–4 in league play and basically eliminated from playoff contention.

However, a win was an important objective of both teams, as evidenced by the close, hard-fought game which ensued. The first half was scoreless, with each team having numerous opportunities to score but neither team being able to capitalize on them. The game remained scoreless until midway through the second half, when Tom Seifert of Fordham scored on a fumble in front of the Bison net for the only goal of the game. Fordham held off a late Bucknell surge and held on for the 1–0 victory. The Bison outshot the Rams 9–8 but could not manage a score. Goalkeeper Mark Wrigley '94 made four saves in the loss.

The Bison returned home to begin a three-game homestand by hosting the Fighting Blue Hens of Delaware.

Bucknell looked able to obtain a win over the Hens, who came into the game 2–12, but Delaware played like a team possessed, coming away with the 5–1 victory. Delaware opened the scoring less than 11 minutes into the game as the Hens' Cheyney Meadows onetimed a beautiful centering pass from Delaware leading scorer John Sellers. Alex Kogan '94 tied the game for the Bison four minutes later on a penalty kick after he was tripped in the Delaware goal box. A non-foul call

Crew team competes on Charles

BY JAMIE DIAFERIA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell crew team participated in the prestigious Head-of-the-Charles Regatta last weekend, and the trip to Boston was a success for the team as it proved to be competetive against a field of rowers that included teams from Harvard and U. Penn, as well as teams from Lithuania, Croatia, Russia, and Germany. The exact place-finishes of the team are not yet known.

Each year the Head-of-the-Charles weekend promises to be an exciting time for both competitors and spectators, as thousands of people line the river banks to view the roughly 18-minute race. This year there were an estimated 220,000 people in attendance, crowding both the the banks and bridges of the Charles River. Eight countries and 4,000 rowers participated in what was the 27th year of the race.

This year marked the first time that Bucknell sent two varsity boats to compete in the regatta. The men's lightweight team competed against such formidable teams as the Vesper Boat Club, Bachelors Barge Club, and Yale in what is termed the Lightweight Eights category. The Bucknell squad finished with a time of 17:59.1, for an unofficial finish of 33rd in a 36 team field. They did, however, edge out teams from Hofstra, the Potomac Boat Club, and Mexico.

Another first for the Bucknell team involved the regatta committee's decision to let the squad participate in the Championship Eights category of the race. This highly competitive, 43-team field featured many of the overseas teams. Bucknell ran into severe problems in this particular race due to the sinuous river pattern and its seven narrow bridges. As the team approached one of these bridges, it realized that it was on the verge of colliding with the boats from Notre Dame and Peterborough. The three boats wedged together under the bridge, and members of the teams were forced to push off each other to break free. The crash actually inspired the Bucknell squad, according to team member Steve Kish '93. "The crash really made us realize what we were doing," he said. "We started off kind of slow, and it got us pumped-up." The time and place-finish for the team were not available.

The heavyweight crew squad competed in the Championship Eights category at the Head-of-the-Charles Regatta last weekend.

The race was a definite highlight for all of the members of the Bison team. The Head-of-the-Charles race is known throughout the world as one of the most exciting and competitive regattas. As Kish remarked, "Being there with such amazing crews made us nervous. Unless we race as alumni, this really is the biggest race of our lives."

Bucknell still has several races left this season, including one in Occoquan, Virginia, and another in Philadelphia. The race on the Charles river should prove to be a motivating force for these upcoming regattas, as the Bison optimistically look forward to next season.

Intramurals finish quarter with playoffs

BY SCOTT ALBRIGHT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

While most sports enthusiasts are reading this section and noticing some of the amazing achievements some of our Bucknell varsity athletes are accomplishing, they are also probably having dreams of doing the same thing themselves one day. But let's face it: These people most likely neither have the talent nor ambition to compete on the Division I level and that leaves only one avenue for them to satisfy their desire for competitive, organized sports here at Bucknell: intramurals.

And once again, while following the "Pangburn point system," the first quarter "season" of intramurals has officially concluded with the following results:

In soccer, TKE emerged victorious in an exciting championship game over KDR that survived two-five minute overtimes knotted up in a 1-1 tie, and had to be eventually decided by a best-of-five shootout. The shootout pitted KDR goalie Scott Brown '93 against former varsity standout Rob Gazzola '92 for TKE in a tense finish to a well-played game for both teams.

KDR did, however, win the handball tournament over the Lambda Chi squad of "Handyman."

In the obstacle course competition, KDR shared first place with DU with a high score of 35 points. The Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) placed second with 32 points while Fiji took third with 30 points and LCA placed fourth with 27 points.

Howie Fetzer '93 of DU and Mike Mascola '93 of KDR tied for first with 47.5 points in the "Ironman," which involves a quarter-mile swim, an eight- mile bike ride, a two-mile run and two minutes each of sit-ups, push-ups and pull-ups. Todd Vincent '92 came in second for Lambda Chi with 41 points, Russ Brink '93 of Fiji took third with 38 points, and Chris Zacharda '93 of SAE placed fourth with 34 points.

And finally, in the 3.2-mile cross country run, Christopher Fink '93 of FCA came in first with a time of 17:23, Vincent placed second with a time of 18:23, and John Kerner '95, running as an independent, took third with a finish of 18:41. With the first-place finisher gaining 15 points, the second place finisher 14 points and so on (out of 15 total place finishers), KDR had the highest tally overall with 39 points, LCA came in at a close second with 38 points, and Chi Phi finished in third place overall with a total of 27 points.

For you table tennis fanatics out there, no, the statistics were not purposely omitted from this article. The event was postponed until next quarter.

committed by the Blue Hens partially led to their second goal. Kogan was tripped without being called and Delaware scored on the ensuing possession as Kogan and others protested strenuously to the referee. This may have caused a lapse in concentration, as Delaware came back 90 seconds later to score its third goal.

The Bison took this 3-1 deficit into halftime, determined to change the course of the game. This was not to be, however, as Delaware scored two goals 30 seconds apart ten minutes into the second half to put away the game.

Wrigley, who was peppered with shots, made five saves before being replaced midway through the second half by Chris Wyszynski '95, allowing the freshman to see some rare playing time.

Wyszynski made two saves of his own. Bucknell was outshot by the slimmest of margins, 14-13, but that didn't show in the final score, as Delaware was able to manufacture better opportunities and capitalize on them.

The Bison have two games this week, hosting Robert Morris Saturday, at 2:30 p.m., and Penn State on Wednesday, at 7:00 p.m.

A lot of campus rapes start here.

Whenever there's drinking on campus, things can get out of hand. Sadly, we're not the only campus rapes involve alcohol. But you should know that under any circumstances, sex without the other person's consent is considered rape. A felony, punishable by prison. And a thing not to choose.

That's why, when so many guys get to know each other, it helps a lot. You see, a little warning about rape can save you from a big problem, later.

Rugby finishes with win over Ship

BY MITCH BENTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

In the fading afterglow of a Lewisburg sunset, Bucknell's men's rugby club finished its fall season by defeating conference foe Shippensburg, 20–9, last Friday. The victory left the All-Blacks with an overall 3–2 record, tying them for third in the conference standings.

The match, which was switched from Saturday in order to accommodate the visitors' campus commitments, began as a defensive struggle that has become a trademark of the Bucknell squad. Neither goal line was crossed until late in the first period when the All-Black's fullback, Howie Fetzer '93, punted the ball out of his own half and then raced the length of the field, beating the defender to both the ball and the try line. Unfortunately the junior was not able to convert the kick after score and the score stood at 4–0, were it remained through the half.

A number of substitutions made at halftime appeared to rejuvenate the sluggish squad, and Bucknell came out from the intermission with both new attitudes and results. The All-Blacks drove Ship deep into their territory but looked to have missed their opportunity when the referee awarded the defenders a scrum. But Bucknell again won control of the ball and Emre Sapci '95 broke through the defender for the score. Sappci then split the uprights on the ensuing kick and gave the squad a 10–0 lead.

Soon after that the All-Blacks struck again as captain Mark Spina '92 took a pass on the wing and completed a remarkable sprint down the sideline, culminating in a headfirst dive past a pair of defenders into the try zone. The points after successfully added, Bucknell held a very commanding 16–0 lead.

Craig Bitter—The Bucknellian
Scott Sergeant '95 and Matt Cooper '94 reach for the ball during a line out earlier this season in action against East Stroudsburg. The All-Blacks finished their season with a 20–9 win over Shippensburg.

Although the defense did lapse for a moment allowing a Shippensburg score on a penalty kick, the All-Blacks wasted no time in striking back. The Bucknell forwards drove the ball and defenders deep into their half before forcing yet another scrum down. Bucknell hooker Stuart Steyn '94 won possession from his Ship counterpart and fed the ball to scrum half Bob Moore '94, who single-handedly broke through a number of defenders and placed the ball down for Bucknell's final score.

A late Shippensburg rally led to a try of their own and the conversion left the final score at 20–9. The win was the second consecutive for Bucknell after their very disappointing conference start. The squad defeated Franklin and Marshall, 6–3, on Homecoming, October 5.

When asked afterwards about both the match and the season, Spina stated, "Just as we have all year, we started slowly but came on strong, just like our season. We lost a pair of games that we definitely should have won and missed the playoffs, but I'm happy that the team rebounded and was able to finish the year with a couple of wins. It gives us a good base to build our spring season on."

The club will be off over the winter and will start play again next March.

Bison Afield

BY MIKE CORELLI

October 11-16, 1991—Ontario, Canada. I had been tracking this behemoth animal for three icy days in upper Ontario, Canada. He had led me through some of the harshest weather and terrain I thought I was capable of surviving. Indeed, there was much question as to whether I was surviving. For the majority of the third day I had little sensation outside of my torso and it was strictly from memory and not feel that I moved my snow-shoed feet. It intrigued and angered me a great deal that this moose, which I had yet to see since picking up his trail, was clearly undaunted by this cruel temperature.

The snow was steadily pelting me and hindering my efforts by concealing tracks; however, thanks to my bloodhound-like tracking techniques, I was managing to stay with him. Indeed, when I could see the tracks they were more than impressive: Each hoof print was about the size of 20 or so lemmings, in a formation suitable to resemble a hoof, of course.

When I finally came face to muzzle with this trophy animal my heart seemed to be ready to explode, it was beating so fast. This moose stood seven feet tall from the ground to the top of his shoulders when standing on all fours. He had the kind of rack that seemed to say, "Hey, don't mess with these." Nevertheless it is a fortunate thing for me that when terrified beyond comprehension the adrenalin kicks in and fingers, which five seconds ago would have snapped off if used, miraculously became limber. The moose began to charge me at a speed more than impressive considering the girth of the animal. As I raised my bow and drew my arrow, I realized I was only kidding myself using this primitive weapon against an enraged beast. It was then that I drew my .44 magnum and proceeded to unload the chamber on the moose. He went down, but to my surprise, and extreme displeasure, he jumped up again and circled for another attack. Knowing well I didn't have time to reload the gun, I instead broke for the nearest tree, which I climbed like it was my job. The moose, at this point, didn't seem to care what obstacle was in his way. He ran right at and through the 18 inch-thick tree I was in like it wasn't even there. I was slightly flustered as I hit the ground, but I drew my arrow and buried it right in his chest. I immediately ran over to the moose who was now staggering and jumped onto his back, grappled onto his antlers and twisted, breaking his neck.

I spent the next two days carrying the two-ton carcass on my back, as I returned to civilization. Unfortunately my camera was extra weight which I had to lose on the return trip, and the carcass was stolen from me at a small gold mining town where I stopped, so I am afraid I don't have any pictures for you all. Take it easy and don't accept any wooden nickles.

David Berardinelli '93

Football's starting wide receiver David Berardinelli '93 has been named The Bucknellian's Athlete of the Week.

The junior's two catches last weekend gave him a total of 31 for the season, by far the Bison's leader in receptions. His one-game career high totals of eight catches and 169 yards moved him into the national rankings in both categories. Those totals were team-season marks and personal career highs and the yardage was the fifth-highest single-game total in Bucknell history.

Often one of the Bison's few bright spots in an otherwise disappointing season, Berardinelli is also an outstanding student. He is a political sceince/history major with a 3.9 G.P.A. He was a GTE/CoSIDA Academic All-District selection last year.

V-ball notches first-ever league win

BY DON REINHART
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's volleyball team picked up its first ever Patriot League victory against Lehigh last weekend. In five games, the Bison defeated their conference opponents and earned their milestone victory, the first Bucknell women's volleyball Patriot League win since the league's creation in 1989.

The October 18 and 19 action took place in Annapolis, MD where Navy hosted two Bucknell matches. In their first contest, the Bison fell short to Lafayette, 15-9, 11-15, 15-6, 15-8. The team found difficulty handling the Lafayette serve, committing 31 reception errors and playing a very inconsistent game. Kathleen Sullivan '92 led the team in kills, tallying 12, while Laura Spinney '95 chalked up nine digs on defense. Meghan Kinney '93, also played tough defense with nine solo blocks at the net.

In what Coach Cindy Opalski saw as perhaps the best showing of her team this season, Bucknell dropped Lehigh, 13-15,9-15,15-1,17-16,15-12, for its first conference win. Kara Forosisky '92 dominated the net, killing 16 balls while committing no errors. Sullivan again showed her prowess on offense by accumulating ten kills. Aubrey Schneggenburger '95 held the defense together with 10 digs as teammates Forosisky and Sarah Mesaros '93 each contributed nine digs. After losing the first two games, the Bison came back and destroyed Lehigh in the third game with a 14 point spread and continued to dominate the match throughout the remaining two games.

Opalski was extremely pleased with her team's efforts during the match. In previous contests, Bucknell showed a lack of mental toughness and confidence. However, against Lehigh, the Bison played with the determination which allowed them to rally from a two game deficit and take the match. Opalski saw her team perform to its optimum level, a feat with which it struggled earlier. Opalski added, "That was the best match we have played all season long, not because we won but because we played up to our potential."

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian
Freshman player Heide Dawson bumps the ball to the front line during action at Bucknell's own Homecoming Tournament earlier this year. The Lady Bison won their first league game this week.

But the Bison could not maintain their momentum, as their consistency again fell, losing to undefeated Metro-Atlantic Conference power LaSalle. On Wednesday, Bucknell dropped the four game match, 15-10, 10-15, 15-10, 15-7, in Philadelphia. The team again showed a weakness against the serve, committing 35 reception errors. Opalski commented, "The serve has been our nemesis. It's a problem with our ability to pass the ball under pressure."

Sullivan was the lone offensive standout with eight kills. She also played defense well at the net, blocking three balls. In addition, Dee Scinta '92 played some hard-nosed defense with nine digs, but it was not enough to stop the hard-hitting Explorers, who played the ball well throughout the match.

According to Oplaski, with only four matches left in their "up and down" regular season, the Bison are still looking for an individual to take control on the court. However, the coach is very optimistic and confident in her team's ability. This weekend the Bison will face Patriot League opponents Fordham and Army where they hope to add two more wins to their 16-23 record. Opalski stated, "If we can bring our determination, our desire, and our guts to an all-time high, we're going to do well."

Football falls to undefeated Princeton

Ivy League leaders go to 5–0 with 31–7 victory. Bison (1–6) have weekend free

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell football team will receive a much-needed week off on Parent's Weekend. The Bison season has been plagued by injury and inconsistency and last week proved to be no different. Although the team had ended up on the losing side, it appeared that it had found its offense in the strong performance against Lafayette the week before.

The strong arm of Travis Kopp '95 had led the Bison as they came close to punching the ball into the end zone during the waning minutes of the fourth quarter. Despite the loss, Kopp looked as though he was ready to lead the Bison to bigger and better things. Unfortunately, it was not meant to be.

The first half of the Bison encounter with the Princeton Tigers was a regression from the previous week. The Bison received the kickoff, and two plays later they converted for a first down. It would be their first and last of the first half. On third and twelve from the Bucknell 33, Kopp was intercepted by Princeton's Kevin Wilson. The Tiger offense did not waste time capitalizing on the opportunity. After an offensive holding penalty, all-Ivy League receiver Michael Lerch made a terrific leaping catch on the right sideline for a gain of 20 yards. After a 16-yard completion to Ron Tufillaro, running back Steve Elias burst up the middle for 14 yards and a touchdown eluding three would-be Bison tacklers on the way. The Tigers never looked back.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Formally the Bison's starting quarterback, Jeff Kelly '92 has been moved to defense for next weekend's contest against Patriot League rival Colgate. Kelly started three games as the strong safety as a sophomore before being moved to quarterback.

The rest of the first half was nothing more than a display of every possible way to go three and out. In three more possessions during the first quarter, the Bison netted one yard in total offense. Punter John Toman '93 was leg-weary by the end of the quarter. The Bison defense, which has persevered through injuries and unenviable game situations all season, was again called upon to shoulder the load for the offense. After Princeton's initial score, it was up to the challenge.

The linebacking core led a gutsy defensive effort for the Bison. Co-captain John Spatafore '92 totalled seven tackles and a sack, and Hew Woodward '93 was in on nine tackles. As the offense continued its propensity to limit drives to three plays and a punt, the overworked defense managed to hold the Tigers to just the one touchdown through the game's first 25 minutes. However, with only 4:53 left on the clock, Princeton began a drive on its own 24.

Instead of trying to run the clock out and head to the locker room up seven, they took to the air. The first play of the drive was a thirty-yard completion from quarterback Ryan Roghair to Steve Elias. Having then established good field position, Princeton began its march. Additional completions of 10 and 21 yards moved the Tiger's to the two, where Roghair kept the ball and snuck in for the touchdown. The score, with just under two minutes remaining on the clock, had to dishearten the gritty Bison defense, as well as the whole team.

In many cases, football statistics can be all too misleading. This however, was not the case with at the end of the first half. The story of the first thirty minutes was that the Bison netted five yards in total offense. After a first down on the second play from scrimmage, the Bison had gone backwards for the rest of the half.

The second half didn't get any better. Michael Lerch returned the opening kickoff 54 yards and the Tigers set up shop at Bucknell's 25. Steve Elias completed a four play drive with an 11-yard run to give Princeton a 21—0 lead. In the rest of the third quarter, Princeton's defense continued to stuff the Bison offense, and the tired Bison defense was left to try and keep the game from getting worse. This proved to be too tall a task for the weary warriors. Princeton's next drive was a 13-play 59-yard touchdown drive that was so unspectacular only Bill Parcells would have appreciated it.

By the end of the third quarter, the Bison had added only eight yards in total offense and a second first down. Kopp, who had been so good the previous week, was completely ineffective.

Coach Maranzana decided to open the final quarter with Jeff Kelly '92 back at the helm. After Princeton had tacked on a field goal, Kelly began to move the Bison toward the Princeton goal line rather than away from it. Kelly led a Bison march from their own twenty to Princeton's 24 before he was intercepted by Mike Dykes. Despite the unfortunate conclusion to the drive, it did allow the defense a chance to rest and they subsequently held the Tigers to three yards and a punt.

Wide receiver David "Whitey" Berardenelli '93 leads the Bison in receptions and receiving yards on the year. Earlier in the season he cracked Bucknell's all-time single-game receiving list.

Starting at midfield this time, Kelly and the Bison would not be denied. Highlighted by a twenty-yard completion to Dave Berardinelli '92, the Bison marched 50 yards on 13 plays for their first score.

The drive was finalized by a three-yard pass by a scrambling Kelly to Joe Vargo '93. This would be the only Bison highlight and the game ended with a final of 31—7.

The bye week for the Bison could not come at a better time. In a season of inconsistency, it gives the Bison a chance to relax for a week and then get refocused. Though they are doomed to a losing record, the Bison will surely come back in two weeks and try to salvage a couple more wins out of a tough season.

W. polo earns third seed at MAC's

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Despite losing one game at Army last weekend, the Bucknell men's water polo team has landed an important third seed for the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championship Tournament. The upcoming MAC's are scheduled for the weekend of November 2nd, and the outcome will determine whether the Bison will move on to the challenging Eastern Intercollegiate League Championships.

Bucknell opened the tournament at Army with an 11–6 victory over Villanova on Saturday morning. The Bison uncharacteristically began the game with low intensity and fell behind 5–3 by the half. Co-captain Kevin Schroth '92 scored two of Bucknell's first half goals, and Scott Brizius '95, who saw ample playing time all weekend, netted the third.

The Bucknell men continued by picking up force throughout the second half and had established a lasting lead by 3:33 of the third quarter, behind two goals by co-captain Walter Kelly '92 and another by Dan Brown '92. Following a time-out by Villanova, Brizius scored yet another to bring the score to 7–5.

The Bison proceeded to open the fourth quarter with a three-goal surge to extend their lead to five. Schroth made his third successful attempt, followed by two from stand-out Sean Tierney '95, before Villanova answered with its sixth goal at 1:27. Finally, with 0:52 seconds left to play, A.J. Zottola '92 scored Bucknell's final point to end the game 11–6. Brown and Dan Killinger '92 both came up with four assists, and goalie John Bradbury '92 added 10 saves to help the Bison seal their victory.

Bucknell's second game, against Princeton, proved to be an imitation of their meeting two weeks ago, with the Bison again suffering a heartbreaking, one-goal defeat. Bucknell matched Princeton goal for goal throughout the first three quarters, playing to a 2–2 tie in the first, a 3–3 tie at the half, and a 5–5 tie after three.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Goaltender John Bradbury '92 scurries for position during action earlier this season. Bradbury and the Bison gained a third seed at the November 2nd MAC Tournament.

Kelly scored Bucknell's first point at 4:13 in the first period before Chris Retzler '93 took over offensively and went on to collect the next four Bison tallies through the third quarter.

Bucknell's downfall came early in the fourth quarter when Princeton tossed in two more, leaving the Bison to contend with a 7–5 deficit . Brown came through to score Bucknell's sixth with the 2:07 remaining in the game.

Unfortunately for the Bucknell men, the score remained deadlocked due to excellent defensive play by both teams, and the game ended at 6–7.

Killinger once again produced for Bucknell with three assists and a steal, and Tierney helped out with two assists of his own. Against Princeton, Bradbury added ten more to his list of saves this season.

Bucknell rounded out the tournament on Sunday morning, with Army. The Bucknell men came out strong in their final competition, establishing a 1–0 lead 3:04 into the game, a lead they held throughout the contest.

Bucknell enjoyed a 5–3 edge at the half before becoming wary of an Army surge in the third quarter, when they outscored Bucknell 4–3 and cut the scoring margin to one. The Bucknell men stayed intense, however, and went on to a 11–9 victory. The offensive talent that has Schroth at the top of Bucknell's season scoring list was apparent against Army, as he contributed six goals to the winning effort.

Kelly and Retzler also had two goalsapiece, while Killinger added one. Other notable statistics for the game include: four steals and three assists by Tierney, as well as four steals by Brizius.

Bucknell will take its 11–9 record and its national rank of 20 out to Long Beach, California this weekend for some tough competition against West Coast teams. Many of their opponents will include teams that are currently ranked among the top spots in the country.

Women's tennis victory streak goes to fourteen

BY MIKE MARKOVICH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's tennis squad played only one match last week, but made the most of it, winning and thereby extending their school-record streak of victories to 14, and their overall record to an impressive 15–1.

The match was played in Lewisburg last Saturday, and the hosting Bison were far from gracious. In recording their fifth shutout of the season versus the hapless LaSalle women, Bucknell did not allow a third set in any match. The Bison were especially dominant in singles play, where no LaSalle player was able to claim more than two games in their two sets.

Julia Diaz '95 played her usual solid match, completely overwhelming her opponent 6–0, 6–0, at the number one spot. At number two, Kymm Carlson '94 had limited trouble with her adversary and won quickly as well, 6–1, 6–1. Mary Ann Benack '92 won 6–1, 6–1 at number three.

Karen Stagliano '92 added to her long and distinguished list of victories at the number four spot, 6–1, 6–0, Kristina Lutter '95 won 6–0, 6–0 at number five, and Jennifer Markewich '95 took the number six win 6–0, 6–0.

Bucknell wasn't as unyielding in doubles play, but still took all three flights. Stagliano teamed with Kristyn Vandegrift '93, who saw her first number one action of the year, to take the top spot 6–2, 6–2. Lutter and Christine McMillan '95 won 6–4, 6–2 at number two, and Ashley Crary '95 won at number three with Markewich, 6–2, 6–1.

The women look forward to bringing their record season to a close this weekend with three straight matches. They face Hofstra this afternoon, Robert Morris tomorrow, again at Hofstra, and then Robert Morris at home to end the year.

An open notice from Bucknell's Athletic Director

Effective Monday, November 4, all athletic facility users must show a valid Bucknell identification to use any/all facilities. This policy includes faculty, staff and students as well as all other facility users. Due to a large number of unauthorized persons using the facility, our own Bucknell students and staff have been unable to use the facilities as they should. In addition, we have experienced thefts, injuries, and other problems that are associated with unautorized use of the athletic facilities. We would appreciate the cooperation of everyone who uses the area by showing your identification each time you enter the buildings. We are confident that this policy will make the facilities safer and more "useable" for the Bucknell community. Thank you in advance for your cooperation.

CCA, BSG seek to slash Bucknellian funding

BY TIMOTHY AMMAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Separate motions filed by the Committee on Complementary Activities (CCA) and the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) threaten to significantly drop or entirely eliminate the appropriations currently reserved for The Bucknellian.

According to a 1988 agreement, the student-run campus newspaper receives $4.40 from each student's $100 student activities fee. However, with the recent budgetary crunch that has stifled University support of campus organizations, motions have been made to revise this appropriation.

The initial BSG motion is to drop the monetary support for The Bucknellian entirely. However, Vanessa M iyo '92, treasurer of BSG, stresses that this is not the final motion and that "It will most likely change."

She cites a number of reasons for the BSG proposal. Apparently, the 1991 audit of The Bucknellian's finances revealed that the organization had accumulated $15,000 in funds over the last three years.

Also, the appropriation which was approved for The Bucknellian was supposed to be $4.20 per student while the organization had been receiving $4.40 per student due to an accounting error. With other student organization budgets being cut severely, it seemed to the BSG that the appropriations to The Bucknellian were unjust.

Perhaps the larger issue which Mayo cites, however, is the feeling of the BSG that The Bucknellian audit process lacks proper control. According to Mayo, "We didn't feel the money was being properly supervised." The BSG has also expressed questions about whether the advisory board's financial standards are stringent enough.

Mayo states that "perhaps an experienced administrator such as Barry Maxwell could give a better perspective on the board since he has seen other university budgets and knows what other groups are spending." However, Mayo stresses that the BSG proposal is just a first draft and that they are willing to work with The Bucknellian to resolve the issue.

The recommendations made by CCA would reduce The Bucknellian's appropriation less drastically. One of the CCA's roles is to recommend to President Gary Sojka a particular monetary amount to be allocated for each of the organizations under its umbrella.

The proposal made by the CCA would cut The Bucknellian's appropriation to $1 from each student. Furthermore, this money would not be accessible to The Bucknellian without the consent of

Student government proposes $10 increase in student activities fee

BY MICKI HAMILTON
AND TARA GILLIGAN
Bucknellian Staff Writers

The Bucknell Student Government (BSG) will vote this Sunday on a motion to increase and redistribute the student activities fee.

The motion, pending approval by the Board of Trustees, would mean a $10 increase in the activities fee students pay each year. In addition to raising the total fee to $110, BSG has proposed alternative ways to distribute the money, with an increased emphasis on social programming.

Although in its meeting last Sunday, the BSG did discuss a motion which attached specific dollar amounts to a number of categories, the exact allocation of activity fee funds is still in flux. "Amounts right now are not set in stone. We have to have something this weekend because the trustees are coming next weekend," said Tom Wuchenich '92, chair of the BSG's fiscal affairs committee.

The student activities fee may be increased to $110 in order to provide a wider range of social programming, according to a BSG motion co-authored by Treasurer Vanessa Mayo '92.

According to Alex Sherer '93, president of BSG, the Trustees will review the motion next weekend. "I'm sure that they're going to scrutinize any aspect in regard to the increase in tuition; however, it's only $10 and it goes a long way," he said.

Sherer said that pressure from the Trustee Implementation Plan task team prompted the BSG to explore new ways of providing funding for social programming.

Sherer believes the ten-dollar increase in the student activities fee is necessary for "more campus wide, non-alcoholic programming." He said that this increase will benefit everyone on campus.

At its meeting on Sunday, Oct. 27, the BSG discussed an initial draft of the student activities fee motion. The executive committee of BSG is still discussing changes to the initial draft which reflects the Congress's attempt to provide more money to Bison Programming and to the class governance structure.

The initial proposal would commit $9 out of the $110 fee to class governments. Although the executive committee has considered lowering that figure to $7.50, authors of the motion have decided on the percentage of that figure which will go to individual class governments.

Sherer explained that according to the BSG motion, the senior class would receive 40 percent, the highest percentage, of the money earmarked for class governance. "The whole commencement weekend and senior week are underfunded," said Wuchenich, citing one example of the senior class's need for additional funding.

Freshmen would be alloted the second highest amount, 30 percent, because they are not allowed to attend fraternities and rush has been moved to sophomore year; authors of the motion said the additional funding is intended to provide the class with alternative social programming.

Sherer said that because juniors often go abroad and sophomores often will be involved in rushing fraternities and sororities these classes have less need for funding; each would receive 15% of the total directed to class governments.

Also in an attempt to provide extra campus social programming, the BSG is proposing to allocate $5 per student to Bison Programming and $1 per student to the Bucknell Activities Council.

November 1st and we're all still alive

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Although authorities have not yet dredged the Susquehanna for bodies, it appears the campus remains intact and has emerged unscathed from the menacing shadow of Nostradamus.

The Department of Public Safety beefed up patrols last night following national attention focused on the campus mass murder supposedly predicted by the sixteenth-century French astrologer.

Early this morning, Director Vince DeCerchio reported no major incidents on campus.

However, DeCerchio remained on duty until 3 a.m., wrapping up a hectic week which included interviews with The Daily Item and the*Williamsport Sun-Gazette*, and two local television stations, as well as several calls from concerned parents. One television station featured the Bucknell frenzy as the lead story of its Wednesday night 6 p.m. newscast.

Rumors of the massacre have swept across Northeast universities and picked up national attention. The massacre scare was reported on NBC's Today show this week. In Wednesday's edition of USA Today, the Life section was topped with a story titled, "Massacre rumor has students running scared," which re-

Residency requirement to be instituted

BY JULIA STOUT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

As part of the Trustee Implementation Plan (TIP), Bucknell University has adopted a four-year residency requirement for ts undergraduate students.

Effective at the beginning of the 1992-1993 academic school year, all undergraduates will be required to live on campus in a University-owned facility or University-related fraternity house unless they have received permission through the Office of Residential Life to live elsewhere.

According to Gerald Commerford, assistant dean for housing, the new residency requirement was adopted for a combination of reasons.

First, because of the switch to sophomore rush, the University wanted to ensure that all Bucknell-owned housing facilities, particularly fraternity houses and sorority suites in Hunt Hall, would be filled.

Second, the Lewisburg community has expressed some concern over past behavior of Bucknell students living off campus. The new policy addresses this concern by stating that "students may be disqualified to live off campus on the basis of prior on-or off-campus misconduct."

In order to implement this new policy, the Division of Student Life has developed a very specific procedure for allowing students to live off campus. All undergraduates wishing to live off campus during the next school year must apply for permission through the Office of Residential Life before November 15, 1991.

These applicationswill be reviewed by a new board will be composed of: John Dunlop, dean of students; Ed Dadez, associate dean of residential life; Sean McCarthy, chairperson of the BSG student affairs committee; Chandra Guinn; chairperson of the Committee on Complementary Activities and Michael Moleschevich, a Lewisburg resident.

The primary task of the board will be to ensure that the review of applicants is fair and objective.

Based on the number of students living in off-campus housing during the current school year, the Division of Student Life has decided to limit the number of students who will live off campus during 1992-1993 to 265 women and 200 men.

If the number of students wishing to live off campus exceeds this amount, the Office of Residential Life will use a lottery system to grant permission to applicants.

Ashley Chertkof—The Bucknellian

A four-year residency requirement will take effect next year, according to Assistant Dean for Housing Gerald Commerford.

the CCA. Chandra Guinn '93, president of the CCA, said the decision stemmed from CCA meetings at which they "felt The Bucknellian had been very successful financially" and "had been able to obtain adequate funds through advertising." Thus, the CCA wanted the organization to "operate independently as much as possible" to ensure that "money could be freed up for use by other student organizations" that may need the funds even more.

While agreeing that advertising revenues were strong last year, The Bucknellian's Business Manager, Jim Staley '93, noted that "the national economic crisis has caused a leveling-off of advertising." He went on to predict that advertising would come in either at or under budget this year. Staley also noted that The Bucknellian's beginning balance will be no more than $5,000 in future years. He thus disagrees that carryover funds, in addition to the monies The Bucknellian receives from advertising, will be sufficient to keep the paper afloat.

The uncertainty of advertising revenue is also a source of concern for Travis Elliott '92, senior editor of The Bucknellian. "Our staff changes completely every two to three years," he said. "There is no guarantee that our next advertising manager will be nearly as successful as our current one."

Much of the controversy surrounding this issue appears to stem from the review process which The Bucknellian undergoes periodically. In 1984, The Bucknellian was shut down by the BSG due to accusations of inappropriate use of University funds. After the paper had re-established itself on campus, an agreement was created in 1988 to more closely monitor the financial activity of The Bucknellian while still providing for its freedom from the student government.

An advisory board was formed and, according to Editor-in-Chief David R. Murray '92, "as a system of checks and balances the agreement provided for a yearly audit and review by the CCA." The CCA approved The Bucknellian's finances without question in 1990. The recommendations now being made stem from the 1991 review.

Murray commented "Our advisory board's major responsibility is oversight of the fiscal affairs of The Bucknellian." He believes that the composition and dedication of the board makes it "uniquely and correctly suited to that task."

In the meantime, however, the fate of The Bucknellian is uncertain. Murray asserts that "$1 is fiscally absurd" as is the roughly $13,000 to $15,000 proposed drop in appropriations. Furthermore, he states that The Bucknellian "objects, for reasons of freedom of the press, to any part of Student Life control over funding."

ported that Bucknell freshmen would be seeking refuge in local hotels.

The murder scare began generating mayhem on campus last Thursday. Following a WVBU call-in show on the prediction hosted by Craig Bitter '92 and Colin Bridgewater '92, approximately 250 students congregated in the freshman quad and leaned out windows, shouting and causing a disturbance. The combined efforts of public safety officers, freshman resident assistants, and Area Coordinator Gerard Turbide were required to calm the students. Sargeant Donald Mull said the students did not pose a threat, but "were just being celebratory."

Bridgewater said, "indirectly, I think we were a cause" of the disturbance with the radio show, which featured President Gary Sojka, Director of Public Relations Sharon Poff, and students from other campuses. "The people who started it were listening to the show," said Bridgewater, also a resident assistant in Vedder. "A lot of freshmen were calling in and being silly on the air, and everybody just got sillier."

University officials have taken the rumors very seriously because of dangers that widespread publicity may encourage someone to fufill the prophecy.

Early this morning, DeCerchio said that for the most part security patrols found Halloween to be "busy but routine." The only significant incident was an explosion which destroyed the fountain in front of Roberts Hall.

DeCerchio commented that a "firecracker, such as an M-80 or a cherry bomb, or something larger" was used. A student security aide reported seeing two white males running toward Trax Hall shortly after the explosion.

The Lewisburg police department was contacted this morning to investigate the matter.

ACTIVITIES FEE From page 1

In the past, BSG has received a total of $85 per student; the BSG then appropriated this money to campus organizations. Executive officers of BSG are now proposing an increase in that amount to $87.

Richard Mannarino—The Bucknellian

BSG President Alex Sherer '93 said that he expects the Board of Trustees to approve of a ten percent increase in the student activities fee.

Vanessa Mayo '92, BSG treasurer, said that "the BSG reserve is not going to be sufficient [to fund campus organizations] within a few years." Because many organizations have more carefully planned budgets, the BSG would like to be able to appropriate more money to campus groups.

Along with the additional money produced by an increase in the activities fee, executive members of BSG suggested in an initial draft of their motion to eliminate the distribution of $.60 formerly set aside to be used at the University's discretion and the $4.40 subscription fee for The Bucknellian.

While the original proposal eliminated all funding for The Bucknellian, members of the executive committee of BSG said that this part of the motion may still be negotiable.

Annual college ratings published

Bucknell ranks in top quartile; administrators question validity of ratings

BY JEN MARSHALL
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Every September, U.S. News and World Report Magazine publishes its most popular issue, the one in which it determines and ranks America's best colleges. Members of the academic community peruse the pages of lists, statistics, and scores in hopes of finding their particular institution named as one of the favored.

Bucknell University fares well, but not amazingly well in U.S. News and World Report. Although Bucknell is listed in the first quartile of its section, that section is entitled "The Best of the Rest." Qualifing this bold claim, the magazine says "Here are the 179 other national universities and 115 national liberal arts colleges that did not rank among the top 25 in their categories. They are divided into quartiles based on their overall scores in the U.S. News survey and listed alphabetically within each group." There are ten colleges listed alongside Bucknell, so theoretically Bucknell can be considered anywhere from the 26th best to the 36th best liberal arts college in America. Administrators have found themselves asking questions such as "Does this ranking accurately reflect on the quality of education both academically and practically at Bucknell?" and "Can a chart full of numbers really expressed the myriad of unique options available at each of the colleges represented in any of these rankings?"

> "Surveys conducted by magazines such as U. S. News are just a way for the general public to make snap judgements about schools."
> — Mark Davies
> Director of Admisions

Barbara Shailor, acting vice president for student services, addressed some of those questions, pointing out that Bucknell has received a favorable rating in the U.S. News report. But, Shailor said, she is "not always certain that ratings get the essence of what an institution is about." "We are so unique," she says of Bucknell, "that it is hard to pigeon-hole us. We're really offering a different kind of program."

Mark Davies, director of admissions, is also skeptical about the value of these magazine surveys. In response to magazine rankings, Davies comments that he "never liked surveys. They want to categorize schools by categories they select. There are lots of things about any one school that you just can't put into facts and figures." Bucknell just missed being in the top 25 of the National Liberal Arts Colleges category in the U.S. News ranking, but Mark Davies doesn't feel that the Bucknell community should take that placement to heart. "I've seen schools move in and out of the 'top 25' from year to year. I don't understand that. When this ranking first began we [Bucknell] were rated as 'the best school east of the Mississippi', but now the categories have changed. I don't understand that." Davies encourages prospective students to visit campuses instead of relying on surveys, and if surveys and ratings are taken into account, to be sure and consult multiple sources. "Surveys conducted by magazines such as U.S. News are just a way for the general public to make snap judgements about schools," he said.

Schools that find themselves cited as one of "America's Best Colleges" can often expect an increase in perceived academic reputation as well as financial gain. In the October 16, 1991 issue of The Chronical of Higher Education, Donald W. Shumaker, Jr., assistant director of communications at Hood College com-

Phi Kappa Psi brothers are initiated

Chapter closed since 1988 reopens with 21 new members and renovated house

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

After a three-year absence, the Bucknell chapter of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity officially returned to campus last weekend, as 19 students were initiated as brothers in the recolonized chapter.

"The ceremony marked the culmination of eight months of tremendous effort by every involved faction," said David Murray '92, Phi Psi director of community relations. Gerald Commerford, assistant dean for housing and the chapter's administrative advisor, said the weekend's events "were terrific. It was even better having the parents involved" by scheduling the events for parents' weekend.

Last Friday's initiation was followed by a black tie dinner attended by alumni, administrators and parents. Brief remarks were presented by Alumni Corporation president Paul Pigman '56, chapter President Matt Young '92, Vice President Brian Bontempo '94, and Commerford, a Colgate Phi Psi alumnus.

At the dinner, a new award, to be presented each semester for outstanding service to the Pennsylvania Gamma chapter, was presented to Commerford and Pigman. Earlier in the day two more students became pledges to the new chapter.

According to Young, the biggest goal for the chapter is to move into the fraternity house, currently undergoing renovation. "That's all we can really plan as of now," Young said. "We're still trying to get up on our feet; things will be a lot different once we get into the house."

Commerford said the University-owned house is scheduled to be ready for occupancy on Dec. 6, with most of the remaining construction involving the installation of sprinklers throughout the building. Currently the 19 brothers are housed in lounges, all in uphill residence halls.

Commerford said there are no current plans for the remaining rooms in the 38-bed facility, but they will be used if necessary. New room requests for next semester are now being received, he explained, and the Office of Residential Life will determine total demand for rooms in the next two to three weeks. The University purchased the house from the Alumni Corporation in May, and physical plant crews have been working to complete renovations and repairs originally estimated at $335,000.

The transfer of ownership followed two years of disputes among the Penn Gamma alumni, as a faction of the alumni joined the national organization in court in an effort to block the sale. After negotiations, the dissident group was given the opportunity to raise the required funds for repairs, but fell short of that goal.

Young said the intra-chapter rift has been smoothed, and "our alumni are 100 percent behind the group."

Murray said last weekend's initiation completed a long, sometimes tumultuous process which began last February, when representatives of Phi Kappa Psi national arrived on campus to recruit members for an interest group.

He explained, "There was some fluctuation in the beginning" in the group's composition, but "when we returned there were a number of uncertainties—the status of the house, when or if we would be pledged and initiated—and with all that uncertainty there was a much more catastrophic reduction in membership to nineteen people" when the group was pledged in September.

Young explained that the current pledges are original members who returned to the group. He said the group is currently recruiting informally.

Young said that next fall "I hope to see these guys recognized by the University community as a full chapter" like all other fraternities.

David Murray—The Bucknellian

President Matt Young '92 said Phi Kappa Psi members look forward to moving into their newly renovated house by Dec. 6.

Pianist to perform at Rooke Chapel

Lee Hoiby, the pianist and composer in residence, will give a musical performance on Tuesday, Nov. 5, in Rooke Chapel.

The concert includes sopranos Martha Hill and Assistant Professor of Music Catherine Payn, the Rooke Chapel Choir, and the Bucknell University Concert Chorale, conducted by William Payn.

This free presentation begins at 8 p.m.

Eliminating gender problems

Kate Butler, founding director of American Humanagement Association, will come to Bucknell University's Coleman Theatre on Monday, Nov. 4, in Coleman Hall.

She will address ways to identify and eliminate the gender bias which she claims begins in children. Part of her theory asserts that even brothers and sisters are brought up in different worlds of communication, eventually leading to problems between men and women in the work force. Her organization strives for recognition of this all-too-frequently-problematic difference.

The lecture will conclude with panel discussions with more than 20 professional women in fields including business, education, and science.

This lecture is part of Bucknell's Women and Careers program, and is co-sponsored by the Career Development Center, the Panhellenic Council, the Student Lectureship Committee, and the Women's Resource Center. For more information, call 524-1375.

Modern dance comes to BU

Bella Lewitzky, the artistic director of the Lewitzky Dance Company, will teach a class at Bucknell on Friday, Nov. 8, at 1 p.m. in Tustin Dance Studio.

This class is one of two being taught during the dance company's residency at Bucknell. The second class is to be held on Saturday, Nov. 9, at 10:30 a.m., also in Tustin Studio, and will be taught by a member of the dance company.

These master classes are open to the public with prior registration. For more information, contact the Bucknell department of theatre and dance, 524-1235.

Students to share off-campus stories

The Office of International Education is hosting the Sixth Annual Off-Campus Studies Fair. The Fair will be held Nov. 5, 1991 from 6 to 7 p.m. in Walls Lounge in the Langone Center.

Returning off-campus students will be present to share their off-campus experiences through stories and pictures. All interested freshmen and sophomores are encouraged to attend.

Casual dating decline at Amherst

The Amherst Student reports that campus men and women have fallen "prey" to modern social attitudes when dating is involved. Recent reports have shown that most of the relationships at Amherst are more serious, reflecting on the national trend towards monogamy.

Past studies show that casual dating was definitely looked upon highly, especially before the '70s.

One problem, the students note, is that relationships tend to be either completely committed, or do not exist at all. Adds Barrie Yallof, "People leave home, and they get independence from parents, and they don't want to get tied down to someone else."

Hunger Walk is successful

Students at the State University of New York at Binghamton joined together and walked ten kilometers for the annual Broome County Council of Churches' Ninth Hunger Walk.

Fraternities and sororities participated in the walk, as well as the Asian Student Union, Delta Sigma Pi, and many individual students, totaling over 200 persons.

Food was also collected from area citizens and students on the campus.

Previously, upwards of 3,500 pounds of food were collected; this year, a whopping 12,000 pounds was donated.

Gettsyburg revises attendance policy

The attendance policy at Gettysburg College has traditionally been called "ambiguous." In the student handbook, it states that if a student misses a class an "excessive" amount of times, they may be subject to disciplinary action.

Students at Gettysburg are now complaining about to a new policy which they claim only adds to the vagueness. This change involves moving the responsibility of cut probation from the Office of Academic Advising to the professor.

Under this new policy, faculty can set their own limits. Students oppose this, as they feel they should have better knowledge of the policy, and that guidelines should be more clearly set.

Dick Thornburgh speaks in Lancaster

Republican Senate candidate Richard Thornburgh made recent campaign stop in Lancaster . Thronburgh is running against interim Senator Harris Woffordfor the opportunity to fill the remaining four years in the term of the late John Heinz,

Thornburgh is an avid opponent of national health insurance and taxation by authorities at all levels; additionally, he said he will devote a good deal of his time to continue the fight against drugs and crime through new laws that would make it harder for criminals to plea bargain.

Thornburgh, after giving his speech, met with Franklin and Marshall's College Republican Chairman Marc Lemon '92 and Vice-President Chairman Mark Sapienza '92.

ments on the changes he saw at Hood after it had been placed at the top of the U.S. News list of smaller comprehensive institutions. "...applications rose 3 percent, freshman deposits rose 6.3 percent, and the size of the freshman class rose from 177 in 1985 to 212 in 1986, an increase of 20 percent." It appears that only good can come of a favorable position in a magazine's ranking, but the opposite can be true.

In the September 1991 issue of Money Guide magazine, a ranking of colleges in order of "best buy" was published. Cooper Union College placed high on Money's list because of its free tuition. Readers of Money saw only the word "free" and thus Cooper Union was flooded with applications from people for whom it would have been totally innappropriate to admit.

Cooper Union is one of the best, most original, and toughest of the art, architecture, and engineering schools in the United States and for the students that attend, the free tution is a small merit. Members of the admissions board said they found the increase in applications time-consuming and annoying.

Just how much accurate information can be accrued from these magazine rankings? Can these lists provide a valid representation of campus life and academic merit? According to the editors of U.S. News, academic quality is not what the ranking is all about, rather it's academic reputation that they intend to measure.

"A college degree stays with you forever on your resume," says Mel Elfin, editor of special projects at U.S. News. "It's like a tatoo." Apparently, these lists measure which institutions are thought to be the best, not necessarily which are the best.

Just how does a magazine go about "pigeon-holing" colleges and universities? Do they even have a predetermined, calibrated system of evaluation? U.S. News aniticipated that its readers would want to know exactly how its survey was run, and so the magazine devoted a page of its ranking section to "Methodology."

Academic institutions are divided into four categories; National Universities and National Liberal Arts Colleges; Regional Colleges and Universities; Regional Liberal Arts Colleges; and Specialized Institutions. The schools are ranked within these categories based on results of the exclusive survey that U.S News collected from 2,425 responding college presidents, deans, and admissions directors. The page on Methodology goes on to describe the survey in detail, but the gist of the article is that U.S. News considers it's report on "America's Best Colleges" to be reasonably respectable. Does this mean that the reader should think so too?

With so many rankings and evaluations of an academic institution offered, credibility of any one source has to suffer. Should the querying student trust U.S. News and World Report magazine, Peterson's Guide to Four-Year Colleges, Barron's Guide to Four-Year Colleges, Money Guide magazine, or a college's own publications about itself?

Many times statistics concerning the same college vary from source to source, so the reader often feels as if no reliable information exists. Does it really matter if an institution recieves a ranking of "most difficult" in Baron's while rating only a "very difficult" in Peterson's? Some people think that it does, or those publications would not be hard at work trying to stuff institutions into narrow, neat little categories.

A new perspective on deadlines

October 31. 5:01: Time, like a tell-tale heart, ticks on. I have just forty-four minutes to submit two interesting pages to The Bucknellian offices or my editor has threatened to pummel me with squirrel doody and leave me unconscious in front of a U-shaped building. Thank God for the clock-change last Sunday and that extra hour. Without it, there would probably be a mask-wearing, Ginsu-weilding, limb-eating, fang-growling, skin-wearing, Oprah-watching, spittle-drooling, bow-legged, psycho killer revving his chain-saw over me as we speak. Of course, I probably shouldn't do things at the last minute like this. Whenever I do, something always seems to go wrong with the computer. Like an "Out-Of-Memory" error, or a "Word-System-Boot" error, or a "Data-Link-Disfunctional-Say-Goodbye-To-Your-Paper-You-Procrastinating-Twit" error.

Perhaps it's Murphy's Law... or even God. You see, in the old days, whenever some normally God-fearing (brown-nosing) guy named Jacob, or Joseph, or Joshua would procrastinate, God would get genuinely vengeful and send down death-fairies to smear goat-urine on his doorstep, or put frogs in his first-born son's tonka trucks, or something like that. Of course, after centuries of mortal procrastination, God has become somewhat frustrated and has worsened his punishments:

God: His Paper is due in twenty minutes and he is starting it now!!! Let there be... "A Paper Misfeed Error!" Ha Ha Ha.

Jeremiah: (brown-nosing) Gee, God. You are so clever and vengeful! This is much more fun than toads or goat-pee. You're the greatest, God!

Alright, maybe it is just Murphy's law. But, still, there seem to be more Murphies on this campus than there is squirrel doody. Like in Bertrand Library, for example. And it isn't only just the snack room, where you must brave thick, dense clouds of smoke to pay 60 cents for kreemy, krunchy, frooty, reel-cheeeze, treets that taste like luggage only to find that the little metal thing doesn't turn all the way and your confection gets stuck and you spend twenty minutes kicking the machine until this bald security guy comes in and asks to see your student ID and writes down your name and smears goat urine on your doorstep. Murphy can also be found at the "reserve counter." I discovered this fact a week ago, when I was attempting to check out a film for my English class. After waiting in line for a few minutes I found myself face to face with a somewhat hostile library person.

Me: Hi, can I have "The Misanthrope," sir.

Him: Do YOU have your student I.D? Anyone who uses the word "squirrel doody" twice in one article, MUST have their student I.D!

Me: Here, it is, sir, right here! Yes indeed, no more about "squirrel doody" out of me, Nosireebob!

Him: (After scrutinizing picture for a full three minutes) Sorry, someone just rented it.

I finally obtained and watched the two hour and two minute movie, but was met with more problems as I tried to return it.

Me: Here's that tape back in perfect condition, sir. Rewound and everything. Can I have my I.D. back now? Please?

Him: This tape is two minutes late. I told you to bring it back at 11:03. Now it's 11:05, you jerk.

Me: But, I, the movie was...

Him: That will be five dollars please.

Me: But, I, please, listen...

Him: Martha, go get the leeches.

But now, perhaps Murphy's has finally been broken. After all, here I am writing this article on the computer at the last minute and, so far, nothing has gone wrooooooooooooooooo238430*0*0*0^_——@@@$@@$@@%5

Ha, Ha, Ms. Copy Editor, just a little joke there! All in good fun! But about procrastination... Maybe we should all take a cue from that Mr. Nostradamus person. After all, he spent much of his time meditating by himself looking towards the future. People would come up to him on the street and say "Hi, how are you today?" And he would look at them, and not understand a word they said because he spoke French.

No seriously, he would say, (in French) "Today! Today! Who thinks about today when in the future: On the thorny evening of the black sand the hissing insects of 27 tongues shall spawn the dreaded plague on wings of cherry blood bringing death to the great one's uncle's best friend's gold fish, Gertrude. And Perfect Children shall scream and boot Bison Burgers on their J-Crew Dockers with the hounds of fury growling and waiting, and waiting, and waiting for their doooom!"

So I guess now we know why Mr. Nostradamus spent so much time by himself looking towards the future.

Well, time is running short. I should probably call my editor and ask her for just five more minutes. Five more minutes to make mistakes. Five more minutes to laugh and smile about them. Five more minutes.

I guess psycho-killers really do put things in perspective.

The Collegiate Perspective (and other fairy tales)

Some afterthoughts on Halloween's Nostradamus mass murder scare.

Jeers:

•To certain local hotel chains for fueling the fire by offering special "Medieval Prophecy One-Night Rates" for yesterday evening.

•To People magazine for not plastering the story of our ten-day hell all over their front cover this week, along with a headline like, "The Scariest Halloween Ever!"

•To the talk of females looking to spend last night at fraternities for protection from the Nostradamus killer. Hmm. Let's hope that the guys there were "protected," too.

•To Today Show news anchor Faith Daniels, who stumbled over the name "Nostradamus" as she reported on the mass murder hysteria. Jane Pauley would have pronounced it correctly, but who am I to cry over spilt sour grapes?

Cheers:

•To the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library for being right there for the campus community when there was that monstrously heavy rush on Nostradamus trivia.

•To WVBU, who, amidst the appalling absence of adequate national media coverage on the crisis, aired a phone-in talk show one week before Halloween for students to speak their minds on the issue. Hi, catharsis. Oh, and for the record, the evening saw 26 straight calls, while crank calls were tallied at 36.

•To the Bison Programming Committee for deciding not to schedule a slasher film as one of their featured movies last night.

•To Director of Public Relations Sharon Poff and President Gary Sojka for going live on WVBU to address student concerns last Thursday night at 10 and 11 o' clock, respectively, and treating the decidedly offbeat issue with a concern above and beyond the call of duty.

•To USA Today, who did plaster our plight all over the front page of their Life section on Wednesday. Even though we came across as being a spineless pack o' college rug rats due to the article's reference to the University, WE SALUTE YOU!

Most Baffled Party to the Scare: Harpo Productions in Chicago (producers of "The Oprah Winfrey Show"), who received numerous calls over the past two weeks from northeastern college students who wanted to know whether there had been a broadcast on the topic of "When Your Son or Daughter's University is Targeted for Catastrophe by a 400-Year Old French Physician and Astrologer."

Best mistaken pronunciation of the name "Nostradamus": "Notredameus"

Worst mistaken pronunciation of the name "Nostradamus": "Nostrilameus"

Most Frightening Confirmed Rumor: That a book dealing with the subject of making explosives was stolen from the Bertrand Library several weeks ago.

Most Frequently Heard Phrase: "Copy-cat killer"

Least Frequently Heard Phrase: "Party in Smith Hall! Everyone's invited!"

And some leftover tidbits to think about:

•Y'know, if nothing else, this whole deal has brought me to the unsettling realization that I can look at quite a few of the people that I know here and think to myself, 'Yeah, I guess I can see him/her single-handedly laying waste to the lives of a dozen college coeds.'

•If someone were actually conducting a psychology experiment with all of us as guinea bison, what a tremendous success it must have been. The problem is, when the mastermind in question turns in the study's results, he or she is going to be cold busted.

•Admittedly, I have to say that I was assured that we weren't in any danger whatsoever with this Nostradamus thing after learning of the prophecy's claim that "perfect children shall have their throats cut with a knife." I mean, hey, according to the baby boomers, there ain't a perfect child in our entire generation, so.

And on other, completely unrelated matters:

So, I'm sitting there at the all-University picnic/carnival with my folks this past Saturday during Parents' Weekend, and I'm having a pretty good time. After watching one fellow with rather long hair walk by our table, though, my dad turns to me and asks, "Do you have difficulty telling the boys from the girls here?" I let out a sigh.

"Geez, Pop," I say with a pained expression on my face," If you're going to be behind the times, at least be politically correct; these are men and womyn that you see before you, not boys and girls... and yes, I do have difficulty telling them apart."

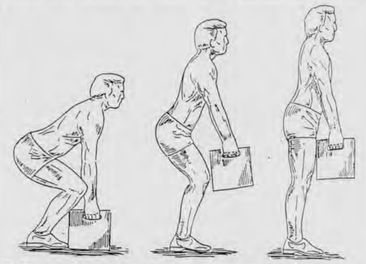
Simple solutions to back pain

BY LISA LIPARI AND JOYCE DOLLINGER
Bucknellian Staff Writers

After a long day of classes and activities, it is not uncommon to hear students requesting backrubs for their aching neck and shoulder muscles. Is this added strain to our lives preventable? Yes, and sometimes the solution is as simple as switching the style in which you carry your backpack or adding a board to your lumpy University mattress.

Most of the time, we put a strain on our backs without even realizing it. For example, bookbags and backpacks put a certain amount of pressure on the shoulders and back, a pressure which is usually unbalanced. Most students carry their bookbags on the same shoulder all the time, and as the body tilts, the spine is affected, as well as the trapezius (shoulder) muscles and those of the upper back.

Posture is also something to which most students don't pay much attention. Many complain about the desks in the classrooms and find themselves twisting around and changing positions. While this would not seem to be good for the back, it actually is. According to Dr. J. Preston Hoyle, director of medical services at Bucknell, "Changing positions actually appeases muscle strain." That is, if a student feels uncomfortable, then there is obviously some kind of strain being placed on the back muscles. Hoyle also stated "staying in one position for a long time where you're using your back and neck muscles for support can lead to spasm." Sitting at a computer for a long period of time is one example.



To lift something without hurting your back, the object must be close to your body, you must lift slowly, your neck should be straight, and the body must not twist. Leg and back stretches will help you to improve lifting techniques.

Another posture-affecting factor is that the desks are all built for right-handed people. Therefore, left-handed people who want to face front have to twist their bodies to use the desks. While the strain may not be great or even noticeable, it is still present.

One of the most common complaints among students is that their mattresses do not offer enough support. Consequently, students experience lower back pain. Hoyle explained that when the body bends there can be stress on the nerves, leading to "chronic lower back problems." Bed boards, which are simply a sheet of plywood cut to fit the size of the bed, keep the back straight. They are available at the Physical Plant at no cost, or they can be purchased at any lumber store. When asked about sleeping on the floor, Hoyle said, "While this can't hurt you, most of us need a mattress to soften things."

Another cause for back injury is simply being too sedentary or too active. While many back injuries are due to heavy lifting or straining, much of chronic backache really is due to weak back, thigh, and abdominal muscles.

Other risk factors include smoking (oxygen and nutrient supply to the disks in the back are depleted), scoliosis (curvature of the spine), jobs that require heavy lifting, and basically "anything that involves a lot of force over a short period of time that also involves twisting," says Hoyle.

Backpacks carried lopsidedly on one shoulder cause back pain

So if you are one of the 80% of people who have suffered lower back pain and one of at least two billion people in the 1980's who have sought treatment for their backs, start correcting the problem now. Almost $14 billion has been used for medical treatment of back problems. To keep your back healthy and strong, take care of it at a young age. According to Dennis Zacharkow, R.P.T., author, "The younger a person is, the easier it will be to learn the proper muscular control of the lower back, along with the proper way to lift, sit, and exercise." Take this advice and avoid the pain later.

350 volunteer for 225 placements

BY COLLEEN RUSH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A frazzled panic has struck the coordinators of "Into The Streets," the campus-wide volunteer day scheduled to take place tomorrow. The overwhelming response of interested Bucknell students has taken the organizers completely by surprise.

"The student response has been incredible," said Matt Liephart '92, one of the coordinators for the program. Though only in its first active year, "Into The Streets" has had an astronomical turn–out. No limit was set on the number of students who could volunteer. "We went for it. We never thought we'd get this kind of a response," said Liephart.

The unexpected success of the program, though much appreciated, has caused somewhat of an ironic problem. Approximately 350 students signed up to participate, but because the response was so extraordinary, only 225 students were given placements. A shortage of available agencies, rather than students, has resulted in a waiting list for the volunteers. "We have to make waiting lists because we don't want to reject the people who volunteered. We want to encourage them," said Jennifer Shore '92, another coordinator of the program. "It is unfortunate that not enough agencies responded." The coordinators blame poor planning and insufficient time for the lack of response on the agencies part.

With volunteers still pouring in from around campus, the organizers are more than pleased with the response. "It is obvious that Bucknell students actually do care," concluded Liephart.

Bucknell may not be bastion of conservatism

Call us apathetic, but not conservative, since the majority is concerned about social programs, the environment, and abortion rights

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Each semester, students regrettably hear from at least one of their professors: "Bucknell is such an upper-middle-class, white, Republican, conservative school. It's a shame that there is not more of a variety of backgrounds and viewpoints here to learn from." While at least part of this assumed mold is true, not everyone who takes classes here is conservative and a Republican. Not hardly.

In fact, from The Bucknellian survey conducted over the past two weeks, only 56% of the student body considers itself a Republican. Twenty-two percent responded that they are Democrats and 22% claimed to be free-thinking Independents. Sixty percent believed in the same party as their parents. Typically, college is the time for students to begin to form their own opinions, thus breaking away from well-established parental views.

Students also proved not to be conservative with their views of abortion. An overwhelming 80% said that they are pro-choice, a typically liberal attitude. Twenty percent claimed to be pro-life.

Social concerns such as this were voiced by many. Frequent topics of improvement included the areas of welfare, education, the environment, the homeless, civil rights, and healthcare. It was for these reasons that the majority of students (63%) felt that Bush was not doing well with domestic issues.

President Bush much fared better in the area of foreign policy with 90% of the students voting in his favor. Kelli Swain '95 summed up her feelings by saying, "The only good thing about Bush is his foreign policy." Others like Carolyn Crone '95 said, "No one could have done it (the Gulf War) better."

Another area of disagreement occurred when polling students' feelings about how the Senate handled the recent Clarence Thomas hearings. Forty-five percent felt that they were handled well, while 55% did not. Marijo Makufka (GR) said the Senate did the "best they could under the circumstances," while Lee Guzofski '94 said, "The whole issue was blown out of proportion. It was ludicrous." Others compared the nationally televised hearings to a circus.

This combination of approval towards foreign policy and disapproval towards the handling of domestic issues such as the hearings, the homeless, and education could be the reason that a mediocre 55% said that they would vote to re-elect Bush in the 1992 election. Twenty-seven percent of the students surveyed said that they would not re-elect him and 18% said that it depended upon who the Democrats ran against the incumbent Bush.

While Bucknellians may have an opinion about which party they like and for who they would vote, it doesn't mean that they will exercise their right to vote. Sixty percent of the students are registered voters and 57% have voted in a national election before, yet a low 38% vote on a regular basis.

When asked if they were interested in politics, 48% said they were, while 35% were not. The remainder (17%) said that they like to be "aware," but really don't keep up with current events and political happenings. All students that were phoned were more than willing to answer the political questions though, even if they were often silent for answers. The most perplexing questions concerned President Bush's handling of domestic and foreign policy.

While Bucknell students may be called uninformed or apathetic, those that do hold political views tend to have widely varied stances. A fair share of liberals and conservatives do exist on this campus.

Speak out, express your political opinions

The College Republicans, the Progressive Caucus, and the League of Women Voters are always looking for a few good members

BY WAYNE FERBERT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Is Bucknell a politically active campus? Can this be considered a rhetorical question? According to The Bucknellian's survey, it is an irrelevant question. We all know that Bucknell today, in comparision to other both liberal and conservative-universities, is a relatively apathetic campus. There are several groups on campus attempting to change this trend though.

College is viewed by most as the last chance before we all enter the "real" world to express our views without really getting in trouble. College is also supposed to be a time of growing and expanding our viewpoints. This is why political activism is so often related to college settings. However, even the University of California, Berkeley, isn't burning any bras lately. The wave of disinterest in politics displayed by college students is strong and steady across the country despite the Gulf War protests. But part of any university's mission is to promote a steady and constructive exchange of ideas and viewpoints. So, what political organizations are active on Bucknell's campus?

The Progressive Caucus is perhaps the most vocal group on campus. The Progressive Caucus began in the fall of 1980 as a result of the election of Ronald Reagan. One of the group's founders, Associate Professor of Economics Charles Sackrey, describes the members of the group as the "left-wing, liberal side of the Democratic party." Because of the dominance of the Republican party in the last eight to twelve years, interest in the group has weakened. The Gulf War revived interest and many of the members joined S.T.O.P. (Students and Teachers Organized for Peace) to protest. Originally, the caucus was more off-campus oriented, with effort concentrated on protesting in Washington D.C., but recently the group has begun to focus on the campus as its main forum. It speaks out through demonstrations, protests, The Catalyst, and forums.

The Caucus's mission, according to Sackrey, is to address the problems that plague the country, with a focus on the "unequal distribution of income and power," and the administration's "imperial stance in foreign relations." Addressing public issues is a main focus of the group, but the Progressive Caucus sees the "exchange of ideas as a much more important" facet of the group. Sackrey says, "The group provides a forum for their views" and welcomes an open exchange with any groups that differ in opinion with the group. This liberal group meets on a regular basis to discuss views and plans for promoting these views. Anyone interested in joining should contact Sackrey.

On the other end of the political spectrum is the College Republicans. This group publishes The Sentinel, which promotes conservative thought, in general, but is open to all viewpoints. The College Republicans meet to discuss politics and ways of creating a forum for their opinions. The group's mission, as stated by College Republicans President Evan Coyne Maloney '94, is "not really to convert anyone, but to remind people that although the small, left-wing minority is vocal, the College Republicans are still here on campus and have a right to speak." The group is in favor of a forum to discuss ideas with other groups that differ in viewpoint from the conservative right.

This conservative group of students describes themselves as "right-wing." Its members favor term-limitations, major cuts in government waste, and cuts in all types of taxes. Maloney thinks that the apathy on campus exists because students "do not appreciate challenges to their individual ideas and people avoid these challenges rather than address them." The College Republicans meets about every two to three weeks and is always looking for new members.

The League of Women Voters of the Lewisburg Area is another active group. The League often organizes political events and forums so that voters can become more informed about the issues and candidates involved in upcoming elections. It also prepares and distributes voter guides for the community and interviews candidates to determine where the candidates stand on important issues. The League is currently studying the issues of child health care and recreation, and is also taking action on such issues as education, waste recycling, water quality, and regional cooperation. If any of these issues interest you, and you would like to join the League of Women Voters of the Lewisburg Area, then contact Susan Warner-Mills at 523-7431.

All of the above groups conveyed a hope that students at Bucknell would become more active in politics and political causes. A university depends on its students as the catalyst to the exchange of ideas between differing viewpoints. For our democracy to be effective, the common man and woman must fulfill his/her constitutional responsibility to act as an ever-constant evaluator of our government's actions. In other words, GET INVOLVED!

Democrat vs. Republican
(Is there a difference anymore?)

Support social programs	Support military spending
Less fiscally conservative	More fiscally conservative
Typically the party of the working class and minorities	Typically the party of the upper middle class white

Each year the Democratic and Republican parties become harder to distinguish. The views of the candidates are quite often the same and don't fall under "typical" party lines. The pro-life/pro-choice debate is just one wavering issue. Democrats even joined Republicans to vote Judge Thomas onto the Supreme Court.

What to look for in 1992

- Appeals to the middle class
- A concentration on quotas and Kuwait by Bush
- An "outsider" candidate, one who is not directly involved in Capitol Hill politics; i.e. a governor.
- Education
- Environment
- NARAL (National Abortion Rights Action League) hoping to join the Republican party as a way to draw young, pro-choice Republicans into voting for the party.
- Character credibility

Protesting is a part of our present, past

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The late 1960's and early 1970's were just full of protest, or so most of us in the next generation have heard. The '70's generation supposedly voiced their opinion, stood up and shouted for what they believed in. Did they have that much more to shout about or are the children of the '80's just apathetic? Are today's 20-years olds missing out on something?

English Professor Karl Patten, who has been continually active on Bucknell's political scene since the early '60's, points towards the January 26, 1991 march in Washington D.C. against the Gulf War that drew hundreds of thousands to show that political activation has not declined over the decades. He says, "Nothing like that happened at a comparable point in time in the Vietnam War."

Bucknell was well-represented at that march. We did not have the three busloads of students that Vermont did, but we did make our presence known–just like we did during the Vietnam War, the period of divestment in South Africa, and when the military began increasing aid to South America.

Our history of political activation is rich, involved, and encouraged by the faculty and administration surrounding us. The Fall 1956 Parents' Weekend Presidential address encouraged students to voice their views. President Charles H. Watts III said that many wished that college students would return to their silly college traditions like eating goldfish, but he advocated open thought and new opinion in and out of Bucknell classrooms.

Speak-outs and films followed in the late 1960's, as did marches and the striking of classes to protest the invasion of Laos and involvement in Indochina. Ten Bucknellians turned in their draft cards and 250 rallied for presidential candidate McGovern.

In the 1980's students protested everything from the CIA (Central Intelligence Agency) conducting interviews on campus to divestment in South Africa to the tenure process of their professors. The four anti-apartheid rallies held in 1985 convinced the Board of Trustees to pull the school's money out of corporations that conducted or built their business in the racially-torn South Africa.

More recently students protested last Halloween on Seventh Street. The theme of this sit-down was not new. When Pennsylvania first changed the drinking age to 21 in the early 1980's, students were also displeased. Then, all parties became "by-invite-only" due to liabilities. Ten years ago students were also perturbed that the police could intervene on their private campus and they were equally as concerned about the status of their social lives.

One of the other biggest rallies on campus was held when the faculty voted to abolish the Greek System in 1989 charging that it was elitist, racist, sexist, and anti-intellectual. Once again, the students' organized, well-spoken protests led the Board of Trustees to vote in their favor.

The mock graves and other demonstrations put on by students on the Quad and the uphill LC to protest the Persian Gulf War also caught the attention of the faculty, administration, and the surrounding community. The faculty responded by opening classroom discussion to the topic and by offering their opinions in their areas of expertise.

As Professor Patten says of his involvement on campus, outside of the Lewisburg post office, and in the Washington, D.C. march, "It felt awfully good." It seems as though many of both the 1960 and 1990 generations would tend to agree. Political activation is not a thing of the past.

The need for public speaking at Bucknell

Why we don't have such a course, practice options on campus, and the key qualities of an interesting, exciting speaker

BY WAYNE FERBERT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Public speech serves as an integral part of campus life. The chance for an academician to present his view to others for consideration is key to an exchange of critical thought in the university setting. More importantly, the chance for students to get involved in the free-flowing exchange of ideas is critical to a well-rounded liberal arts education. The opportunity to view this exchange manifests itself in lectures outside of class. Here people present their research, ideas, experiences, and/or beliefs. These speeches are oftentimes given by a person whose sole occupation is that of public speaker. Being a public speaker or academic expert on one's subject, however, does not ensure the listeners of an insightful and meaningful lecture. What, then, makes one an effective public speaker?

KEY SPEAKING QUALITIES

The two key aspects to any speech are content and presentation. A speaker's effectiveness can be measured rather easily and quickly. One can just ask himself as he is leaving the speech: Did the speaker get his point across clearly? First and foremost, the most important part of the speech is the content. But a speaker can be presenting very insightful subject matter and not get his point across because he lacked a successful technique for presentation. But one must not forget that while presentation is important, it is only a tool to be used in conjunction with clearly expressed ideas.

Most effective speakers exhibit certain characteristics that help to make them an effective speaker. While most speakers are very knowledgeable in their subject matter, the most effective speakers portray a real sense of sincerity when they speak. This sincerity comes from the speaker constantly performing an introspective re-examination of his/her beliefs about the subject matter. The speakers that exhibit this sincerity are oftentimes more believable and spur a more effective exchange of critical thought. Too often, speakers that work the college circuit are more interested in being controversial than actually promoting critical thought in the subject matter because being controversial and dynamic is enough to sell tickets. As a public speaker, one should concentrate more on content than "pomp and circumstance."

While expressing his beliefs about today's speakers, Professor Robert Taylor, chair of the English department, said, "Speakers nowadays focus too much on the creation of an image or a persona, rather than on presenting the content clearly and forthrightly."

But while content is key, the vehicle for presenting the content should be an effective technique as well. The professors at this school are fountains of knowledge, but how often does one find himself asleep in class because these fountains make no waves? Presentation must be cleverly devised. After all, what good is the content if the audience isn't receptive because the speaker cannot keep its attention? Styles and techniques for presentation vary from person to person and each person must decide which individualized style suits him best. Lots of practice helps.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Greg Parks '94 and Mike Krupnikoff'92 lead the debate team during practice sessions and on trips to such schools as Harvard, Princeton, Yale, Smith, New York University, and Amherst.

PRACTICE OPPORTUNITIES

But what does Bucknell offer its students as a means for experimenting with different speaking techniques? Bucknell once offered a class about rhetoric, which gave the students a chance to experiment with and learn more about the art of public speaking. But this class was taught by Professor Gosse who has since retired. The class was popular, but there are no plans to offer the class any time soon. Many universities offer classes on public speaking through either their English or theater departments which give the student the opportunity to learn different speech techniques. Moreover, these classes offer students the chance to make speeches on very different subject matters before an audience so that the student can adjust to and practice an affable technique that he thinks is effective. The theater department doesn't offer any courses in public speech, per se, but does offer Acting I, II, & III which will teach the student ways to manipulate his voice in speaking and techniques for breathing while speaking. Any of these courses would be a good complement to one's efforts to become an adept public speaker.

The most effective means offered on this campus to become an effective speaker is to join the Debate Club. The Debate Club can help one learn to appreciate the balance between content and presentation. The team debates using the Parliamentary procedure. Teams of two compete using their oratorical daggers. The two teams take the pro or con side of a given resolution and debate it. It calls for establishing a speaking technique and using it. Oftentimes, the debate teams have several speaking techniques and will use the one they think is most appropriate given the resolution. The debates can be very serious or very funny or very philosophical. Resolutions to be debated can range from "Should the U.S. establish stronger trade tariffs with Japan?" to "Peanut butter is more important to a peanut butter and jelly sandwich than jelly is."

The Debate Club offers practice opportunities four times a week to hone one's public speaking techniques. The club promotes organizational skills in speaking. Debating a lot will also help to broaden one's vocabulary and help to foster one's analytic thinking ability. The team also faces-off regularly against the best teams in the country from the Ivy Leagues such as Harvard, Yale, and Princeton, and the more one gets to practice one's public speaking technique, as well as one's critical thought process, the better one will become at speaking.

VISITING SPEAKERS

Public speeches are not uncommon on campus, but frequently students complain that the University doesn't bring enough "big name" intellectuals or "big name" speakers to campus. But one must face the cold, hard fact that the William F. Buckleys of the world won't be dropping by Lewisburg any time soon. There has, however, been a revived interest in bringing "good" public speakers to campus; and it has taken shape in the very successful revived colloquium of last month. Students are becoming reinvolved in the forums and lectures outside of class in which critical ideas are bounced around and off the speaker. One would only hope to see this increased activism on such a highly apathetic campus increase with a concerted effort by the students to do the speaking themselves. Public speech is an integral part of the educational process in a university and the more the students find themselves doing the speaking, the better off we will be as an efficient and effective educational institution.

Bang for the buck: a cost/benefits analysis

As the Committee on Complementary Activities (CCA) and the Bucknell Student Government continue to discuss issues of funding with The Bucknellian, we believe it's time to focus on one of the most significant aspects of the debate: value for the dollar.

All newspapers have only two sources of revenue: advertising and subscriptions. The Bucknellian has recently exceeded even the most optimistic expectations for advertising revenue, yet advertising still comprises less than 40% of our budget. The remainder of our operating capital comes primarily from subscriptions, both off and on campus.

The on-campus yearly subscription rate is only $4.40 per student, which comes from the student activities fee we all pay each year. For those dollars, students, faculty, staff, and administrators receive 23 issues of The Bucknellian each academic year. Parents, alumni, and other off-campus subscribers pay $30 per year for the same service.

It is interesting to note that the $4.40 figure has not increased since 1988, yet the campus has witnessed marked improvements in The Bucknellian since then. The staff has expanded from two dozen to nearly 70 members, we have moved from tabloid-sized pages to full-size broadsheet, our graphic design is updated, the range of stories we cover is broader than ever before, and our writing is award-winning. $4.40 seems an incredible bargain for such a service.

Yet now the CCA is suggesting a reduction in the already low subscription rate to essentially $0 per student — a loss of nearly $15,000 to The Bucknellian each year. Were that reduction enacted, we would be forced to exploit every possible source of revenue available to us: we could raise advertising rates and increase what we charge off-campus subscribers, but most importantly we would have to collect money from those people on campus who want to receive The Bucknellian.

Any member of the Bucknell community wishing to read The Bucknellian would have to either subscribe or purchase a copy of the paper from the Bookstore, a newsstand, or a coin-operated honor box. Certainly the cost under such a scheme would be more than $4.40 per year.

And while the CCA claims that their only concerns are economic in nature, freedom of the press is truly at the heart of this discussion. A catastrophic withdrawl of funding would either force The Bucknellian to stop publishing altogether or would encourage it to become sensationalistic in order grab readers' attention.

We believe CCA's scheme is flawed on many levels: it separates The Bucknellian from the University with which is it inextricably entwined and it threatens to either stifle the free press completely or force Bucknellians to pay for their own newspaper.

Thus, we encourage the campus community to consider the value of a student newspaper: it's a source of information, a forum for debate, a hotbed of controversy, and a permanent record of this University and its dealings.

Is what you're holding worth less than three cents a day?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Supreme Court's philosophy debated

TO THE EDITOR:

In his remarkable letter to me in The Bucknellian, Evan Maloney has apparently convinced himself that my letter about Sen. Specter can be dismissed because I am a "frustrated liberal . . . hopelessly out of touch with the American electorate." Mr. Maloney chose to ignore the issue I addressed and to make the issue one of being in touch with political reality.

To this end he cites a fact: Polls showed public opinion in Thomas's favor two-to-one. That is a true fact, but it is irrelevant. Justices are not elected for exactly the reason that their popularity with the public (which is temporary at best, while the appointment is permanent) is much less important than their qualifications. The true fact that is relevant is that of the 24 Supreme Court nominees rated by the American Bar Association, Clarence Thomas was the least qualified of all: 24th out of 24. Mr. Maloney is in touch with what the Republicans have the power to do, but out of touch with the Constitution's concept of the Supreme Court.

The true fact that is relevant is that of the 24 Supreme Court nominees rated by the American Bar Association, Clarence Thomas was the least qualified of all: 24th out of 24.

As to my charge that Bush is packing the Court, Mr. Maloney suggests that presidents are supposed to reproduce their ideology on the Court. Wrong again. Their obligation is to create a Court that has the wisdom of diversity and balance. Franklin Roosevelt learned that the hard way. Truman and Eisenhower both appointed justices that were very different from their own political views because the Court needed the diversity and the expertise of these justices. Johnson and Nixon also made fairly thoughtful appointments, and none with the lightweight record of Thomas. Bush selected Thomas because of his ideological leanings, and that is called packing the Court.

If liberals are out of touch with the American electorate, more striking is Mr. Maloney's ill-informed letter, which is out of touch with political reality, not to say matters of principle. But of course the most out of touch of all is that new Supreme Court Justice who says he never discussed Roe v. Wade with anyone.

College Republican dismayed over Maloney

TO THE EDITOR:

I am a member of the National College Republicans and have recently joined the College Republicans of Bucknell. The College Republicans of Bucknell University defines its statement of purpose in its constitution to be: "To allow for the free and open exchange of conservative ideas and opinions in the belief that every Bucknell student has the right to hear and to be heard." Much to my consternation, I have found this statement of purpose to be in direct contrast to the way in which the organization is administered.

The President of the College Republicans of Bucknell, Evan Coyne Maloney, wrote this constitution, but he by no means promotes the exchange of ideas on campus. Evan Maloney constricts the exchange of ideas which promotes the destruction of critical thought. Mr. Maloney uses his position as President of the College Republicans as his soapbox for all to hear him. Mr. Maloney would rather hear his own voice than promote other student's rights to be heard.

As a member of the Bucknell College Republicans, I received a memo from Evan Maloney describing the several different committees he created to be part of the College Republicans. One of the groups he created is called the Infiltration Committee. The description of the committee, much to my shock, was presented as follows:

"The Infiltration committee members will be deleted from the official rolls of the College Republicans and assume the status of pseudo-liberals for the purpose of infiltrating the various left-wing groups on campus. The purpose of this committee is to gain information as to what these groups are planning. The Policy & Strategy Committee will then use this information to plan appropriate responses to their actions."

I attended the next meeting of the College Republicans to hear Mr. Maloney's explanation of this committee. Mr. Maloney stated that the purpose of the committee was to discover what groups like the Progressive Caucus were doing before they did them so that the College Republicans would be prepared to respond and even respond before the Progressive Caucus even acted. I couldn't believe what I was hearing and I got up and left. Who could imagine such extremes on this campus?

If this committee were to be successful in infiltrating and spying on other political groups on campus, it would represent one group restricting an open expression of ideas and exchange of viewpoints. Isn't the University supposed to be here to promote critical thought through the exchange of ideas? What does Mr. Maloney have to gain from such "insider" information? The answer is obvious: an audience!

Mr. Maloney uses the College Republicans as a vehicle of legitimacy. He can place the title of President of the College Republicans after his name (as he did in last week's editorial) and all of a sudden everything he says has a certain element of credibility behind it.

Indeed, at the first meeting of the College Republicans this year, Mr. Maloney referred to the group as "I" over and over again. He even said, "I will be using the College Republicans as a tool for being heard and offending liberals on campus." Mr. Maloney said it was a slip of the tongue but it is an awfully revealing slip.

Unfortunately for the College Republicans, Mr. Maloney and his friends that serve as the officers of the group will serve as the President and officers of the group until they graduate. The Constitution that Mr. Maloney wrote and pushed the group to accept without reading provides for all officers to serve until they see fit to resign the office.

Elections are only to be held upon the vacancy of an office. Aren't these convenient provisions in this constitution? And isn't it convenient that all of the current officers are sophomores? Mr. Maloney has ensured his status as a credible mouthpiece for the next three years.

Out of this credible mouthpiece come such "highly credible" statements as: "Those that don't succeed in life are Democrats and those that don't succeed in life teach." Mr. Maloney went on to say that this comment was just him being facetious and if you can't tell the difference that you probably deserve to be offended anyway.

Which brings me to my personal favorite quote from Mr. Maloney: "We should round up all of the people on welfare and take them to Nevada and shoot them." Well, I certainly don't think you are a mass-murderer or believe in mass-murder (although I'll know for sure after Halloween), Mr. Maloney, but comments like these tend to make one question your crēdibility. I can't tell if your being facetious or not, which probably means I don't have your sense of humor or I just deserve to be offended.

Mr. Maloney doesn't promote an exchange of ideas. Mr. Maloney promotes controversy for the sake of promoting his own reputation. Mr. Maloney attacks other groups and their beliefs by making derogatory comments about them. He doesn't debate the issues. It is very disheartening to an ardent Republican like myself to see the College Republicans shaped by a person that sacrifices substance to promote his own agenda.

The College Republicans need to reorganize and begin to promote an exchange of ideas and to promote critical thought.

Mr. Maloney just accepts the conservative, Republican doctrine without questioning it. If anyone needs to hear the opinions from the other side of the political fence, it is Evan Coyne Maloney. Mr. Maloney is the very person that could stand to gain from an effective critical exchange of ideas with the other side of the political fence.

Interestingly enough, Evan Maloney probably enjoys this editorial since it again places him in the middle of a controversy on campus. "Any publicity is good publicity so long as you spell my name right," is Mr. Maloney's stance. Well, Mr. Maloney, your name is mentioned 30 times in this editorial so you don't need to count.

Mr. Maloney will be given a chance to respond to this editorial in the next Bucknellian, and I will bet that Mr. Maloney will question my motives for writing this editorial. But being an ardent Republican and a member of the College Republican National Committee, I have found myself deeply torn over writing this letter. And I am sure that he will attack my character but Mr. Maloney doesn't even know who I am so any attack on my character would just prove my point.

My motives are simple. Mr. Maloney constricts effective politics on this campus in the way he runs the College Republicans. If I had discovered the Progressive Caucus operating in a fashion that restricted the exchange of ideas on campus I would have been equally offended and this letter would have been written with respect to the Progressive Caucus. The College Republicans need to reorganize and begin to promote an exchange of ideas to promote critical thought.

Perhaps the most disheartening part of this whole thing is that nobody else in the College Republicans has come forth before now. Surely the members can think for themselves rather than just conforming to whatever their officers promote as group doctrine.

OPINIONS

On the Pennsylvania Senate Race

BY ROB SCHROEDER AND DAVID BARRY

Calling all Pennsylvanians! If you're 18 or older, you've soon got a choice to make. It's election time for the Senate, that federal body of "representatives" who are supposed to tell the government what we want. The changing character of law in the United States, shamefully illustrated by the confirmation of Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court, demands citizen attention and action. Your vote in this election could prevent another such blunder.

The Pennsylvania Senate race pits a familiar figure against a fresh newcomer. It's former state governor Richard Thornburgh challenging former college president Harris Wofford. Thornburgh also happened to be George Bush's Attorney General, and Director of the Domestic Policy Council; two powerful positions indeed. Thornburgh has a reputation; a positive reputation in the minds of many Pennsylvanians. He's the local boy who made good. Or so his campaign ads tell us.

What politically-biased advertising doesn't tell us, however, is that Richard Thornburgh is corrupt. How many Pennsylvanians remember the Bank of Credit and Commerce International scam that rocked the administration's foundations, and sent shockwaves and scandal through the international economy? If Pennsylvanians and other Americans do remember, they certainly do not have Dick Thornburgh to thank. As Attorney General, Thornburgh all but ignored the BCCI issue. It was up to the press to wrench the story from the hands of the Feds, and get it out to the ears of the people. So much for trustworthiness of the government.

While Dick Thornburgh was running amuck in scandal, Harris Wofford was making it easier for people to go to college. Appointed Senator from Pennsylvania after the untimely death of John Heinz, Wofford's first bill introduced to the Senate proposed easier access to financial aid for middle class families. Wofford's agenda for America is timely, and sorely needed for our country's sagging economy and deteriorating infrastructure. Wofford envisions change and progress in social problems. What does Richard Thornburgh want?

Thornburgh certainly does not want justice for all. The reader might recall that the House was planning to pass a bill that would enforce stricter penalties upon perpetrators of white collar crimes: the S&L scam, for one. Thornburgh and the Justice Department blocked the stronger bill and submitted a weaker, watered-down version in its place: one that idly turns its back on white-collar money sprees. Thornburgh obviously does not find it wrong that the Milkens and Boeskys of the world write checks with other peoples' money. What kind of Attorney General allows his electorate to foot these bills? We are the ones, after all, who will pay.

Another issue is the hypocrisy of the Justice Department and its "war on drugs." We have been hearing for years that the department and the rest of the government are trying their best to stop the drug traffic and bring the dealers to trial. Why, despite all the rhetoric, did it take so long for the Justice Department to prosecute Manuel Noriega? It might have had something to do with the fact that, as long as Noriega supported the Nicaraguan contras, he could do whatever he pleased.

One month prior to the invasion of Panama, the Justice Department stated it would prosecute Noriega unless he gave more support to the Contras. Noriega refused. One month later he was indicted on drug charges. Unless we missed something, Dick Thornburgh did nothing to rid the Justice Department of this tinkering in foreign affairs. Nor did he do much to fight any kind of "war on drugs."

Additionally, Thornburgh has crushed abortion rights. His unanimous endorsement from the Pro-Life Federation Political Action Committee guarantees yet another blow to body rights, if he is elected. For those interested in these basic rights, Thornburgh initiated a program at the Justice Department to allow Operation Rescue (a pro-life activist organization which has current summons in many states for its activities) to blockade any clinic that it wants.

Operation Rescue also has the Justice Department's endorsement on this interesting issue: the group claims opposition to anyone getting an abortion. It is a universal, gender-blind principle, they say. Gender blind? Who but women can have abortions? According to the Operation Rescue logic, women cannot be discriminated against. This is an outrageous twisting of words for political gain. Who let it happen? Certainly not Harris Wofford, who is a known supporter of the right of a woman to have an abortion.

There are two candidates running for the Senate's empty seat. One is Richard Thornburgh, a man whose corruption has plagued the Justice Department like a virus, whose Pro-Life ties are powerful and influential, and who, by the way, would like to put that famous incinerator in your back yard.

The other candidate is Harris Wofford, a man who doesn't find toxic waste spills desirable, who supports choice, and who will push for nationalized health insurance. In this election, make the right choice: vote Wofford. Get the United States back on its feet.

Coffee with Alice

BY MARK LARSON

As the year 1992 quietly approaches us, I think it is important that we, as college students, begin to assess with renewed vigor the past, within which we have grown, the present, in which we have come of age, and the future, to which we will be held responsible. As we begin to accept these challenges, I suggest that we avoid falling into the boxes which our society has developed for us. We are living in a world full of problems, both old and new, which have combined in a magnitude hitherto unknown. Never before have we faced a global catastrophe comparable to the present combination of ecological crisis, world-wide poverty, overpopulation, religious fundamentalism, and ethnic and national rivalry. We must define for ourselves a new perspective through which we can understand ourselves in relation to the world we inhabit, and deal with the challenges that face us.

In defining our new perspective, I would suggest that we assume for ourselves an approach which is both radical and progressive. I realize that these words have been consistently used and abused by people on both ends of the political spectrum. However, I feel that we need to reclaim these words in their primary meaning, mainly a perspective which can adapt to change and address the root of our problems, rather than giving superficial, band-aid treatment to them. We need to realize that, for the most part, our older generations have failed us. They have been unwilling and/or unable to get to the bottom of things and deal effectively with the challenges that faced them. Consequently, we have inherited a world deeply divided against itself. Violence has become the norm. Violence against women, people of color, the poor, the sick, ourselves, and the living Earth itself. I have personally felt the bitter pain of this inheritance, and refuse to pass it on once again. Our task has been named and we must accept the responsibility involved.

I find it interesting that the new Republican claim is that "liberals" (whoever this ambiguous name is meant to address) are out of touch with the American people. I would have to challenge this assertion. I think that if we all sit down and think about it, we would have to agree that the truth is just the opposite. Is opening up the Alaskan nature preserves to unscrupulous oil companies for profits that none of us will ever see in touch with the American people? Would many of us really agree with spending billions of dollars on Stealth bombers and Star Wars, while people are not getting the health care and education that they need? How many of us agree with the use of race and gender as political weapons such as in the case of Clarence Thomas and Willie Horton? Realistically, I also think that most of us would agree that outlawing abortion is not the best way to solve the problem of unwanted pregnancy. I think we must realize that it is these people who are out of touch with us, and are not even asking us what we think. We cannot accept this!

We need to define our view together. We need to begin a dialogue which will begin this process of definition. Granted this dialogue will be difficult and diverse. But I would suggest that it can succeed if we unify ourselves around an approach which commits itself to respect and dignity for all people regardless of race, class, sex, sexual orientation, nationality, religion, etc, as well as for all species. We cannot allow ourselves to be compromised on any of these issues, or else we will fail. Our strength will come in the unity we gain in our own diversity.

Once we begin to participate in this dialogue, we must allow ourselves to be taken away by it. Once we begin to see things differently, we will have no choice but to do things differently. We will be different. Our actions and being will then speak for us and people will have to listen.

We all know the problems. Racism. Sexism. Environmental destruction. Hate crimes. Militarism. We do not need to argue about their existence. They are even discussed on MTV. What we need to understand is that we are running out of time. Things are not getting better, regardless of what the Dow Jones says. This is a difficult realization to accept. But we must. We can only put so much pressure on the world and ourselves before eventually we will both break. In fact, this breaking has already begun. So I invite you all to join in this challenge together. We cannot allow ourselves to be separated and forgotten by those who wish to retreat into the past, or are to committed to the status quo to change. Taik with people, think together, and act. Become radical and progressive in the best sense of the word. Once we do, we will succeed. I defy anyone to prove us wrong.

ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENT

West Branch fourteenth annual poetry festival this weekend

BY NICOLE COBBAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Fourteenth Annual Bucknell Poetry Festival will be held this weekend in the Stadler Center for Poetry in Bucknell Hall. Ten poets and one author will be on hand to conduct the workshops and readings.

The Festival is being run by Robert Taylor, English department chair at Bucknell, and Karl Patten, professor of English. Taylor and Patten are co-founders and co-editors of West Branch, a bi-annual literary magazine containing works of poetry and fiction. They started the Festival to bring together the staff of the magazine. Taylor reasons, "You publish in a literary magazine, you read the other poems. This gives them (the writers) the opportunity to share their work and meet in person." So far, according to Taylor, the workshops and readings have been very successful in accomplishing just that. "It has built a community of writers in the Susquehanna Valley." In addition to local writers, West Branch draws authors form New York, West Virginia, Washington, D.C., Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia.

The Festival begins tonight at 8:00 p.m. with a poetry reading. Each poet will read for about ten minutes, usually choosing from his or her most recent works. This will give students the opportunity to sample different styles and themes of poetry. Saturday morning at 9:00 the poets will be conducting a workshop. Each student is invited to bring ten copies of one or two of their poems for critiquing by the guest poets. Taylor feels that, "students should be encouraged to take advantage of the workshop. It's very beneficial and exciting." The workshop draws not just Bucknell students, but people from the surrounding communities as well.

At 10:30 a.m. the Festival will hold an open reading. Everyone is invited to come, sign up, and read their works in front of an audience. Students are encouraged to not just attend the reading, but to bring their own works for the experience of reading them to a group. According to Taylor, the turnout for the open reading is often unpredictable. "You never know who's going to show up. You get new people or people from small towns in the area."

Saturday afternoon's focus shifts to fiction as John Sandman will read his short story "Toby's Room," printed in the spring edition of West Branch. "Toby's Room" is a comical story about college life and creative writing. It traces a few days in the life of a man who pretends to be a talented writer, when actually he knows that he's about "two-hundred points dumber than every one else on campus."

Topping off Saturday are two more poetry readings at 3:30 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. During the 8:00 reading, the poets will be reading only their pieces which have been published in the most recent issues of West Branch. This year's guest poets are Bim Angst, Geraldine Connolly, Barbara Crooker, Valerie Fox, Robert Freedman, Harry Humes, Fleda Brown Jackson, Sandra Marshburn, Kimberly Peters, and Len Roberts.

All events will take place in the Stadler Center for Poetry, Bucknell Hall, and are open to the general public. The Poetry Festival is sponsored by the Bucknell Association for the Arts, the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, and Bucknell's English department. Students are urged to attend any or all of the Festival's events.

Dept. of Theatre and Dance offers an enchanting dream

BY JEAN PETERSON

With a sprinkle of fairy-dust and the sparkle of moonbeams, the Department of Theatre and Dance's production of Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream opened during Parents' Weekend to delighted laughter and applause. Directed by guest artist Kate Pogue; with scenic design by F. Elaine Williams; lighting by Steven A. Draheim; costumes by Bucknell graduate Elizabeth Kalbach-Phelps '83; and playing nightly to an auditorium packed to capacity, Shakespeare's comedy of love, madness, and mayhem on a summer night enchanted and entertained.

One could say that the Bucknell actors had a tough act to follow—the same play produced by a professional touring company, directed by noted artist Joe Dowling, was performed only a week before the opening. To make matters even more potentially intimidating, The Acting Company's Dream was the utter antithesis of Pogue's conception of the play; the professionals offered a flamboyantly brash reading that drew much (sometimes shocked) laughter by drawing on the imagery of contemporary popular culture. In contrast, Bucknell's production is dominated by moonlight, and draws its visual inspiration from the illustrations of 19th Century artist Arthur Rackham. A more marked contrast between the David Lynch outrageousness of Dowling's show and the gently, idealized lyricism of Pogue's can hardly be imagined.

Yet despite—or perhaps because of—this challenge, the Bucknell actors shine. The opening scene of Dowling's production was marked by angry sputtering and the violent clash of offstage percussion instruments, Pogue's begins with the silhouette of a man and a woman against a moonlit sky. The tone of the play is immediately set by sophomore Joshua D. Brinen's gently commanding Thesus and his love, freshman Wendy Millman's confident Hippolyta, a woman very much his equal (and, as the play wittily hints in a later scene, is better at a thing or two, including aiming a bow and arrow). But the concord and harmony of these royal lovers is at once interrupted by Brian Vettoso's '95 irascible dad, "full of complaint" against his daughter Hermia (a strong performance by Britt L. Luzzi '94), who refuses to wed the suitor picked for her (James Gregory Amlicke's '93 Demitrius) because she loves another (Lysander, convincingly played by Marc Haimes '93). To this classic situation of young love obstructed, Hermia and Lysander choose the obvious solution—elopement—but their plans are further complicated by the plotting of Jennifer M. Breheny's '94 hilariously lovelorn Helena, whose frustrated love for Demetrius adds both to the play's confusion and to its happy resolution.

The premise of the play itself—as even Shakespeare remarks, calling it a "weak and idle theme"—could not be sillier: the confusion ensues when these mortal lovers and rivals meet, mix, and quarrel in the wood at night, with a little supernatural help from their counterparts, the denizens of the Fairy world. Oberon, the Fairy King (marvelously played by David B. Ames '94), embroiled in a romantic conflict of his own, a marital spat with Jill E. Emery's '92 fiery Titania, orchestrates further confusion for all with the assistance of mischievous Puck (the almost unbelievably agile James R. Smith '95). And into this delicately rendered world of gossamer-clad fairies, music, and magic love-spells come galumphing the play's comic coup-de-grace: a troupe of rustic workingmen, passionately sincere lunkheads whose efforts to rehearse a play bring them unwittingly into Puck and Oberon's comic drama. As the poor man's matinee idol, Nick Bottom, John B. Pfeiffer, Jr. '92, is utterly hilarious, and the supporting performances of Marke Minsavage '94, Kevin Klaus '94, Alex Yastremski, Matthew J. Ulterino '92 and Reed Stewart '92 all but steal the show, incontrovertible evidence of the theatrical adage that "there are not small parts."

Pogue's talented cast is complemented by the visual beauty of F. Elaine William's set and Steven A Draheim's lighting, and the costumes by Elizabeth Kalbach-Phelps provide the final touch of color and texture—subtly commenting on the play's separate and connecting worlds. Thus the inhabitants of the Athenian court are marked by rich fabrics and deep colors, the Fairy folk are clad in gauze and silver, and the "hempen homespuns"—as Puck jeeringly refers to the rustics—demonstrate their crudeness by their dress. These contrasts are further emphasized by the show's quick high-jinx, and outright slapstick in a merry "concord of... discord." Adding to the pleasure of the whole is that the young actors speak Shakspeare's language with a natural ease that makes it accessible (many members of the audience last week remarked that — to their surprise — they "understood" and enjoyed Shakespeare for the first time).

Prince's Diamonds and Pearls among his best

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

If you have seen the video for Prince's new song "Cream," you might think that he has not changed a bit over the years.

Album Review

Once again, he has put racy choreography and lewd lyrics to one of those melodies you think you have known all your life. What most people consider vulgar has always been the sensual to Prince. While "Cream" is keeping with this tradition, there is clearly a different tone taken throughout the remainder of his new album, Diamonds and Pearls. In addition to a broader range of topics, Prince actually allows other musicians to take the spotlight for a change. The result is a diverse collection of dance and pop tracks with the added dimension of rap.

Prince has joined forces with The New Power Generation, an offshoot band from the Graffiti Bridge soundtrack, to create a number of gems on Diamonds and Pearls. In addition to "Cream," there are two fast-paced grooves that will keep listeners grinding on the dance floor. "Thunder," the album's first track, creates a powerful sound with its gospel chorus. "Willing and Able," is a smoother, soul-infused number that features an effective rap by Tony M. toward the song's close.

These faster tracks are supplemented by a number of softer songs. The title track, "Diamonds and Pearls," is greatly enhanced by the vocals of Rosie Gaines. The joyful little number "Strollin" may contain the most innocent rhyme Prince has ever recorded. Did you ever imagine you would hear him say, "We can have fun just strollin'"? Among other strong tracks, "Money Don't Matter 2 Night" and "Give for Love" come to mind with their forceful anti-war themes.

There are only two songs that seem badly out of place on this album. "Get Off," which failed miserably as the first single release, and "Jughead" are the cubic zirconia stones of Diamonds and Pearls. Both are rap/dance oriented. While rap cannot be discounted as a valid form of musical and cultural expression, neither of these songs do justice to the art. It's nice to see Prince give up center stage for a change, but this is not the best way for him to do it.

Collectively, Diamonds and Pearls is right up there with Prince's best efforts, including Sign O' the Times and Purple Rain. Granted the faces and focus has changed, but Prince seems to be heading into the '90's with aspirations for the same impact he had in the '80's. Listeners will appreciate the depth of instrumentation and vocals. This was undoubtedly a group effort.

Swedish Orchestra to perform tonight at the Weis Center

BY LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Making its first U.S. tour, the Swedish Orchestra of Helsingborg will be joined by the internationally-recognized, award-winning cellist, Torleif Thedéen, at tonight's performance in the Weis Center.

Founded in 1912, the orchestra made its first tour outside Scandinavia three years ago, performing in Schauspielhaus, Berlin. Under the direction of Hans-Peter Frank, the orchestra is now regarded as one of the most prominent in Sweden and has come to the states following highly-touted tours of Poland and Czechoslovakia.

Called "a huge talent" with "technical authority and breadth of vision" by the London Times, Thedéen made international news at the age of 23 by winning in the same year three of the world's most prestigious competitions for cello—the Hammer-Rostropovich prize in Los Angeles, the Pablo Casals competition in Budapest, and the TIJI Tribune for Young Interpreters in Bratislava.

Considered to be one of today's fastest-rising young cello virtuosi, Thedéen has performed with major orchestras and conductors throughout Europe. As a member of the Stockholm Arts Trio, he has toured the U.S. annually since 1988, giving concerts in Merkin Hall and Carnegie Hall in New York. In addition to touring with the Swedish Orchestra of Helsingborg during the 1991–92 season, he will perform with the Philharmonic Orchestra in London, the Belgian Radio Orchestra, and the Orchestre National de France.

Tonight's concert will feature Thedéen in Dmitri Shostakovich's Cello Concerto No. 1 in E-flat Major. The program will also include Beethoven's revolutionary "Eroica" Symphony (Symphony number 3) and a Concert Overture by Lars-Erik Larsson, one of Sweden's best-loved and most frequently-performed composers.

Tickets are $10 and may be purchased at the Weis Center box office prior to the 8 p.m. performance.

The Fisher King: fiction for the open-minded

– Movie Review–

The Fisher King, Rated R.– Terry Gilliam brings us yet another wonderful, offbeat story. Jeff Bridges and Robin Williams star in this "delicately romantic and funny" film that draws together Arthurian legend with the reality of daily life using the common thread of romance.

BY PAT MCCORMICK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Something happens when you walk into a movie theater to see a film directed by Terry Gilliam. Whether taking us to the future in Brazil, or leading us on a journey with a group of misfits in Time Bandits, he never leads his audience through a cumbersome and redundant story. In The Fisher King, Gilliam takes his audience to the land where "nobody looks up," says Jeff Bridges (The Fabulous Baker Boys, The Last Starfighter), who plays a popular "shock" talk radio D.J., while scaling the wall of a billionaire's mansion in search of the Holy Grail.

Sound a little confusing? What if you were told that a visionary bum named Perry, played by Robin Williams (Awakenings), who gets chased throughout the film by a Medieval warrior called The Red Knight, asked him to do it? Knowing a little bit about Gilliam as a director, it isn't surprising: it's expected. Gilliam portrays the shallow, self-serving life of a rich media giant, the forgotten underground of New York's down and out, and the fantastical world of The Red Knight, which, for Perry, manifests itself to remind him of the reality of the life he once led.

The Fisher King isn't solely dominated by its unusual story, and if it hadn't been for the strength of the two lead actors and the supporting cast, the film may not have worked at all. Mercedes Ruehl and Amanda Plummer play the respective love interests of Bridges and Williams. Plummer, who is a plain-faced turnbleweed named Lydia, is pushed aside by the fast-paced city each day on her way to lunch. She eats Chinese dumplings and a jawbreaker before she forces her way through the revolving door of a publishing office to get back to her job. In one of the film's best scenes, Perry religiously follows her through Grand Central Station, an event repeated at the same time every day.

As Ruehl and Bridges get these two characters together, The Fisher King is delicately romantic and funny. When Perry realizes that his love is reciprocated, the film turns gruesome and horrifying. Sure, Williams dances naked in Central Park and scares off assailants with a rendition of "New York in June." Who wouldn't? And no, the Medieval legend is not accurate. When I hear criticism like this, it reminds me of the time I was watching Edward Scissorhands, and the guy behind me said, "Yeah, like he could really make all that snow out of an ice sculpture." To him and those who couldn't open their minds long enough to excuse the fiction and see the heart of The Fisher King, I say, you've missed the point entirely.

Star Trek creator dies

BY CHRIS BIRD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Gene Roddenberry, the man who brought Star Trek into our lives, homes, and hearts, died last Thursday of a heart attack at Santa Monica Hospital in California at the age of 70.

In 1966, Roddenberry created a television show that influenced the ideas of a generation. Four centuries from now, we will be travelling in starships to far-off galaxies, meeting intelligent new species and interacting with their foreign societies. The future he foresaw was of a united and peaceful planet Earth which promoted civil and women's rights. Brandon Tartikoff, Chairman of Paramount Pictures, said, "Few ideas in the annals of motion picture and television history have inspired more passion and allegiance on the part of an audience than has Star Trek."

Gene Roddenberry was born on August 19, 1921, the son of a cavalry officer stationed at Fort Bliss, Texas. He majored in engineering at U.C.L.A. and later joined the Army Air Corps, fighting 89 missions in Guadalcanal during World War II. After the war, he became an airline pilot and studied literature at Columbia University. A near-fatal plane crash in 1949 ended his flying career and Roddenberry moved to Los Angeles and joined the L.A.P.D. while writing scripts for television on the side. He sold his first script in 1951, and his first science fiction script the next year. Roddenberry went on to use his law enforcement background to write for Dragnet and later became head writer of the western Have Gun, Will Travel.

Star Trek debuted in 1966 and ran for three years on NBC. Roddenberry then went on to do other shows while Star Trek began to gain popularity in syndication. In 1979, Roddenberry reunited the crew of the Enterprise for a big screen mission: Star Trek–The Motion Picture. There have been four more movies since then which have grossed a total of over $400 million. Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country, the final mission with the original crew, will open across the nation in early December. He also produced the new series, Star Trek: The Next Generation, which is now in its fifth season and is seen in over 12 millon households weekly.

Roddenberry has inspired in "Trekkers" a camaraderie that will live forever. People across the world mourn together over the death of this great mind. He will always live long and prosper within our hearts.

Faculty sets aside books for athletics

BY SCOTT ALBRIGHT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

For a student waking up at quarter after seven in the morning in order to go to an eight o'clock Calculus class, a professor many times appears to be a lifeless robot spitting out a bunch of unrelated letters and numbers with perhaps a few tired jokes mixed in between. In fact, some students would probably argue that their professors fit the above description during all hours of the day.

However, as incomprehensible as it might seem to some, professor are human, and furthermore (are you ready for this?), they do have lives outside the classroom.

One of the things professors here do when they're not scribbling on a chalkboard and making life miserable for students in general, is take advantage of the facilities and scenery here at Bucknell and exercise. Below is a small sampling of 'profs' and the activities they enjoy, at varying degrees of seriousness, when not working.

Walking into the office of Professor Ronald Ziemian, one of the newest additions to Bucknell faculty (this is his first semester here), one first notices books: engineering books, mathematics books, lots and lots of books. But then suddenly, if one is perceptive, a flash of color will catch the eye.

Almost hidden by a variety of thick, dusty texts is a bright poster of Ziemian's secret passion: cycling. Because of his newly acquired academic responsibility, Ziemian currently is riding only three to four times a week.

In the coming spring, the engineering professor hopes to get out six days a week which will translate into about 150 miles of cycling a week. Ziemian described the rolling hills of Pennsylvania as being perfect for long distance cycling due to the scenery and the fact that the terrain provides an excellent challenge for a cyclist in training.

For Ziemian, cycling is more than just a form of exercise. It's a chance to experience the competition he used to enjoy as a long distance runner before he encountered knee problems in college. "There's certainly no comparison to being in a bike race in a pack of about 25 riders," explained Ziemian, "and you're going down a hill at about 60 miles an hour and your tires are about six inches away... from the guy in front of you. You just know that if one person goes down, you're going to have a lot of hurt people. It's a total rush. There's just no better way to explain it."

Another faculty member who takes his form of physical exercise more seriously than most is the acting chair of the engineering department, Professor David Cartwright. Running in (which I hope he doesn't mind me mentioning) the fifty-year old age group, Cartwright runs in races varying in length from 5K to 100 miles (no, that's not a 'typo', 100 miles). He also occasionally participates in triathalons. Cartwright has competed in such well-known races as the Boston, New York, London and Washington marathons. In the latter on numerous occasions, he has placed in the top five out of a field of approximately 600 in his particular age group.

Cartwright began running at the age of 37 when he was teaching at the University in South Hampton, England. He recalled noticing, at the time, that many of his colleagues in their fifties had become "relatively sedentary" and that he did not want be like that when he was their age. Now, at 52, running about fifty miles a week in training, swimming three to four times a week (before he was just recently given the added responsibilities of the department chair) and regularly competing in marathons, 100-milers and triathalons, it's safe to say that he did a pretty good job in keeping that promise to himself.

Economics Professor Nancy White also used to run competitively; but now she tries to run every day more as a way to relieve stress, along with trying to keep in shape physically. "Since I'm not competing, running is more of a liberating experience," said White. "I can go out, and when I'm on the road, I'm a part of a bigger universe and so that helps me keep events of the day in perspective. That's really important."

Professor Carmen Acuna, also a teacher of economics, describes herself as a "fanatic aerobic person." Three to four times a week, Acuna attends the noon aerobics class that meets in the field house. Like White, Acuna also finds the exercise as an effective means of relieving stress. She seems not able to get enough of the activity as she owns numerous aerobic tapes at home, along with one of those "cross country ski machines." Said Acuna simply, "I found that aerobics is just something that I really like."

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Professor of Engineering Larry Younkin utilizes his spare time by playing racquetball, as well as completing a daily regimen of walking. Younkin is one of many members of the Bucknell community who regularly leave the confines of their office to exercise and compete in various athletic endeavors.

Other professors interviewed find time to exercise, but in a much more passive sense, often, due to time restraints. Engineering Professor Charles Knisely, who enjoys playing squash three to four times a week, noted, "The biggest problem is finding someone whose schedule is compatible with mine so we can find a common time to play." Professor Larry Younkin, also of engineering, likes to play racquetball when he can, but finds that he gets most of his exercise from walking his dog once a day and even from walking the three flights of stairs up to his office in the Dana Engineering building several times daily.

So there you have it: proof, in at least one respect, that your professors do not run on batteries, that they do not have a little wind-up key attached to their backs. Everyone needs to find some type of exercise to remain both physically and mentally fit and the faculty here at Bucknell are certainly doing so, in a variety of different ways.

Nutrition expert speaks to Bucknell student-athletes

Alan Levin from Marywood College addresses issue of proper diet

BY JAKE KAZANJIAN

On Sunday, Oct. 27 in Vaughan Lit Auditorium, the Bucknell Athletic Department sponsored Alan M. Levin, director of graduate studies in foods and nutrition at Marywood College, to speak to the Bucknell student-athlete population on "Nutrition and Athletic Performance."

Levin, through an open question-and-answer seminar, presented the myths and suggested advisable ways to eat for maximum performance. What Levin stressed in his talk was the importance of carbohydrate intake and fluid replacement.

For the athlete, Levin presented an easy way to eat: 60-70% carbohydrates, 15-25% proteins, and 5-10% fats. To put it simply, Levin stated, "You should be able to look at your plate and have at least 2/3 of it be simple and complex carbohydrates."

The significance of carbohydrates in the diet for the athlete is that when carbohydrates are consumed by the athlete, the body breaks them down to glucose. The glucose is then put into the bloodstream and transported to many parts of the body, including muscles, where it is stored as glycogen. This muscle glycogen gives us the energy to perform during athletic events. Foods that are high in carbohydrates include starches, grains, potatoes, certain fruits such as apples and bananas, and even pizza.

Levin advised us to stay away from the myth of consuming a lot of protein. High fat and protein intakes can delay gastric emptying and aggravate dehydration. However, you should not avoid such protein-rich foods as meat, beans, nuts and cheese entirely. Levin gave a simple tip as to estimate how much protein you should be intaking daily: Take your body weight, divide it in half, and the result should be, in grams, how much protein you should ingest daily.

Levin also presented guidelines for fluid intake and fluid replacement before, during, and after activity. Levin felt that the best fluids to utilize for maximum performance were: water, a fluid replacement drink such as Exceed or Gatorade, or juice. The student athletes were told to stay away from caffeinated beverages such as coffee and soda, along with alcohol, which promotes dehydration. Before a scheduled workout (1-2 hours), Levin suggested drinking predominantly water to prevent dehydration.

During activity one should not deny him/herself liquids. Levin told us that during strenuous activity, our sense of thirst is not entirely active so it is advisable to take in fluids even if you are not thirsty. Fluid replacement drinks are very important during this active time since they replace lost electrolytes, provide glucose, and carbohydrates for the athlete.

Immediately after strenuous activity, we were advised to drink two cups of fluid per pound of lost body weight. It is sensible to continuously consume fluids during the day; the most important being water, since it has no calories or fat, promotes adequate hydration, flushes the system clean, and it keeps weight down.

A peculiar topic that was exposed was the use of erogenic aids, such as bee pollen, ginseng, and carnitine. These aids are supposed to enhance energy and increase performance. Levin felt that although these aids have not been disproven, they have not proved to provide a sufficient difference in performance, and consequently are not needed in our diet. To quote Levin, "Really all that is needed is a diet very high in carbohydrates right on through: before, during, and after an event."

> Really all that is needed is a diet very high in carbohydrates right on through: before during and after an event.
> — Alan M. Levin Nutritionist

One topic that could be of particular interest to the student-athlete population was how to eat out and still watch what we eat. Levin warned the audience to watch for key words such as boiled, charbroiled, broiled, marinated, steamed, in its own juice, grilled, and to avoid fried foods or those with gravy or heavy sauce. He also advised that when eating at McDonald's or other fast food restaurants (which happens often on away trips) to choose the grilled chicken sandwiches without mayonnaise, the salad bar, and 2% milk as the staple meal to watch caloric and fat intake.

Although not having an absolute guideline for a pregame meal, Levin felt that the athlete should eat what he/she feels will allow them to win. That meal, however, should be high in carbohydrates, easily digestible, have proper fluid intake, and not include gas-forming foods. The meal should provide for maximum comfort for the athlete. If his/her mind is in their stomach, they will not perform up to par.

Levin presented a practical way to eat correctly, a way all people can follow with relative ease. He showed that a simple diet high in complex carbohydrates, low in fats and adequate fluid intake can take an athlete a long way on the road to superior performance on the gridiron, the diamond, the basketball court, and the track.

Football prepares for league foe Colgate after week off

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's football team will return to action this week after a week's respite. It has been a difficult season for the Bison who have suffered through injuries to some key veterans as well as inconsistent play from some younger players. The Bison will drive strongly toward the finish of the season this Saturday at Andy Kerr Stadium on the campus of Colgate Universtiy.

Colgate is experiencing a season quite similaar to that of the Bison. The Red Raiders finished last season with a 7–4 mark but lost seven starters of their offensive unit. Colgate enters Saturday's contest with a 2–5 mark on this season.

Colgate recorded an impressive 31–13 win at Cornell in the last week of September, and just last week tallied its second win of the season (25–12) over Fordham. Despite the pair of wins, Colgate has suffered its share of humiliation this season especially in the first three weeks when it was blown out by Norhteastern, Army, and Duke by a combined score of 128–46.

Though both teams are struggling this season, recent history would indicate that this should be a very competitive matchup. Three of the last five games between the Bison and the Red Raiders have been decided by one point. Last season Colgate beat the Bison in perhaps the most exciting game of the year.

With time running out, the Bison orchestrated a flawless touchdown drive to pull within one point at 28–27. Head coach Lou Maranzana elected to go for a two-point conversion which failed as Todd Hatajik's '91 pass fell incomplete. The Bison came out ahead in 1986 with a 40–39 victory in 1986, but was also on the losing end in 1988 14–13.

There have been some interesting developments in the Bison camp in the past two weeks. With Travis Kopp '95 having won the starting quarterback position, former starter Jeff Kelly '92 has been practicing in the defensive secondary.

Kelly started every game of his sophomore season in the defensive backfield and recorded 41 tackles and a team-high three interceptions. Though coach Maranzana has not confirmed the move yet, the Bison secondary has been devastated by injuries to key personnel and may benefit from the experience Kelly offers.

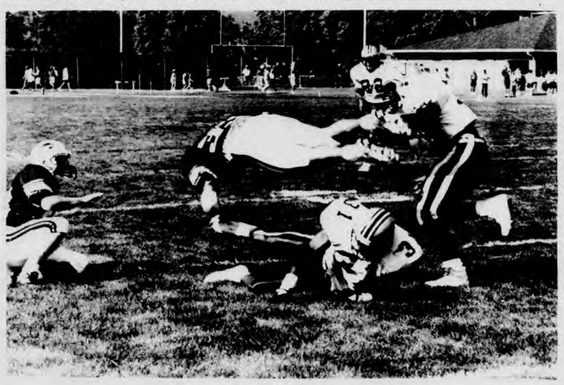
Though it has been a tough year for the team, two seniors are closing in on some individual high-water marks. Brian Henesey '92 has gained 2459 yards rushing in his career. That leaves him in second place on the all-time rushing list just 163 yards behind Brad Meyers '53.

Linebacker John Spatafore '92 registered ten tackles two weeks ago against Princeton. He now has 331 tackles on his career and is in third place on the all-time list. He needs to make 39 tackles in the next three weeks to move past Joe Catalano '81 and Mark Wismiewski '86 into first place on the all-time list. Though this presents a difficult challenge, don't count out the durable co-captain who has been the Bison's steadiest performer.

This Saturday represents the last of a four-game road trip. The Bison would like to try and salvage one win and build some momentum for the final two games which will be at Christy Mathewson Stadium.

The team will don the little-used home blue jerseys against Holy Cross and Lehigh in those final two weeks in two Patriot League contests. These are the two teams that appear to be the main challengers for the league title.

Holy Cross seems to have taken the upperhand with their exciting, last-second 43–42 victory at Lehigh as Engineer quarterback, Glen Kempa's two-point conversion pass fell incomplete. Kempa and Cross quarterback, Tom Ciaciano were both named league players of the week. These last two weeks will give Bucknell a chance to spoil another school's dream of a League title.



Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Bison tailback Brian Henesey '92 dives for a first down in action earlier this season against Villanova at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium. Football's co-captain has gained 496 yards this season leaving him 163 yards shy of Bucknell's all-time rushing record.

V-Ball drops pair of league matches

Lady Bison to face Colgate in two weeks at Patriot League Championships

BY DON REINHART
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's volleyball team dropped two straight Patriot League matches last weekend. In it's opening match against Fordham, the Bison could not handle a strong defensive team and lost in three straight games. With only one win in the league, Bucknell will face undefeated Colgate at the Patriot League Championships in two weeks.

The Bison played flat against Fordham last Friday, as they could not put away their offensive attacks. The team totaled only 21 kills, while tallying 24 reception errors. Kara Forosisky '92 was the sole Bison offensive standout with eight kills. Amy Miller '95 and Dee Scinta '93 both played tough defense with seven digs each; but despite playing well defensively, the Bison could not mount an attack and failed to put points on the board. They dropped the match 15–9, 15–6, 15–7.

Fordham played a tight defensive game, returning everything Bucknell put over the net. This slowed the Bison tempo, forcing them to play their opponents' game. Assistant coach Ann Marie Larese commented, "We played defense well but had to play their style of ball."

Bucknell dropped their next contest on Saturday to the Cadets. Though they lost by scores of 15–5, 15–13, 15–3, the scores, in Larese's view, did not reflect Bucknell's efforts. The points were played hard and a few errors gave Army the breaks they needed to bag the match. Bucknell played a solid game but could not overcome the Patriot League powerhouse. Larese added, "We didn't have the firepower to win the match."

Forosisky again provided the Bucknell offensive punch with six kills, while Meg Kinney '93, also tallied six kills. Aubrey Schneggenburger '95 held up the defensive end with eight digs, but a slew of reception errors again proved to be the Bison's downfall.

After this weekend's matches with host Columbia, and non-league opponent Seton Hall, the team will head into the final stage of the season: the Patriot League Championships. Bucknell's first-round match will be against undefeated Colgate, to whom the Bison fell previously. Bucknell finished the season in the basement underneath Holy Cross, but the team is optimistic about their chances in the league tournament.

Bucknell played its final game of the weekend against Chaminade, a team from Hawaii. Since the game would determine who would take 11th place at the tournament, it was an important one for both teams. Bucknell dominated the first three quarters and was ahead 9–5 with five minutes remaining in the game.

Then disaster struck. Early in the fourth quarter, Bucknell simply fell apart both offensively and defensively. Chaminade quickly took advantage of the situation and scored four unanswered goals to bring the game to a 9–9 tie. With 0:30 left to play, the score was still deadlocked when Schroth was fouled by a Chaminade player. With 0:01 left, Schroth used his free throw to pass across the pool to Brown, who scored as the clock ran out, sealing a 10–9 victory, and 11th place for the Bison.

> We learned a lot, not only by playing tough teams, but also by watching a number of great games
> — Jim Harvey, Head Coach

Kelly played a great game against Chaminade, contributing four goals to the winning effort. Brown also had two other goals prior to his game-winner, and Schroth added two of his own. Dan Killinger '92 lent a hand as well, scoring the remaining Bison point. Other notable statistics include five important assists by Schroth and a staggering 16 saves by Bradbury.

Regarding their California experience, Harvey feels that: "We learned a lot, not only by playing tough teams but also by watching a lot of great games." He believes that the greatest difference between East and West Coast teams lies in the intensity that the West Coast teams put into every aspect of their game, a goal that Bucknell has been working toward this past week in preparation for the upcoming Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships to be held this weekend.

Last week, the Bison secured a third seed at MACs by virtue of goal differentials over Princeton and Iona. The impact of that fact has become more apparent since the Bucknell men will now first face sixth seed Villanova, a team that they have beaten by a five-goal margin once already this year. The Bison need only to win their first game at MACs to advance to the Eastern Collegiate Championship Tournament next weekend. Bucknell has not been to Easterns in the past two years, and getting there was a goal that the team established at the beginning of the season. "This [MACs] is the weekend that we've been looking forward to all year," says Harvey. "If we stay focused and limit our mental lapses, I think we could beat any team in the East." The Bison hope to do just that, as they aspire to upset top-seeded Slippery Rock and Navy at Annapolis this weekend.

easy to work with. She could play doubles with anyone and play tough."

Coach Ewan also spoke well of Stagliano's longtime doubles partner and fellow senior Mary Ann Benack. "Mary Ann played her first three years at the tough number one spot, and probably had the best record there of anyone I've ever coached. She also doesn't play a power game of tennis, she's just been a positive role model since coming to Bucknell.

"Each of her years at number one, she made it to the semi-finals of the tournament, and made it this year at number three. I think she would have had a great shot at winning the title this year, but she was plagued by the flu all weekend and couldn't play her best."

The pair will be missed by coach and peers alike, as next year's freshman-dominated team will be without the experienced leadership of these seasoned veterans. However, on the basis of their performance this year, followers of the Bucknell women's tennis team can expect more excitement for next year and into the future.

Men's soccer shuts out Robert Morris, 1–0

BY ANDY LABOVITZ
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's soccer team showed a drastic improvement in its play this past week, playing to two consecutive 1–0 scores. Last Saturday the Bison defeated Robert Morris in an exciting battle before falling to a powerful Penn State squad.

The Bison thrilled a huge Parents' Weekend crowd with an exhilarating 1–0 victory over the Robert Morris Colonials. Coach Craig Reynolds' team showed a marked increase in hustle and level of intensity throughout the game. The first half was scoreless, but not due to a lack of scoring chances for Bucknell.

The Bison controlled play much of the half and had numerous solid scoring opportunities, but were unable to convert any of them. Both teams played a physical game, which led to a high-intensity battle as indicated by the four yellow cards assessed during the game for unsportsmanlike conduct. The second half was very much like the first, with Bucknell controlling play on both halves of the field, but being unable to put the ball into the net.

Just when it looked as if the fans would be treated to an overtime period in a scoreless contest, lightning struck in the form of Bison leading scorer, Greg Beatty '95. Beatty's goal, on a pretty pass from Leon Hayduchok '94, caused a team celebration on the field and a crowd ovation on the sideline. The goal came with less than five minutes remaining in the contest, and the Bison were able to hold on for a well-deserved victory. Evidence of Bucknell's dominance in this game is in the shot differential. The Bison launched 17 shots on goal during the game, while the Colonials managed only 6. Mark Wrigley '94 was solid in goal with four saves while recording his third shutout of the season.

The contest with Penn State had a similar story but a different ending. Bucknell didn't dominate this game, but more than held its own against a Nittany Lion team which had 12 returning lettermen. The only goal of the game was scored 32 minutes into the first half by Penn State sophomore Nigel Sparks, who is a member of the Canadian Olympic soccer team. Wrigley played an excellent game in goal, recording seven saves, giving up just the one goal to Sparks on a three on two Penn State rush. The Nittany Lion defense managed to stifle the Bison offense, which did not generate as many scoring opportunities as it did against Robert Morris.

Bucknell closes out its season this week with a game at the Naval Academy before returning home for the season finale against Drexel.

Athlete of the Week

Allie Zadroga—The Bucknellian

Danielle Ward '93

Field hockey's goalkeeper, Danielle Ward '93, has been named The Bucknellian's Athlete of the Week, marking the second time she has earned the award. She also was selected for her phenomenal play last season.

Last week the junior was named Patriot League Player of the Week, the second member of the squad to be so named. For the season, Ward has tended the net for the Lady Bison during all but ten minutes, making 121 saves while allowing only 16 goals. She has a .883 save percentage and an impressive 1.03 goals-against average, ranking her second in the league.

The most notable of her accomplishments occured last week against Georgetown, as the junior recorded her sixth shutout of the season, tying the Bucknell single season mark.

Ward has three more chances to top this record, including tomorrow's contest at West Chester and a home match aginst Ursinus on Sunday.

Women's Rugby notches first of year

BY MITCH BENTON
Bucknellian Staff Wrtier

Parents were in for quite a treat last weekend as the Bucknell women's Rugby team earned its initial victory of the season. Bucknell followed their season-opening 6–4 heartbreaking loss to Scranton with a shutout of West Chester University.

The lady ruggers took control of the match almost from the opening kickoff, pinning W.C.U. deep in the zone for most of the 45-minute opening period. Despite its apparent dominance, Bucknell was almost held scoreless for the duration of the half. The squad would continually win possession of the ball but were unable to cross the try line. After many similar attempts, the team's scrumhalf Cathi Hafer GR, broke through the defensive wall for the initial try, making the score 4–0.

That score remained through halftime, but the All-Blacks, so named after the famous New Zealand team, came out in the second period ready to put the match away. Much as in the first half, Bucknell dominated early and kept play in the West Chester end for much of the rest of the game.

The home squad broke through again midway through the half as Melissa MacLeod '93 took the ball from the successful scrum and outraced a defender to the corner of the zone. The fouled conversion attempt left the score at 8–0.

The score would not be the last for the suddenly aggressive All-Blacks, as the squad continued their dominance. Bucknell again won possession from a deflated West Chester team and quickly moved it out to the wing, where Ruthie Davies '93 sprinted through the defense and dove past the W.C.U. fullback for the match's final tally and a 12–0 score.

Said the All-Black co-captain Karen Beck '93, forced out of action with an injury, "We didn't know what to expect from West Chester, but I thought we played well. We dominated play for most of the match and kept putting pressure on them."

The squad's other co-captain and second-year president, Kerry Steckler '93 added, "I'm proud that the team was able to bounce back from last week. I just hope we can keep it up throughout the rest of the year."

The All-Blacks will try to improve upon their 1–1 record by taking on Bryn Mawr on Swartz Field, tomorrow at 1:00 p.m.

Effective Monday, November 4, all athletic facility users must show a valid Bucknell identification to use any/all facilities. This policy includes faculty, staff and students as well as all other facility users. Due to a large number of unauthorized persons using the facility, our own Bucknell students and staff have been unable to use the facilities as they should. In addition, we have experienced thefts, injuries, and other problems that are associated with unauthorized use of the athletic facilities. We would appreciate the cooperation of everyone who uses the area by showing your identification each time you enter the buildings. We are confident that this policy will make the facilities safer and more "useable" for the Bucknell community. Thank you in advance for your cooperation.

Parents' weekend 1991—Bucknell University 1991—State Gamelands #115—While sitting around on a balmy Saturday morning, having been orphaned, we could only think of one way to spend an afternoon: a relaxing hunting trip was in order. As we loaded up the Bronco, many a comment was made about our exceptional hunting abilities. Off we were, down Rt. 45, in search of the elusive ruffed grouse, and the all-too-well known squirrel.

Once we arrived at the gamelands, we realized, to our surprise, that we were the only people out hunting on this day. We donned our blaze orange and loaded the magazines of our 12-gauge shotguns with one shell each, for we are true sportsmen, then set off for the brush. Working our way down the side of the mountain into the cow flatlands where the grouse flourish in the briarfields, working through the thorns, which seemed knife-sharp and endless, we heard a grouse go up. Now we knew that they were around. Continuing our trek into the thickening thorns, stalking the prey, we were being ever so quiet and careful as not to flush (stirring the bird to an airborne state) any grouse before the opportune time to shoot. We strategically positioned ourselves to cover more ground and have better shots at this elusive small game. One flew out to the right, I shot, and the grouse was then sent end-over-end, falling to the ground to be collected. A few more were put up, and a few more were shot down. It was starting to get late and we decided to pack it in and head on home.

We stood for a couple of minutes in a clearing, talking and relaxing, then started up the mountain. Even though we were returning home, we still hunted up the side of the mountain, being quiet and stealthy. Suddenly my partner called my name. This I thought strange since we wanted to remain quiet, and as I looked in his direction I saw what he was calling me about. It couldn't be—but it was—a big black bear, about 300 pounds, just taking its time walking down the mountainside only ten yards away. We stood together debating our options (for nothing like this ever happened to either of us). We immediately went to a full magazine of five shells, but those five shells were birdshot, which would only aggravate the bear more. If we didn't shoot him, we would have had to climb a tree, of which there were none. We stood there for what seemed like days, waiting for the bear to leave us. He was rustling around in the brush and we lost sight of him.

Luckily the bear did not even see us and did not come in our direction, but now, not seeing him, we became baffled as to what to do. We shot over the brush to scare him off, but hearing no movement, we started for the car again. Once in the Bronco, we set out for the Milton Sports Center to buy shotgun slugs, to carry with us in the woods from now on. We apologize for not having a camera this time, but we'll remember it sometime.

Congratulations to all of Bucknell's athletes, coaches and teams—
Good luck at the Patriot League Championships.

Women's soccer to compete in playoffs

#4 Lady Bison to take on top seed Army tomorrow in New York

BY SCOTT BROWN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's soccer team ended a very successful season on a down note last week as they dropped the last two games of the season. But, there was good news as well, as the Bison will make their first trip to the Patriot League tournament tomorrow at Army.

The regular-season finale was played last Saturday when the Bison hosted St. Bonaventure. The Bonnies struck first on a goal by Julie DeRidder. The Bison bounced back, however, tying the game at one all as freshman sensation Lisa Gibbons '95 scored unassisted. It was Gibbons' 15th of the season, good for a first-place tie in the conference. In her last seven games of the season, Gibbons has exploded for 13 goals and two assists.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Forward Lisa Gibbons '95 has led the Lady Bison in goals scored for most of the season and finished the year as the Patriot League's leading scorer. Gibbons will lead the women's soccer team into the League playoffs this weekend at Army.

The score remained deadlocked throughout the rest of the first half until Bucknell took the lead just a minute and a half into the second half as Sara Patiro '95 scored off a pass from Gibbons and Jen Giordano '95.

That assist gave Gibbons 32 points for the season for an average of 2.29 points a game which is good enough for the overall scoring lead in the Patriot League.

The Bison's lead was shortlived, however, as DeRidder scored her second goal of the game less than four minutes later to tie the game at two. The game remained that way until the Bonnies scored the game-winner with less than three minutes to play for the 3–2 win.

The day before, the Bison were defeated by Scranton 2–0 on the road. It marked the end to their six-game winning streak. It also marked their first loss on the road in their last four games.

The two losses marred what had been a spectacular run by the Bison. The women went into a game against Dickinson October 17th trying to win their fourth game in a row. Bucknell's momentum was so strong not even the terrible weather conditions could stop them.

Gibbons battled the muddy field in scoring the game's lone goal on an assist from Joanne Crane '95 in the first half. The game was not as close as the score indicated as the Bison dominated throughout outshooting Dickinson 28-6. Kim Fekel '93 was only forced to make four saves in registering the shutout.

The Bison then returned home on the 19th to take on eventual conference foe, Fordham. The Rams will be entering the Patriot League next year, but currently are still a club team. Therefore, this game does not count in the standings for the Bison.

Amy Clare—The Bucknellian

Women's soccer's goaltender Kim Fekel '93 makes an outstanding stop against Colgate earlier this year. Fekel has played in ten of the Lady Bison's matches this year and has recorded 129 saves this year for a .860 save percentage, ranking her third in the Patriot League.

Again Gibbons sparked the squad to an early lead as she scored the first two goals of the game. Just two minutes after Gibbon's second goal, Kristin Lay '95 scored her first goal of the season to extend Bucknell's lead to 3–0.

Gibbons capped off her hat trick and gave the Bison a 4–0 halftime lead on assists from tri-captain Genine Streeper '92, and Janine Hudson '93.

Lay added her second goal of the game as the Bison cruised to an easy 5–0 win, boasting their second shutout in as many games.

The following Tuesday, the Bison hosted Penn State University. The Bison were looking for revenge after falling to the Lady Lions 2–1 last year. The game would again not count in the standings because of Penn State's club status.

As they have throughout most of their winning streak, the Bison came out strong and scored the first goal of the game as tri-captain Mandy Head '92 took a pass from Patiro to give the Bison the early lead. The 1–0 lead lasted through the first half.

Penn State came out hard in the second half and took the lead after scoring two quick goals. But the Bison were able to send the game into overtime as Patiro scored unassisted with just over five minutes left to play in regulation.

The overtime belonged to the Bison. Giordano redeemed herself after some earlier shots off the post by netting the game-winner in the first overtime period.

Patiro added an insurance goal with just 13 seconds left to go in the second half to give the Bison a 4–2 victory.

The Bison travel tomorrow to Army to participate in the four-team Patriot League tournament. The Bison, who have the fourth seed, will have to take on Army, who finished first in the Patriot League this season. The Bison will attempt to avenge their 4–0 defeat against the Cadets earlier this season.

Bucknell has a difficult task ahead of them as Army went a perfect 5–0 in conference play. It will be difficult for the Bison to generate offense against a defense that registered ten shutouts and allowed only nine goals in 17 games this season. Bucknell will also have their work cut out for them defensively stopping Army's scoring trio of Tosie LeGrand, Deneil LoGiudice, and Selina DeVincey who have combined to score 30 goals and eight assists this year.

If the Bison can defeat Army they will face the winner of the Holy Cross-Colgate matchup on Sunday.

Water polo prepares for MAC championships

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

On Monday evening, the Bucknell men's water polo team returned from a four-day trip to Long Beach, California. It travelled across the United States in order to play in the 49er Tournament, easily one of the best tournaments in the nation, according to Head Coach Jim Harvey. The seven top-ranked teams in the country as well as ten of the top twelve participated in the event. Bucknell was seeded 12th at the tournament, but captured 11th place with a 2–2 weekend record.

Bucknell opened the tournament with a game against Pepperdine University. Pepperdine is not only ranked second in the country, but is also home to a member of the Australian national team who is possibly the best U.S collegiate water polo player on the scene today. The Bucknell men stayed within a goal of their opponent for one and a half quarters before Pepperdine converted six unanswered shots, bringing the score to 10–3. At the start of the third quarter, Harvey substituted many of his back-up players, and veteran goalie John Bradbury '92 left the game after recording an impressive nine saves in only one half of play. The contest eventually ended in an 18–5 loss for Bucknell, but Harvey felt that: "We played hard against some extremely tough competition and never gave in to them throughout the game." Bucknell's five goals were distributed amongst Chris Retzler '93, who had two, and co-captain Walter Kelly '92, Dan Brown '92, and Sean Tierney '95, each of whom had one. Rupert DeVink '94, who replaced Bradbury in goal, also collected a notable seven saves during his half of play.

Bucknell came up against Claremont, another West Coast team, in its next game of the weekend. Since Claremont was not only close to the Bison in national ranking, but was also seeded right behind them at the 49er Tournament, the Bucknell men were aware that the game should prove to be an excellent one. Bucknell fell behind 2–1 by half-time before its offense kicked in early in the third quarter. Although Harvey felt that his team was having difficulty playing outdoors in the cold, wet weather of the day, the Bison eventually adjusted and picked up their game. Bucknell played great defense, holding Claremont to only four goals, with none in the last period. In that quarter, the Bison went on to score one goal, breaking a 4–4 tie and ending the game with a 5–4 victory. Against Claremont, Kelly converted twice, while Retzler, Tierney, and A.J. Zottola '92 each added one.

U.C. Santa Barbara, the ninth-ranked team in the nation, turned out to be Bucknell's third opponent of the weekend. Santa Barbara had defeated both Slippery Rock and Navy, Bucknell's two fiercest opponents in the East earlier this season. Unfortunately, Bucknell became Santa Barbara's next East Coast victim in a game that the Bison lost 10–6. Bucknell fell behind immediately in the game where, according to Harvey, "They pushed us around for a while before we could come back." Overall, the Bucknell men played a good game as they faced a very strong counter-attack by Santa Barbara. Against Santa Barbara, co-captain Kevin Schroth '92 who, with 47 goals on the season, had entered the tournament as the nation's leading scorer, and finally displayed the offensive talent which earned him that honor. Throughout the game, Bucknell's opposition could not stop Schroth, who converted every shot he attempted. He ended the game with four of Bucknell's six goals. Kelly and Zottola rounded out the scoring with one apiece. Once again, Bradbury played outstanding defense in the cage, stopping twelve shots on goal.

Women's tennis caps record season

Team records shutout over Hofstra as Stagliano '92, Benack '92 end careers

BY MIKE MARKOVICH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's tennis team put the wraps on its record-breaking season this week with an exclamation point in the form of a shutout win over final opponent Hofstra.

The team was originally scheduled to end the season with a Sunday match versus Robert Morris at home, but Robert Morris was a no-show, and the Hofstra match was postponed. So the season officially ended Saturday as the Bison recorded their sixth shutout on the season.

In a repeat of last week's performance, none of the nine matches went to a third set, an especially impressive feat due to the fact that Coach Rose Ewan saw to it that everyone on the roster played at least one match in this last contest of the season.

Julia Diaz '95 played at her familiar number one singles spot and won 6–4, 6–1. Kymm Carlson '94 won a quick 6–0, 6–0 decision at number two, Mary Ann Benack '92 won 6–3, 6–0 at number three, and Karen Stagliano '92 took the number four flight 6–0, 6–2. Kristina Lutter '95 and Ashley Crary '95 each posted love victories at the number five and six spots, respectively.

Doubles action was similarly Bucknell-dominated, with Lutter and Christine McMillan '95 winning the top flight 6–3, 7–5.

Stacey Duffy '95 and Kristyn Joy Vandegrift '93 won 6–2, 6–2 at number two, and Crary rounded it out with partner Jennifer Markewich '95 in a 6–3, 6–0 win at number three.

The win brought the Bison their 15th straight win and their 16th overall on the season, both school records. The team's only loss came in the second week of the season, a 5–4 loss to Army, whom the Bison finished ahead of at this year's Patriot League Championships.

Coach Rose Ewan waxed proud of the squad's exceptional year. "We had quite a good season. Our only losses, to Army and in the League Tournament, came on weekends when we were largely injured and/or sick. At the tournament, for example, only Julia and Kymm were healthy. Mary Ann and Karen both had the flu, Kristina was playing on a sprained ankle, and Stacey with a sprained wrist."

She also commented on the loss of senior co-captains Benack and Stagliano and how that will hurt the young team. "The fact that Mary Ann and Karen won't be around next year sort of bothers me. We're going to need to find some new peer leaders to transmit that positive work ethic that they had to the younger players."

Disappointed as she is to see the pair going, she had nothing but praise for Stagliano, who now holds the school record for career singles victories, with a 48–9 overall career record, and the sometimes-overshadowed Benack, who played her three years at the number one singles spot.

"Karen started here at number six singles, and has been moved up to two, then down to three, and then to four for this year. She has obviously been incredibly consistent through her years in competition. She doesn't overpower her opponent, just is always very positive and so

Adminstration proposes 6.7% comprehensive fee increase

BY TRAVIS ELLIOTT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A 6.7 percent increase in the comprehensive fee for the 1992-93 fiscal year was proposed by Professor of Management John Miller, chair of the planning and budget committee, at this Monday's faculty meeting.

Miller explained that the rationale for the increase included a formula review which utilized various gauges of inflation figures and an examination of the competitive market.

The proposal still awaits the the approval of the trustee budget committee, the finance committee, and the Board of Trustees as a whole this weekend.

Last year, a dispute erupted pitting the faculty and administration against the trustees when the Board's finance committee voted 28–6 to reject the budget subcommittee's proposal to increase the comprehensive fee by 6.7 percent for the '91-'92 fiscal year. The finance committee, instead, recommended an increase which would not exceed 4.5 percent due to its concerns of a declining applicant pool and the economic tumble.

"We were concerned about this last year," said Lee Idleman '54, Chairman of the Board of Trustees. He added, "I think we felt that some effort to control costs was a necessary message last year."

However Idleman did say, "I think having done that once that there's a little less urgency to send a message this year."

Sojka addresses FLAG proposal for addition of gay, lesbian advisor

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

President Gary Sojka met Wednesday with members of Friends of Lesbians and Gay Men (FLAG), Bucknell Student Government officials, and other administrators to address recent concerns raised by FLAG and BSG.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

President Gary Sojka considered training for public safety officers in homosexual issuues.

Sojka sought specifically to address a BSG motion adopted in September which called for the addition of a full-time staff position to handle concerns of gays, lesbians and bisexuals. He said he called the meeting to address the larger issues raised by the motion.

> "There are tons of stories gay and lesbian students can tell about violence and harrassment. This campus has not been safe at all, but the students have been silent, so it hasn't really been an issue."
> — Sarah Pryor '92
> FLAG member

Both Sojka and Barry Maxwell, vice president for administration, said budgetary constraints prevented the creation of a full-time position for at least two years. "We've publicly stated we won't add any staff," Sojka said, "but to give that kind of bureaucratic response is not appropriate to the spirit of the motion."

Sojka noted three areas of concern to homosexual and bisexual students which he feels must be addressed: the danger to these students on campus, the lack of an adequate support system, and the need for curricular attention.

Members of FLAG have been working with Barbara Shailor, acting vice president of student services, to explore the proper channels for adding personnel, but Sojka, noting the great length of time involved in that process, called the meeting "to explore solutions, and find conceivable solutions other than hiring someone."

FLAG members repeatedly stressed the need for an advisor to increase visibility and awareness, and to act as an advocate for the needs of homosexual and bisexual students. "There's a climate that needs to be created on this campus that isn't there right now," said FLAG member Sarah Pryor '92.

"It's important to imagine what it's like to be gay at this school," said Margaret Cronin, advisor to FLAG and a University Writing Center tutor. "If you decide you want to deal with it, it takes a long time, and you don't know where to turn."

By creating an advisory position, Cronin said, "Bucknell is sending a message that being gay is an OK thing to be. It's about visibility—that this isn't a dirty secret." When Sojka questioned whether adding a counselor would help personal safety, Cronin explained that the issue of safety is linked to visibility. "A lot of people engage in homophobic behavior, but wouldn't call it that," she said, "because it's sanctioned by society."

Both sides agreed to explore the option of adding a part-time counselor by granting "release

FBI investigates pipe bomb explosion

Allie Zadroga—The Bucknellian

Investigators from the Federal Bureau of Investigation are testing fragments of the pipe bomb used in the explosion of a 80-year old fountain on the quad behind Carnegie Hall.

BY ELIZABETH DANNEBERG
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A full-scale investigation is taking place concerning the "Class of 1910" stone water fountain, located in front of Roberts Hall, which exploded at 12:56 a.m. on the morning after Halloween.

The explosive used to destroy half of the fountain was found to be a pipe bomb, part of which was found at the scene.

The fragments were turned over to Officer William Neitz of the Lewisburg Police Department, who then sent them to the Federal Bureau of Investigation Crime Lab for further information as to bomb type and source.

According to a student who witnessed the explosion on Nov. 1, two males ran into Trax Hall just seconds before the detonation. The witness was not able to provide any description of the males. The perpetrators have not been caught, but interviews are ongoing.

Although a separate bombing incident occurred in Northumberland on Halloween night, Vince DeCerchio, director of public safety, did not think that the bombings were related. He cited a lack of evidence as well as the distance between the two towns. DeCerchio added, "On Halloween night you get a lot of instances of explosives and fireworks."

Along with the Lewisburg Police Department and the FBI, a specially- designated explosive unit from Penn State has been advising the Office of Public Safety on how to handle the investigation. If the vandals are caught, they will be dealt with by both Bucknell and the Lewisburg Police.

DeCerchio says the administration is "very interested in the investigation because there are persons on campus playing with explosives. This is very dangerous in a populated area such as Bucknell...if any person(s) has information to assist the investigation, they should get in contact with us." DeCerchio hopes that the FBI results will return soon so to facilitate the investigation.

The Lewisburg Police refused to release any information because charges have not yet been filed.

BSG votes to cut The Bucknellian's funding

BY JOHN GODBOUT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell Student Government (BSG) voted 36–4–2 on Sunday to redistribute the student activity fee (SAF) and to drop The Bucknellian's funding from $4.40 per student to $1.50.

Under this proposal, BSG will either maintain or increase current funding levels to all programs except The Bucknellian.

Trustees will vote on the BSG's recommendation to increase the SAF but will not vote on the specifics of the motion passed last Sunday.

The Bucknellian staff members were concerned that the Trustees would actually be voting on the redistribution figures, because such a vote would be difficult to reverse. After researching their options, however, they found that the vote will be on the more general fee increase.

In the motion that the congress voted on, the executive committee stated that, "The Bucknellian has proven to be capable of producing a professional-style paper with minimal student funding." The Bucknellian staff disagreed and expressed grave concern for the future of the publication.

"If this proposal goes through, The Bucknellian would have a few choices, none of which are desirable. One would be to cease production altogether. Another would be to increase revenue, which would force us to charge students and faculty, and decrease costs, which would mean that the quality of the paper would have to slip," said David Murray '92, editor-in-chief of The Bucknellian.

Vanessa Mayo '92, treasurer of BSG, wishes The Bucknellian would be more frugal in their spending. "In the past The Bucknellian has been making unnecessary expenditures. Their wages, for instance, are much more than what similar jobs offer elsewhere," said Mayo.

Murray says that the pay scale is not exorbitant, and that many of the paid positions require a good deal of technical expertise. "One thing to remem-

Sexism concerns aired in open forum Tuesday

BY TIMOTHY W. KIRK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The issue of sexism on campus was once again brought to the forefront in an open forum this past Tuesday entitled "Will there always be sexism?"

"This forum is unprecedented," exclaimed Liz Felter '92, the first of seven panelists to give opening remarks. The panel represented both males and females, faculty and students, Greek and non-Greeks. The six other panelists included Panhellenic President Kristine Elliott '92, Director of Athletics Rick Hartzell, Visiting Assistant Professor of Civil Engineering Peter Carrato, Women's Resource Center Director Janice Butler, and IFC President Denis Maguire '93.

Continuing her opening remarks, Felter said, "For the first time, I can express to you what it's like to be a woman on this campus."

Felter, who resigned last year as vice-president of the Panhellenic council, spoke candidly about her experiences with sexist students, professors, and organizations on campus. "There are professors who continually refer to humanity in history only as men. I have taken courses where we only read texts written by men."

Commenting on the Greek system in particular, Felter claimed, "More and more women are dissatisfied with the fraternity scene." She and other women refuse to be seen as "pawns in the hunt for hot girls."

Elliott took the podium stressing a need for steady dialogue between the sexes. "My feeling towards sexism is communication," said Elliott. The barrier of sexism will only be "broken down through communication and values clarifi-

The Nov. 1 story on the Committee on Complementary Activities' involvement with The Bucknellian's funding incorrectly identified Chandra Guinn '93. She is the chair of CCA, not its president. ber is that we're not like other clubs, we're more like a business in the way in which students work for us. Many of the jobs are very tedious and no one would do them if we didn't pay them," said Murray.

"There are many areas of spending that could be cut—that will have to be cut. Most of these things The Bucknellian says they need are wants, not needs," said Alex Sherer, president of BSG. "We think that the money could be better used in our non-alcoholic programming, and we'd like to see the money go there," he continued.

The Bucknellian feels that it should not have to report to the BSG for money because that is a conflict of its freedom of the press. Under an agreement signed in 1988, however, The Bucknellian is required to submit an annual budget to the Committee of Complementary Activities (CCA).

"I would agree that The Bucknellian should not have to report to BSG. We had no intention of ever reviewing The Bucknellian, but we had to see if that $4.40 was going to the most useful place. It is the BSG's right and responsibility to look into the SAF," said Sherer.

Sherer said that because the SAF is already being raised ten percent, further raising the fee to accommodate The Bucknellian is not a possibility. He did not feel that the trustees would grant more than a ten percent increase in the SAF because the tuition is only being raised 6.8%.

Another area of concern is the recent realization that since 1988, The Bucknellian has been receiving twenty cents more per student than the number it was officially allocated. "All of the paperwork states that they should have been receiving only $4.20. We hypothesize that there was an error in typing the number from the start," said Mayo.

Because The Bucknellian is outside the Appropriations Committee, it has been allowed to amass a $15,000 surplus, which it saves for emergencies. BSG feels that the surplus, in addition to advertising revenue, will allow The Bucknellian to continue to be produced with few problems.

Murray labels this claim "fiscally absurd." He said, "Clearly the numbers do not work out—there would be no way to continue. We've presented them with figures that show the potential fall of The Bucknellian in just two years."

"We thought they would be able to function with zero dollars from BSG. We offered the $1.50 (total $5000) as a cushion, in case they encounter any unforeseen problems," said Mayo.

The Bucknellian claims that the budget cuts will force them to solicit more advertising, but because of the recession, local merchants are less apt to advertise in the paper." We never indicated that The Bucknellian should have to solicit more advertising to become self-sufficient," said Chandra Guinn, chairperson of CCA.

"Obviously the BSG is the official voice of the students of Bucknell. We think that they would feel that the $4.40 is an unnecessary expenditure. Definitely The Bucknellian has made progress since 1988, and they deserve credit for that; but we are in a budget crunch," said Sherer. "They've been fortunate thus far, but I think they can be more autonomous in their budgeting."

"I would agree that the BSG is the voice of the students, but this is a matter of education. Everyone—the BSG, the students, the faculty, the trustees—needs to be educated in what they're getting and for how much," said Murray.

Bucknellian staff members have met with BSG on three separate occasions to discuss the matter. They have managed to increase the figure from no BSG funding to $1.50, but are adamant that they need more.

"We'll have to cut plans for capital expenditures, but we can't continue like this for long. It would be disastrous to stop updating our computers. We will also have to eliminate all aspects of the paper that do not go directly to printing and writing. Most of our special features would have to be cut," said Murray.

"They have been easy to work with, considering the circumstances. After all, no one likes to have money cut from their budget. The main problem is that they feel that they need all of the $4.40, and they are not willing to compromise on that figure," said Mayo.

"This is not about winning or losing a fight. This is about the CCA and BSG proceeding with an annual review as called for in the agreement we signed in 1988," said Guinn.

"The 1988 agreement," said Travis Elliott '92, senior editor of The Bucknellian, "removed our funding from BSG control to insure that the student press can operate independently of fiscal subversion from the student government. Only CCA has the right to review our student subscription fee. By passing this motion, BSG is clearly overstepping its bounds."

"If the campus thinks that we've made a horrible decision, you bet we'll ask the students to vote on it, possibly in the form of a referendum. But for now the motion has passed and the agreed upon figure is $1.50," said Sherer.

time" to a present staff member, so that he or she can spend a portion of their work-time addressing homosexual concerns. Shailor, however, cautioned that "finding someone who's on the payroll who's out, and willing to serve as a counselor—that's a logistical problem in itself."

Right now homosexual students must rely on an informal network of concerned students and staff members, a system which members of FLAG say is simply not adequate. "We're burned out," Cronin said. "We just can't do it anymore."

The representatives of FLAG also questioned Sojka's suggestion that the department of public safety adequately protects homosexual students. "A lot of students have been telling stories of harassment and violence, and security has never been helpful," commented Mark Larson '92. Pryor, Larson, and Cronin also recounted several incidents in which they said public safety was either uncooperative or openly hostile when handling cases of harassment.

Members of FLAG are also attempting to document cases of physical harassment and violence against gay and lesbian students, incidents which they say are common on campus, but which often go unreported out of fear.

"There are tons of stories gay and lesbian students can tell about violence and harassment," Pryor explained, "This campus has not been safe at all, but the students have been silent, so it hasn't really been an issue."

Sojka and Maxwell agreed to explore additional training for public safety officers to increase their sensitivity to homosexual concerns.

"I think that sensitivity training in that area is a very good idea," said Vince DeCerchio, director of public safety. He said present training exercises include discussion of homosexual issues, but "we've never had sensitivity training aimed specifically at gay and lesbian issues."

He added, "I would hope that we respond to all victims in a sensitive and supportive manner."

The meeting ended with an agreement to form a task force to examine the feasibility of a staff position, as well as to address other issues.

Lara Turbide, program coordinator for the residential colleges, said a check of similar schools found "they don't have such a position, but they said it would be amazingly wonderful if they did. It would be nice for Bucknell to be pro-active and really take the lead."

Members of FLAG asked that the matter be examined as quickly as possible. Pryor said, "Each week we wait is one more person" who faces intimidation.

Sojka also pledged his personal support to help end harassment and discrimination. "If someone is experiencing harassment," he said, "if they have to they can call me."

Speaker uncovers gender perceptions

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Citing examples from the sandbox and the playground, Fortune 500 human resources consultant Kate Butler delivered a lecture entitled "Babble of the Sexes: Communicating Across Gender Lines" in Coleman Theater last Monday.

As a part of the Women and Careers program, Butler spoke about the traditional gender roles learned by children and how these perceptions affect men and women in the workplace. "The good news is that these are learned behaviors, and what we learn we can unlearn," said Butler.

"There's one correct way to be a manager, and it has nothing to do with gender," she continued.

According to Butler, since a man's primary urge is to compete and a woman's primary urge is to relate emotionally, "men and women approach the job differently, but they can end at a similar point," Butler explained.

Most of Butler's speech concerned the socialization of boys and girls in elementary school, and how society reinforces certain expectations for each gender. She gave many examples to support her thesis that boys are valued for their minds and girls for their appearance.

For example, during separate parent-teacher conferences, her son's teacher praised his inquisitive mind, while his twin sister's teacher praised her neat handwriting.

According to Butler, this indoctrination actually begins much earlier than elementary school, and has implications long afterward. "What's the first thing a mother asks after she has a baby?" demanded Butler. "Come on, who knows?... That's right, she asks if it's a boy or a girl. Why? Because until she knows that baby's genitalia, she can't plan its life!"

To illustrate gender expectations in later life, Butler introduced another theory.

"At age 18, males and females are similar in their abilities to express themselves. By age 40, men have become more competitive and women have become more nurturing. That's also the age where you see a lot of divorce. But as we approach 60, the trends shift; men become the doting grandpas (playing with their grandchildren since they missed out on their own children) and women become more militant," said Butler.

"The North American woman is the only cultural group who gets more militant as we age. Ask yourselves why." Butler answered this question later in her lecture: "Since women are valued for their form and not their minds, as they age and their appearance declines, they become more aggressive."

Butler stressed, however, that gender stereotypes are not a case of "us versus them. Both men and women have perceptions of what men and women should be. Both sexes are pressured."

Homosexual people often suffer because they may not fit our social expectations of masculine or feminine behavior, she added.

"Although we are socialized along gender lines," Butler concluded, "as individuals we will probably not fit exactly in these categories. It's more of a continuum from feminine to masculine principles."

MG101 company's advertisements promote stereotypes, says Amott

BY DEB MANASSE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Members of this semester's MG101A company had a taste of true stockholder discontent this past week as controversy over advertisements promoting their business project became a major topic of discussion.

"Amigos for Children," as the company has been named, has planned to fund their service project through the sale of churros, a type of Mexican doughnut. The primary advertising poster in question, a depiction of a naked Mexican poised discretely behind his rather large sombrero, combined with the slogan, "What is 12 inches long, hot, and umm umm good?" disturbed several members of the Bucknell faculty for what Teresa Amott, associate professor of economics, categorized as two separate but related reasons.

The central objection to the advertisement, according to Amott, is its "very demeaning and stereotypical depiction of an Hispanic. In addition," said Amott, "the advertisement used sex to sell the product in a way that was unnecessary and violated good taste."

With regard to racial stereotyping, Amott points to two popular misconceptions about Hispanics—that they tend to be savage and uncivilized, and that they are, by nature, lazy—upon which she feels the advertisement plays. "The combination of showing a naked Mexican along with the slogan used for the advertisement works to affirm the idea that people of Hispanic or African-American origin are lacking in reason, are irrational, and are primarily sexual," noted Amott.

Furthermore, Amott feels that the image of the sombrero conjures images of the lazy Mexican asleep against the wall with his sombrero tipped over his head. "This kind of thing arises out of ignorance," says Amott. "If we hadn't said anything, the students wouldn't have understood their mistake."

Amott feels that this incident is a small lesson in what the modern business world is like. She stresses the importance of U.S. business' sensitivity to cultural differences in today's increasingly multicultural market.

At Monday's faculty meeting Amott asked President Gary Sojka what action should be taken in regards to the racially offensive advertisement. Additionally, she suggested that the faculty boycott the MG101A company.

In response to Amott's concern, Sojka called the advertisement a "statement which I find offensive on racial and gender grounds." But he said that in dealing with the offenders, the University "treads close to issues of freedom of speech."

Sentiment on the side of "Amigos for Children" seems to be rather uniform in one respect; most company members, regardless of their personal feelings about the advertisement, regret any misunderstandings created regarding the intent of the advertisements.

According to MG101A Chief Executive Officer Steve Darby '94, any negative racial connotations contained in the advertisement were purely unintentional. "We were aiming our marketing techniques toward the student body," stressed Darby.

"We didn't use enough foresight to see the potential problems that this could create among the faculty," he said.

Darby noted that the decision to use a Mexican figure in the ads stemmed purely from the fact that churros are a Mexican treat.

However, some company members felt that the issue was given too much emphasis. "The whole thing was blown out of proportion," said MG101A Marketing Director James Savin '94. "It may have been a mistake on our part but I also believe that the faculty was oversensitive."

He also mentioned the fact that in some ways, the advertisements were an effective marketing technique. "Sex is often used to sell and is documented to work," noted Savin. "I think it worked to some extent in this case."

Regardless of personal feelings, "Amigos for Children" responded quickly to discontinue the controversial campaign. The signs were pulled down within a day of the complaint and a new campaign was begun. If nothing else, the commotion over the advertisements brought an important subject into the forefront. Amott's desire to use this incident as a catalyst for increased awareness seems to have worked.

"I want to thank her for bringing it up," said Darby. "The whole company is learning from it. This is a good place to learn these things. It could have cost us a lot more in the real world."

In the business world, Butler said, the more successful women demonstrate the drive to compete that is associated with masculine behavior.

The program was sponsored by the Student Lectureship Committee, Career Development Center, Panhellenic Council, Women's Resource Center, and Women Organized Now.

BUDGET

For the first year, the committee on planning and budget submitted a guideline for financial aid. This year's financial aid "discount factor limit" was set at 15 percent, which means that not more than 15 percent of revenue will be diverted to financial aid.

Miller stressed that this year's guideline did not represent a cut or a severe change in financial aid allocation. However, Miller said, "It does represent a concern for the future allocation of financial aid."

Under the category of compensation, the recommendation includes a 4.2 percent allocation to the base salary pool, a 1.0 percent allocation for market and equity adjustments, and $240,000 to be allocated for the addition of five new faculty members.

Professor of sociology Matt Silberman expressed concern that across the board raises for the faculty would be below the rate of inflation, after accounting for merit raises.

Miller explained that the Personal Disposable Income (PDI) figure central rationale for setting guidelines for the base salary pool, and even though the PDI was 3.8 percent for this year, the committee was able to move upward from that base to run merit salary guidelines.

In addition, Larry Shinn, vice president for academic affairs, explained, "Retirements along with market and equity adjustments insure that returning faculty are above the salary base pool percentage."

SEXISM

cation. We cannot expect instant change," she predicted. "Change happens gradually and not all at once."

Describing Bucknell as a community containing mostly reasonable and intelligent people, Hartzell said of sexism, "If you can't change it here, than there's really no hope to change it anywhere." Hartzell also spoke of the burden on men, claiming "White heterosexual males seem to get pounded on like it's mostly their fault. And I think that's because it's true. As males we need to put away that machoism... we need to come down to the level of the people who are making a positive change."

> Responding to a claim that women "dress a certain way, act a certain way" that simply "asks for" sexist behavior, both Elliott and Butler declared a woman's right to do as she pleases... "The only person responsible for committing a sexual offense is the perpetrator," stated Butler.

Carrato opened by saying he "volunteered to be here," wanting to comment on sexism "in professional life." Carrato, also a professional engineer, spoke of incidents in his personal and professional lives which demonstrated how sexism, in some contexts, "is such a grey area."

"There is a lot of defensiveness that comes when we discuss sexism," recognized Butler in her opening remarks. "We must understand that being for women's rights is not the same as being anti-male," she asserted. "I know that the word feminism has a lot of negative connotations," she said, but she noted that the promotion of women's rights was "good for men, too." "Bucknell and all institutions of higher learning have an obligation to lead rather than follow society when it comes to sexism."

Maguire opened by assuring those present that his comments would "be brief—not because sexism isn't important to me. It is." He spoke of his three older sisters, all of whom he admired as "independent," and stated he would be disappointed if they weren't. Maguire stressed the need to address the issue on campus and to take steps in resolving it.

Following opening remarks by all the panelists, the floor was opened for questions. The predominantly Greek audience addressed a wide range of situations involving sexism, with particular emphasis on fraternity parties. "Isn't saying 'all fraternities are sexist' using stereotypes just like saying 'all women should be in the kitchen'?" asked one member of the audience. Both Felter and Butler responded by denying the claim that all fraternities are sexist, but pointing to the statistics which show an "overwhelming majority... eighty-nine percent," according to Butler, of all sexual crimes on campus involve alcohol and are somehow related to fraternity parties.

"Eighty-nine percent of the parties on campus are at fraternities," equipped another student. "Have you taken that into consideration?" The panel agreed that this was the case, and again emphatically denied they were accusing all Greek students of being necessarily sexist.

Hartzell responded by pointing to behavior in single-sex organizations. "When I'm with a group of male friends," he commented, "I act a lot differently then when I'm with my mother." He urged students to try and fight the desire to impress peers by treating members of the opposite sex as objects.

"Try something for me," he challenged the audience. "The next time you're with your friends and one of them tells a sexist joke, just walk away. You'll get quite a reaction."

Responding to a claim that women "dress a certain way, act a certain way" that simply "asks for" sexist behavior, both Elliott and Butler declared a woman's right to do as she pleases. "If I'm walking alone across campus at night, does that mean it's my fault if I'm sexually assaulted?" asked Elliott. "I don't think so."

"The only person responsible for committing a sexual offense is the perpetrator," stated Butler.

"How can I respond to sexist behavior?" asked a female student of the male panelists. "What do I do or say without being made fun of?"

All agreed women must confront the situation immediately. "Be vulgar if you have to," asserted Carrato. "Tell him he's an asshole and walk away." Maguire commented, "If you tell him right there you're offended and disappointed in his behavior, you may be the brunt of humor, but you'll gain the respect of people around you. You'd have my respect."

"I had to deal with an incident of sexual harassment when I first arrived," noted Hartzell. "It doesn't stop until you do something about it."

Another student emphasized the importance of acting the same around all people. "Any coach will tell you that if you don't do it in practice, you won't do it in the game."

Commenting on the initial theme of the forum, Butler concluded, "Will there always be sexism? I say, yes, there will. Until a woman can go out and work on a car as easily as a man, until a woman can be president, until the things which separate men and women in society are gone, there will be sexism."

The forum, sponsored by the uphill fraternities, is the second in a three-part series examining elitism, sexism, and racism, respectively.

First amendment stirs OSU campus

Three editors resigned, and seven others were fired after a heated decision concerning a new policy review of potentially libelous stories at Ohio State University.

The policy says "the adviser may review copy for certitude of libel and invasion of privacy, says Mary Carran Webster, adviser to The Lantern. "If the adviser or editor determines something is libelous, they will discuss it. If they disagree, the editor would submit the story in question to a libel attorney who would be hired by the publications committee and paid with Lantern money."

Resulting from the problems, the school newspaper has appeared since October 2 with the words "Published Under Protest" above its title.

Says Debra Baker, the now-former editor-in-chief, "I questioned the constitutionality of the new policy at the faculty committee meeting Friday. Two media law professors who were there also spoke against it...The policy's a lot less ambiguous than it was 3 1/2 weeks ago, but the bottom line hasn't changed."

Six paid reporters for The Lantern have also resigned, and those remaining are unclear as to whether or not they will remain on the staff.

CMU offers fifth year program

Those students attending Carnegie Mellon University may now decide to apply for a new scholarship available. Juniors who feel that they will not be completely satisfied with their education at the end of their senior year may try to become a Fifth Year Scholar, receiving tuition costs to help with their additional stay at CMU.

The program was originally introduced by the Student Body President Andy Robitshek in 1989. Although he has since left CMU, his idea was completed and admitted last fall.

Only ten students may be picked, so those now taking their fifth year are quite happy to be among the chosen few. For the upcoming 1992-93 year, only eight applicants were accepted.

State gives Clarion $600,000

The Board of Governors of the State System of Higher Education in Pennsylvania discussed and voted upon two proposals dealing with the $7.6 million that is to be given to the 14 state schools. Clarion University will receive $600,000, according to gross square footage of the university and the number of FTE students.

The only foreseeable complication includes the possibility that a $3.8 million appropriation may now be on the line. The university, if unable to receive this extra funding, will be forced to increase tuition an additional $392.

Says Monica Douglas, student senate president and member of the Board of Governors of SSHE, "In order for tuition to stay at its current level, the state has to support us...98.8 percent."

CMU observes Coming Out Day

Carnegie Mellon University hosted a day for the gay and bisexual community on campus on National Coming Out Day. Rainbow-colored ribbons were worn by those who were not only part of the gay community, but those who were also openly supportive of homosexuality.

Dean of Student Affairs Michael Murphy spoke on Carnegie Mellon's harassment policy which he says ensures and protects the rights of the gay and bisexual community there.

Several gay and lesbian members of CMU and the surrounding area discussed their problems in dealing and accepting their own sexuality. Their basic message was to never give up, and to always accept who you are, regardless of what others might say.

Roundtable gathering allows open discussion of multi-cultural concerns

Editors note: In an effort to expose the thoughts and concerns of the university community regarding multi-cultural issues on the Bucknell campus, The Bucknellian sponsored a round-table discussion involving participants of various cultural, ethnic, and racial backgrounds.

Participating in the discussion were Terry Carter, assistant director of admissions and director of minority recruiting, Kristine Elliott '92, David Skena '92, Victor Tchiprout '92, Sharon Nunez '93, Kraig Pannell '92, Alyssa Chumnavech '92, Michelle Simms '94, and Melissa Skelton '92. The opinions expressed in the discussion were those of the individuals, and are in no way representative of a particular group of people.

BY TIMOTHY W. KIRK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Arriving on a campus for the first time, all students have perceptions of minorities and all have come from different backgrounds and communities. The college atmosphere is one unlike any other community. Each incoming freshmen class sets its own tone and creates its own sense of community. Minorities are a part of this community, and the tone which is set freshman year often follows for the last three. Examining the climate into which all students, including minorities, enter is crucial in determining the kind of community which develops over the four-year college experience.

First of two parts

Minorities in the Community

Moderator Mark Abrahamsen '93 began the discussion noting the demographics of the Bucknell campus and asking what sort of effect this had on minority relations and how minorities felt entering the Bucknell community.

"To a degree it is uncomfortable," began Pannell, speaking of entering the University as a first-year student. "I can't say that it stems from people discriminating or saying racist things, the majority of it comes from people not understanding different cultures or races."

"People come here with a certain mindset," added Chumnavech. "They come from certain geographic regions where there are 'x' number of minorities and when you come here things are different." There was a general consensus among the participants that Bucknell is a unique atmosphere and that whatever preconceived notions students bring with them, it is necessary for the entire University to recognize that, as Pannell stated, "just because someone is different doesn't mean they are better or worse than anyone else."

As Chumnavech noted, "there are plenty of opportunities to go to programs discussing multi-cultural issues." Yet, Skena makes the point that "it is still a matter of individual choice."

A solution to the problem rests largely in education. "How people grow and change depends a lot on where you start from freshman year," said Elliott. "Over the four years you're here, who you meet, how you're involved, and the courses you take largely effect your attitudes and perceptions."

> "To a degree, [entering the University as a first-year student] is uncomfortable. I can't say that it stems from people discriminating or saying racist things; the majority of it comes from people not understanding different cultures or races."
> — Kraig Pannell '92

A lot of the misunderstanding stems from the difficulty of changing preconceptions which have been ingrained for eighteen years. "When you do take people to these race-relation workshops, a lot of people are hearing this information for the first time. You're challenging what they've been brought up with," says Pannell. "Sometimes it's too much of a self-searching process." Students have taken active roles in organizing activities promoting race and minorities, and Pannell urges more of this, particularly addressing the faculty and support staff of the University.

Skelton noted the necessity for creating a working dialogue between all students, including minorities. "People assume that adding a little diversity is enough. What they don't realize is that now that they have the diverse groups here that there are problems—an uncomfortable feeling—that they also have to take care of. There are boundaries and walls which need to be disassembled."

Merely having friends who are minorities does not mean that all the barriers are broken down. There must be a serious effort and success at communication and mutual education.

Minorities in the classroom

"What about minorities in the classroom?" asked Abrahamsen. "The faculty is a generation ahead of us; do you encounter prejudice, not only with students, but professors?"

"Some professors make an effort to call on the student who might be different," noted Nunez. "It may not be in any way discriminatory," she said. Simms shared her thought, saying "it's almost as if you've become the expert on being black, or the expert on being female, or on being 19 in a class of 20-year-olds. It's as if we are representing the whole race in what we say."

"When I answer a question," says Nunez, "I'm not speaking for all Hispanics, I'm speaking for me, an individual. What I say and feel might not be true for all Hispanics on campus. It probably isn't."

Pannell also notes many great African-American achievements that go unmentioned in the classroom. "There are many great African-American inventors that never get mentioned in a physics class, and I think that's a great disservice to students. There would be no such thing as a blood transfusion; there would be no such thing as a stoplight; everyday things that we take for granted that people don't know were invented and discovered by African-Americans. There is room in every department for discussion of what different ethnic groups have contributed."

Minorities and Opportunity

"Does being a minority effect opportunities to succeed at this school?" questioned Abrahamsen.

"There are plenty of opportunities to succeed at Bucknell. The basic thing is that you have to look for them," says Simms. "There are not as many outlets or cushions for minority students. You have opportunities, but you might have to work a little harder to reach them.

"I think the opportunities for success exist equally," claimed Skena. "I only say that based on my experience since I've been here. I'm just thinking of who's involved in the campus. I think of people like Mike Thomas, and Rick Scott, and Chandra Guinn, and Kraig [Pannell]. If you look at the percentage of minorities in the Bucknell student population compared to the number of minorities in leadership positions, the percentage of student leaders is a lot higher."

Chumnavech feels that "minority status is irrelevant in becoming successful on campus. If you want to do something, you can do it. This is not an employer-employee situation. There is no reason for discrimination. The people that get involved here are the people that are motivated."

Next week: What is the trend in minority issues on campus? The group discusses Greek issues, admissions, progress on campus, minority identity, and the future of minorities at Bucknell.

Vendor card changes unrelated to vandalism

BY K. LARS BRUNS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The recent changes that were made to the vending card system were planned since last summer and "did not relate to any problems," said James Muchler, director of administrative services.

The changes involved the reprogramming of all vending machines, including copiers and Pepsi machines. According to Muchler, the new software was expected to have been installed before students arrived in September, but the software was not recieved in time.

"We knew it had to be done; we just had to pick the right time," said Muchler. While students were away during Fall Break, each individual vending machine was reprogrammed, more secure card-readers were installed, and old hardware was replaced. The new software also prevents any outside source from programming value onto vendor cards, which was not the case before.

When the vendor cards were first used last year, vendor cards were purchased for a dollar with $1 value on them. "After the cards were used, students just threw the cards away," said Muchler. "Each card has to be programmed and costs the University about a dollar, before any value is placed on it.

Everyone received a new vendor card free of charge but after the first card is lost, a new card with no value must be purchased for a dollar.

When asked if the change had any relation to the recent apprehension of two students who had been stealing cans out of the machines, or "jackpotting," Muchler said, "They've been doing that to the Pepsi machines even before the plastic cards. I don't know if anyone's been jackpotting since the change has been made."

FEATURES

For some, school is more than books, play

While balancing studies, jobs, and sometimes even children, non-traditional students excel both in and out of the classroom

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Ah! The life of a college student. Besides classes to attend, some books to read, a few labs and papers to write, what do we have to do? "Too much," many gripe and moan. The question is: Who wouldn't love some more time to lounge on the quad, sip another beer, catch a new flick, or read a book for pleasure? To non-traditional student Kathy Pino '94, any one of these breaks from the everyday Bucknell life of studying would be a welcome pleasure. – But first she'd have to find a substitute worker for her job at the Writing Center and someone to cook her kids dinner and help them with their homework.

Living in the dorm, eating at the caf, and spending a few hours socializing in the library each night doesn't sound that time-consuming or harsh now, does it?

There are approximately 30 non-traditional students taking courses at Bucknell this semester. Perhaps you've noticed one of them in class because they look slightly older than the typical Bucknell student. Perhaps you've seen them on campus with their children or perhaps you've benefitted from the "real-life" experiences that they bring into the classroom.

Don Noviello '92 is a thirty-some-year-old husband and father who is completing his second degree. Before he returned to Bucknell, he owned a food service company. Because he wearied of catering to other people, he decided to make a job change and re-educate himself.

Vaughn Strother '93 is a young man who has been financially independent since high school graduation. He worked a nine-to-five job and took evening courses at the Community College of Philadelphia before transferring to Bucknell.

Typically non-traditional students are over 24 years of age, financially independent, and have no choice but to stay in the Lewisburg area over breaks. These students also possess an unusual amount of determination to make the most out of their college careers.

Reflecting upon his first college experience, right after high school, Noviello says, "I'm a much better student now than I was then. I'm more focused now. It's the last hurrah for me."

For Pino and Strother, it's their first oppurtunity to be a part of a college community and they are most gratefully seizing it. Both left behind lives in Philadelphia to make Lewisburg their home until they graduate. They both find themselves experiencing somewhat of a culture shock, as this is not the big city and everything is not within walking distance.

The social life is also different for a non-traditional student. While Strother moved off of campus because of the rules and regulations of Residential Life, it was not so that he would have the freedom to party as he pleases. Rather he was used to having his own home to take care of and likes the quiet it provides for study.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Kathy Pino '94 and Saabirah Warthen '93 are two non-traditional students who have children. Pino says that living in Lewisburg is quite a change from big-city Philadelphia for her and her children.

Pino says that she has made most of her friends through the writing center. With most of the students she has met it has been a "Hey, how ya' doing type of friendship." Her time also has to be very well-structured because her children are involved in many activities, which require her participation, in some form, as well.

Between commuting back and forth from Williamsport and working as a writing tutor at the Pennsylvania College of Technology where he received his second associate degree, Noviello does not have much time for much of a social life in the typical sense.

Noviello spends his free time with his family and working to pay for his incidental college expenses. Right now his wife is supporting the family financially, but next year they will switch roles, as Noviello will enter the job market and his wife will return to college.

Strother has felt the financial strain of being a non-traditional student in a different way. His financial strain hits him everytime that he receives a bill from the bookstore. The question "Where am I going to get the money to pay this?" rings in his head repeatedly. Before transferring to Bucknell, Strother was used to getting a regular paycheck from his job. He didn't like the position he was in, though, and knew that he would not be able to obtain a better one without attending a reputable four-year college.

Pino felt the same way. She had made good money bartending and had also worked as a nurses' aid. As she says, "Nothing stable." She also wanted something more.

These students such as Noviello, Pino, and Strothers who have lived on their own before and supported themselves bring "something more" with them to the Bucknell classrooms.

While taking a course about the two schools of education, Pino could easily comprehend and offer real-life examples of the two theories of education. Her two children are school-aged and have attended both conservative and progressive varieties of school.

Noviello can bring business experience and an "adult" perspective to the classroom. In political science, he has memory of elections that younger college students do not.

Just as non-traditional students provide a different perspective, it also means that they often have different needs than those of other students. To make the University aware of their special needs and to provide a social support group, the NSO (Non-traditional Student Organization) was formed two years ago.

Here issues such as childcare, transportation, the transferring of credits from community colleges, and financial aid are discussed. Friendships are also formed.

All of those non-traditional students who are interested in joining can contact Kathy Pino at 523-5560. Those who wish to offer their help to a group of students who are even busier than themselves and who offer a different perspective to the class room may also call.

Work it out, sweat it out, burn it off with exercise

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

It's four o'clock in the afternoon. Do you know where your friends are? At this hour of the day, you might want to check the weight center, the aerobics room, or one of the roads surrounding the golf course. During the late afternoon and after-dinner hours, many Bucknellians can be found working out.

Depending upon the way that you handle stress, exercise can either take your mind off the source of it, or provide a period of time to really concentrate on the problem. Either way, the strain that has been building up upon your body due to the stress will be relieved.

Ty Spence '95, a chemistry major who plays recreational football and hall tennis, says, "I get really stressed out about my classes and my roommate sometimes, and there's nothing like a good, hard-hitting game to relax. Even though exercising takes up time that could be used for studying, the games help to clear my mind for when I do hit the books."

Exercise is also a great way to get rid of, or prevent, the "Freshman Fifteen"— for first-year students as well as upperclassmen. Calories can be burned, fat trimmed, and muscles toned to achieve a more fit image.

Then there is the lifetime factor. Study after study has shown that those who exercise on a regular basis (three times a week) will have a longer life expectancy.

Aerobics classes are offered free of charge (they are a part of the $19,000, I presume). Monday through Friday at noon and 4 p.m., high impact aerobic courses are offered. At 9 a.m., on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and at 5 p.m., each weekday, intermediate classes are held.

For those who prefer jogging to jumping around, the loop from campus around the golf course is approximately three miles.

Weightlifters, bikers, ergers, and stairmasterers—the weight room hours are: 12–5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, 10 a.m.–10 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and from 10 a.m.–11 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday.

Intramurals are another great way to stay in shape and in good health. All kinds of competition are offered through the University's Intramural Program, including: a triathlon, tennis, volleyball, basketball, soccer, and weightlifting. Gather your friends, your hallmates, your favorite class, or your sorority sisters or fraternity brothers to form a team and participate.

No matter how you choose to exercise, remember to warm up before you get started and to cool down after you are finished. Also drink plenty of water to replenish lost fluids and avoid dehydration. Those who exercise heavily and regularly should consider a replenishing drink like Gatorade or 10K to replace lost nitrates, such as sodium and potassium.

Buddies And The Brown Bag

A group of male students wearing baseball caps and jeans relax on the steps in front of Vedder Hall on a brisk but lovely Autumn day.

Spike: Hey dudes, it sure is a brisk but lovely Autumn day.
Jake: Yes, I completely agree with you Spike.
Spike: Thank you, Jake.
Jake: You're welcome, Spike. (pause)
Brett: Actually dudes, this entire week has been simply glorious.
Spike: That's a very true comment indeed, Brett.
Brett: Thank you, Spike. I always feel good when I get compliments.
Spike: You're welcome, Brett. (pause)
Matt: You know, the weather was like this last year when we went to that beach with all those (gesturing) REALLY INCREDIBLE...
All: Waves?
Matt: Yes, weren't they fabulous?
Brett: They were indeed fabulous, Matt.
Matt: Thank you for agreeing with me, Brett.
Brett: You're welcome, Matt. (pause)
Rick: I remember that trip. That was when Spike got locked in the closet with that (gesturing) REALLY HOT...
All except Spike: Iron!
Spike: (Miffed) I was trying to make sure everyone's shirts were well-pressed for our big night on the town. You don't have to keep teasing me about it.
Rick: I'm sorry, Spike. I didn't realize you were still so sensitive about that.
Spike: Oh, that's alright, Rick. I understand. (pause)
Jake: (morosely) Gosh, I hate it when we argue. It makes me so darn morose.
Matt: (Agreeing) Yes, I agree with you Jake. We haven't had an argument like that since you and Spike raised your voices about which one of you would get that (gesturing) REALLY CUTE...
All: Puppy!
Jake: Yes, that puppy definitely was cute, Matt. And although I'm sorry I lost the coin toss, I'm sure Spike is providing an excellent home for it.
Spike: (Flattered) Why, thank you, Jake.
Jake: You're welcome, Spike. (pause)
A shapely female wearing an attractive yet scanty outfit passes directly in front of the five men. All five heads turn following her every move.
Brett: Gee dudes, that sure was an attractive yet scanty outfit.
Rick: Yes it was, Brett. I was trying to see if I could guess the designer but no luck.
All: Me too.
Jake: Perhaps it was a Liz Claiborne?
Matt: You know, I think you're right. Good job, Jake. (shakes Jake's hand)
Jake: Thank you Matt.
Matt: You're welcome, Jake.
Spike: Boy Jake, you sure are smart sometimes.
Jake: Why, thank you, Spike.
Spike: You're very welcome, Jake. (pause)
A group of five women swagger towards the men. They are boisterously gleeful and engage in repeated high fives.
Sally-Anne: (pompously) Hey Booooys. (Other women chuckle)
Men: Hi there... How are you! etc.
Sally-Anne: (laughing up her sleeve) Hey Spike.
Spike: Excuse me, Sally-Anne? I couldn't hear you with your mouth up your sleeve like that.
Sally-Anne: (hands Spike a brown bag while the other women reach a frenzy of laughter) You left something in my room last night. I guess you were a little drunk. (caresses him) But it was still great! Come back anytime, dude!
The women exit in fits of mocking laughter. As they leave, they continually nudge each other and initiate high-fives.
Brett: (Quizzically) What's that all about, Spike?
Spike: (looks in bag and immediately jerks head up, humiliated) Oh no. I'm so humiliated.
Rick: (Comforting) Hey dude, it's okay, you can tell us...
Spike: (Pulling object from the bag... his underwear) I guess I drank a little too much last night.
All: Oh No!
Spike: I feel so gross!
Jake: (Fatalistically) Hey man, it happens.
Spike: I feel so cheap!
Brett: (Soothing) Calm down, Spike.
Spike: (Bursting out) I'M SUCH A WHORE!!!
Rick: (Indignantly) I just can't believe she used you like that.
Matt: (Also indignantly) Me neither. What a jerk! I feel so... indignant.
Jake: I agree with you, Matt. She is a jerk.
Matt: Thank you for agreeing with me, Jake.
Jake: You're welcome, Matt.
Spike: Guys! What should I do, how can I ever look her in the face again.
Brett: Don't worry about her. She's just a jerk.
Spike: I know... I just can't believe what I did...I always knew she was a jerk! All women are such... jerks.
Jake: Come on, Spike. Let's go get some frozen yogurt.
All: Yeah.
Spike: Thanks Jake.
Jake: You're welcome, Spike.
Spike: And thanks guys, you're true pals.
All: You're welcome, Spike.
The men embrace each other sincerely, and go off to get some frozen yogurt.

Steve McNutt, artist with an attitude

BY COLLEEN RUSH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

It is not a matter of win, lose, or draw for Steve McNutt '95, it is just a matter of draw, draw, and draw some more. The newly appointed Graphics Artist for The Bucknellian has already made his mark on campus.

McNutt draws the weekly cartoon featured in The Bucknellian, as well as the graphics for Bison Tales, and any other last-minute sketches for articles without photographs or graphics. "I'm what they call an 'on-call' graphic artist. I get calls Thursday night and even Friday morning to draw for The Bucknellian," said McNutt.

In addition to his work for The Bucknellian, McNutt is preparing several of his cartoons for a contest sponsored by Scribbs-Howard, the publishing company of Peanuts. McNutt plans to submit several of the cartoons that have been published in The Bucknellian.

As if his schedule were not already crammed with deadlines and contests, McNutt has also found the time to enter several of his pieces in the Freshman Art Show, sponsored by the Office of Student Activities. Showcases of McNutt's and other students' artistic abilities are on display outside the Forum in the Langone Center.

As for future plans, McNutt will possibly choose major in art and a minor in English. Whether he chooses to be a professional cartoonist or specialize in design, McNutt is sure of one thing: his career. "I realized last year, it has to be art or I won't be happy. It is what I like to do and what I do best," explained McNutt.

McNutt credits his interest and success in art to his elementary and high school teachers. His first recollection of his artistic talent began in fourth grade. "I had a nice art teacher. She kept holding up my picture of the tree, or whatever, so I figured I was doing something right," McNutt said. High school was no exception for the aspiring artist. McNutt recalls his high school teacher as "very demanding." Though he sometimes was frustrated by her high quality standards, McNutt realizes that her demands were justified. "She was never really satisfied because she knew I could do better," McNutt commented.

Also acknowledged in his list of mentors are: Berke Breathed, his favorite cartoonist; Garfield, his favorite childhood cartoon; and Thomas Nast, a Dutch immigrant, who was known as the first real American cartoonist. "I did a paper on Nast in high school. I never realized until then how much cartoons had an affect on everything—politically and socially," he noted.

Though a complex talent, McNutt's philosophy of cartooning is somewhat simple. Whether they are political, satirical, or editorial, cartoons have proven to be most effective in conveying thoughts or ideas. "Cartoons are a really easy way of getting an idea across, whether it be funny or serious," McNutt explains, "People will read cartoons because they are easier and more fun."

Though cartooning is his specialty, McNutt also dabbles in pen and ink gesture drawings, as well as abstract designs. Another favorite creative outlet for McNutt is painting and sculpting.

The talented McNutt paints as well as draws cartoons. His detailed cartoons take him an average of only two to three hours to draw.

The lovely sombreroed Laura

A festive and full Travis

We could have ridden a donkey all the way to the Rio Grande in less time than it took us to find New Mexican Cuisine. The roadside shack in Sunbury is so cleverly camouflaged, we sped right past it. Fortunately, an obscure sign reading "Waitress wanted" clued us in to one of the random houses. In utter darkness, we stumbled to the door yet found it to be locked. As hungry as we were at this point, we considered breaking and entering, but instead knocked politely.

Once inside, we were overwhelmed by cheesy sombreros, red lighting and the sounds of Barry Manilow. To drink, we were offered a wide selection from which to choose: one can of Orange Crush, one can of Diet Pepsi, or Coke. After opting for the Coke, we dove into an order of salsa and chips ($3.95). The store-bought tortilla chips were devoured within minutes.

Dinner was served one plate at a time. First, Laura received her combination platter #1 ($10.00), which is a euphemism for a bean burrito accompanied by a cheese enchilada, a beef taco, and Spanish rice. The burrito and enchilada were smothered in hot red chili at her request. The taco was slightly better than Bostwicks, but Laura found the burrito to be exceptionally tantalizing.

Finally, after raiding Laura's plate a number of times, Travis received his combination platter #2 ($10.50). Behind platter #2, we found a chili relleno burrito and a cheese enchilada smothered in green chili, accompanied by a beef taco and Spanish rice. Travis found the chili relleno burrito to be tasty, but he expressed disappointment with the enchilada, which was also smothered in green chili rather than Spanish sauce.

As a finale to an already heavy meal, we both partook of the sopapilla sundae (by the way, "sopaipilla" was misspelled on the menu, leading us to question the authenticity of the Tex-Mex cuisine). The pastry was crushed under a mountain of coffee ice cream and hot fudge, and soon so were our stomachs.

Eating at New Mexican Cuisine is a complex process. Orders are required in advance and seating is by reservation only. For information or a complete menu, call the charming proprietor extraordinaire, Rick.

We only found a herd of three bison roaming the pastures of New Mexican Cuisine, but it was a "fiestive" experience none the less. Stay tuned next week as Laura and Travis continue to scour Central Pennsylvania for exceptional Tex-Mex cuisine.

EDITORIAL

Finally, an effort toward understanding

This week, one issue has struck across campus boundaries and forced its way into the spotlight. All sectors of the University community are examining its impact and devising ways to combat it. And for the first time in a long time, we are examining our problems and working to understand them.

From an advisor for gay, lesbian, and bi-sexual students, to two separate forums on sexism, to an MG101 advertisement deemed offensive, to an impassioned yet anonymous gay student's plea for understanding, to a round-table discussion on racism, Bucknell has finally begun to combat the problem of tolerance.

For a campus often considered apathetic, conservative, even stagnant, the plethora of events of the past week are at the same time both out-of-character and eminently laudable. We can imagine no better way to begin solving tolerance problems on campus than open dialogues and exchanges of ideas.

Indeed, the same thread runs throughout all the programs: Elliott, Sojka, Hartzell, Maguire, and Butler (among others) all agree: communication is the key to understanding. Even though the issues are disparate, there exists a pervasive ignorance among many on campus about the plight of any group not accepted as a norm.

Which is precisely why the straight-forward, no-holds-barred approach chosen by the forum sponsors is ideal. Participants were able to respond honestly to the questions before them in an atmosphere of learning and respect. No topics were taboo, and everyone who attended gained new insights from the viewpoints presented.

Simultaneously, in this era of politically correct speech and thought, we must scrupulously guard against confusing form with substance. Simply using PC terms without understanding on a deeper level why they're 'correct' is futile.

We must all determine for ourselves what impact our off-hand remarks may have. We must be discerning and thoughtful. And most importantly, we must strive not to speak or act as we are expected to; rather, we should follow our own senses of right and wrong and avoid being swept up in a herd mentality.

Jolted out of our occasional cynicism, we at The Bucknellian are thrilled with the progress made thus far in fostering a more tolerant and understanding campus atmosphere. We applaud the organizations, departments, fraternities, sorororities, and individuals who have together begun this significant endeavor.

At long last, Bucknell is changing for the better.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Maloney responds to internal criticisms

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week's issue of The Bucknellian contained a scathing letter to the editor that criticized me personally, and the way I run the College Republicans. The letter, written by Wayne P. Ferbert, begins by stating that I "constrict the exchange of ideas," and by extension "promote the destruction of critical thought."

Wayne raises some points that seem valid at first glance. However, he conveniently overlooks information that negates his argument, and he consistently takes my statements out of context.

It is also interesting to note that Wayne, who portrays himself as the savior of free speech, has never raised any of these concerns to me, despite his having been given many opportunities to do so.

Any member of the College Republicans can vouch for the fact that during every meeting, I have asked for criticisms, comments, or complaints. Never has Wayne P. Ferbert articulated any of these concerns or complaints to me. Wayne did, however, state that at one meeting he simply got up and left. Wayne, who accuses me of constricting the exchange of ideas, did absolutely nothing further the lofty goals he claims to advocate.

Any member of the College Republicans can also verify that I sent out a survey asking people for their criticisms anonymously. I can tell you that Wayne must have had something better to do that week, because I didn't get a survey back from him. How do I know? Because everyone who did return a survey decided to courteously sign their names despite the guaranteed anonymity.

...I probably disagree with the other officers of the College Republicans as I do on as many political issues as I do with anyone else.

Wayne continues in his letter by criticizing the constitution of the College Republicans. Wayne mistakenly claims that all officers will remain in office "until they see fit to resign." Wayne must have become so bored by the first page of our constitution that he completely ignored the second page, where it states: "1. Any member or officer may call for the impeachment of an officer. 2. The officer being impeached shall be removed from office only if more than 50% of the membership votes 'No Confidence'."

However, if you felt that specifically limited terms would be more appropriate than this parliamentary method, Wayne, then why didn't you bring this up at a meeting? I would have been more than happy to entertain your

Association for the Arts clarifies its funding, role

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to a Friday, October 5, 1991, article in The Bucknellian entitled "Class of '92 gives generously." In your article you state that one of the designated giving areas for Bucknell seniors is the Association for the Arts. That fact is true because the Association for the Arts depends entirely on gifts from Bucknellians and friends. However, the statement that "The Association for the Arts goes to subsidize those events which come to the Weis Center" is untrue. Actually, students reading this letter are beneficiaries of the Association in many ways.

The Association for the Arts is an organization of alumni and friends dedicated to enriching the arts experience for the Bucknell community through financial support for events or individuals. Our entire budget of around $100,000 comes from gifts. Since we are an organization run entirely by volunteers, 97% of the money given to us goes back into student programming. We are the icing on the cake, the residency or activity that is provided to enrich the curriculum. We do not dictate what activities occur, rather we respond to faculty requests. The only criteria we have for support are that the activity must benefit the students, faculty, or alumni of Bucknell and have some foundation in any of the arts.

The Association provides scholarships for undergraduate students who show talent in one or more of the arts. Students projects such as the photography club's exhibit entitled "A Day in the Life of Bucknell" assembled as a Jan Plan a few years ago are funded in part by the Association. Residencies in dance, theatre, and music have been funded by the Association for the Arts. Our connection to the Weis Center comes when an alumna or alumnus performs, as in the performance of D'Anna Fortunato, or when other performers spend time with students in master classes or residencies. Our funding goes toward that student interaction time, not the main stage performance.

The Center Gallery has benefitted from the Association for the Arts. We have provided funding for catalogues, shipment and insurance of pieces of art, and fees for the assembling of shows.

This spring the Bucknell campus will be providing programs to celebrate the Quincentennial with an emphasis on Latin America. Bucknell alumnus Richard Humphrey '94, New York gallery owner, is assembling a show of Latin American Women Artists to be premiered in the Center Gallery. The Association for the Arts and Bucknell University are helping to fund this show which will travel to galleries around the world after it closes here. In conjunction with the Quincentennial Celebration, residencies in dance and theatre will be preparing our students for a Collage Performance during the annual Celebration of the Arts Weekend March 13, 14, and 15.

One other endeavor this weekend is the re-taping of "A Bucknell Christmas Candlelight Service" in December. This hour-long show will be shown all over the country on PBS stations. The Association for the Arts is the sole funding source for this beautiful broadcast. The broadcast shown several years ago was one of the three finalists for the coveted Iris Awards given for excellence in public broadcasting. This year's event will be even more spectacular!

If anyone wishes more information on the Association for the Arts, please contact me. For some reason we are one of the best kept secrets on this campus.

College Republicans' Treasurer defends President

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to the absurd letter that appeared in the November 1st issue of The Bucknellian concerning the College Republicans. This letter, written by Wayne P. Ferbert, not only attacked my character but also attacked a respected colleague of mine. I am the current Treasurer of the College Republicans and was extremely disturbed after reading his letter.

Mr. Ferbert claims that the constitution of the College Republicans, written by Evan Maloney, constricts the exchange of ideas. Unknown to Mr. Ferbert, Evan Maloney received constructive and critical input from the executive board.

The constitution was edited and revised many times in order to develop an effective and efficient system. As a member of the executive board, I see our constitution as a gateway to open expression and thought.

Another misleading point that Mr. Ferbert discusses is the process by which the constitution was passed. The constitution was not forced upon the group as Mr. Ferbert so boldly implies.

A copy of the constitution was distributed to each member and each member was instructed to read and comment on its composition. Evan Maloney then asked the group if we should pass the document at that time or wait until the next meeting. The group agreed that the constitution was acceptable in its present state and it was passed. If Mr. Ferbert felt the constitution constricted the free exchange of ideas, why didn't he express his concerns at this time?

I was also personally offended by Mr. Ferbert's assumptions about the executive board of the College Republicans. Although we may be friends of Evan Maloney, we are not his pawns.

Evan Maloney and I were elected officers last semester by the members at that time. Last year's group focused its attention on the publication of The Sentinel, and did not put much effort into the College Republicans as whole.

I feel Evan Maloney has broadened our agenda, and added some life to the College Republicans. The other members of the executive boards were elected by the current members. This election was run by a nomination process, followed by a group vote. If Mr. Ferbert was so concerned about the future of the College Republicans, then why didn't he raise his voice at that point?

After reading Mr. Ferbert's letter numerous times, I still do not understand his motives. If he was as disgusted with Evan Maloney's leadership as he claims, he should have taken the time to discuss his concerns with anyone on the executive board before writing his letter.

I was also present at every meeting of the College Republicans, and Mr. Ferbert never gave the group any input. Maybe Mr. Ferbert would feel more comfortable with a "better run" organization such as the Progressive Caucus.

Coffee with Alice

BY KATHY MENDELSOHN

In the post-confirmation fervor that now illuminates the pages of almost every liberal, radical, and feminist publication available, we can sense that for many people in the United States, the issue is not over. In fact, the hearings and the confirmation served as a reminder of the present backlash against all progressive movements and of the need for immediate political action. We can see that the waves made by the recent proceedings must have been quite powerful since they were able to rattle even the Bucknell bubble a bit. However, like everywhere else, instead of interesting dialogue, we hear the same rhetorical questions tossed about in attempts to silence political debate. There are two such questions that seem to be in every mainstreamer's arsenal.

First: Why did she have to go and make such a fuss? Didn't she know that she would only be hurting herself and Thomas?

In response to this, it seems that we should first clarify exactly how this "fuss" came about. Anita Hill was identified and called upon to "bear witness." Defenders of Thomas (or of Bush's political integrity) claim to want desperately to know why she decided to come forward now and not when it happened. The answer to this burning question is simple: She never did come forward. She was asked to attest to Thomas' capacity to serve on the Supreme Court and was thereby faced with a decision to lie or not to lie—to tell the truth about her experiences with him or to cover them up. It was that simple.

Furthermore, being in the legal profession herself and an extremely intelligent woman, she was certainly aware that there would be no tangible reward for her testimony in a country where the degradation and oppression of women is not only accepted but encouraged as a means of asserting male power and privilege. Quite to the contrary, she would only be subjecting herself to a process of intense degradation and public humiliation—one that would disrupt her personal life and damage her professional reputation. In other words, we can see that there was nothing to be gained by such courageous testimony than the presentation of her own sense of justice and personal integrity.

Why did the Senate Judiciary Committee originally attempt to conceal the harassment charges from the public ear? Why shouldn't Supreme Court nominees be routinely subject to public scrutiny in a country that claims to be democratic?

Second: What's the big deal about a little light-hearted fun to liven up the work day? How was he supposed to know she'd be offended by harmless flirting?

Many venture to argue that even if Anita Hill's testimony were true, Thomas still would not be guilty of sexual harassment. However, maybe we are simply unclear as to what constitutes sexual harassment. A man who persists in asking a woman out after she has said no over and over again is harassing her, especially if he holds power over her professional future; and a man who talks to a colleague about the size of his penis, bestiality, etc., is not really flirting or engaging in romantic seduction. He is being obscene and he knows it. Furthermore, I would hope most men know it.

Taking the argument a step further, we can consider the claims of many Thomas supporters who say that women and men simply have divergent opinions on what comprises harassment and what may be called "inappropriate" sexual innuendos. Therefore, they will tell you, we cannot find a man guilty of a crime that he did not mean to commit. Well, this argument is simply indefensible if one is willing to examine the institutional biases that defend only the male reality. Since the realities of women and men are in such stark opposition to one another and women make up 51% of the population, why are the laws governing the assignment of testimonial Truth framed entirely in the male perception? Further, as stated eloquently by Katherine MacKinnon in The New York Times Magazine (on sexual harassment), "From whose standpoint, and in whose interest, is a law that allows one person's conditioned unconsciousness to contraindicate another's experienced violation?" Such claims of "differing realities" are deemed worthy of consideration only in a society that has historically and systematically devalued women's experiences and subjected their personal accounts to male (i.e. "legitimate") re-interpretation.

In an attempt to re-frame the present discourse on the topic, I would like to open up a new set of questions for debate:

Why were Specter's "perjury" accusations stated only on the Senate floor? Why weren't such incriminating charges taken directly to the press where he could be held legally accountable for such blatantly slanderous allegations? (Anyone presenting testimony on the Senate or House floor enjoys complete immunity to criminal or civil suits such as slander or character defamation, etc...)

Why was this country (and, particularly, its administration) worked into such a frenzy over the legitimate investigation of a man who may well serve as a Supreme Court justice for the next forty- plus years? Was the political credibility of Bush's nomination (not to mention, his ego) not also ideas. However, how can I respond to criticisms that aren't expressed to me?

Ferbert unfairly attacks the officers of the College Republicans, implying that they are pawns of mine. Let me tell you, Wayne, that I probably disagree with the other officers of the College Republicans on as many political issues as I do with anyone else. Wayne complains that all of our executives are sophomores. I'd like to know how you came to the mistaken conclusion that all sophomores are worthless, Wayne, but I'm sure you have your reasons. In any case, one cannot ignore the fact that when the discussion of the candidates came to the floor, Wayne P. Ferbert was characteristically silent.

Wayne also unfairly assumes to know all of my political opinions. You would be very surprised to hear my stands on various issues, Wayne. I am most certainly not a party-line, blind faith Republican, as you incorrectly state. It is presumptuous of you to claim to have such insight into my ideas and opinions without knowing me, and it shows ignorance on your part.

Yet another mistake you make is to take my comments out of context. My comments were made in jest, and you seem to present them as my actual beliefs. The professors with whom I enjoy a close, friendly relationship know that I don't denigrate their worth. Most of my professor friends also happen to be liberals, and I have told them the same statement in jest. Not one of them became offended, probably because they have senses of humor.

And my comment about welfare recipients was also an attempt at levity. If you are as literal-minded and serious as your letter indicates, then I feel for you. Without the ability to laugh at life, we would all probably be severely depressed people. And, I am sorry to say that I will not modulate my personality merely to suit you.

To sum up, Wayne, you should have brought your concerns to me or any other executive before you went off half-cocked complaining to The Bucknellian. If I blew you off and ignored your comments, then you would have been justified airing your concerns in public, but I wouldn't have done that. And you cannot criticize me for concerns that you never expressed to me. Only you are at fault for the lack of communication. I did my part to solicit your opinions.

So, Wayne, to help you on your way to the reorganization you want, I will hold a special meeting next week for you to call for my impeachment. And, if you choose to be as silent as you were at every other meeting, I will call for my own impeachment. Maybe if you're lucky, you will be elected president. You already seem to have hit the campaign trail.

College Republican Officers back President

TO THE EDITOR:

I am insulted by Wayne Ferbert's comment in his letter to the editor that implies that the fairly elected officers of the College Republicans were hand-picked by the president, Evan Coyne Maloney. Not one of the current officers was nominated by Mr. Maloney, and Mr. Maloney abstained from voting in the elections of these officers.

It is also unfair to assume that the officers of the College Republicans blindly follow Mr. Maloney. The executives of the College Republicans differ in many ways with one another, yet we have always done our best to reach a fair consensus. Mr. Ferbert has never given us any of his input, so his attack on the leadership of the College Republicans is completely baseless.

Senior speaks out about Bucknell's homophobia

TO THE EDITOR:

Over my past four years at Bucknell, I have learned how closed-minded and closed this school really is. The racist and discriminatory comments that are constantly spoken on this campus don't foster a greater understanding of diversity, rather they perpetuate individuals' naive stereotypes of things they don't understand. It is difficult to truly understand this fact unless you are a member of a so called "minority," or perhaps more accurately stated, a member of a group that doesn't fit into the norm of the Bucknell student body. As a senior, I have been unable to tell a single person here that I am gay. It's not something that has been easy for me to conceal, but since I'm surrounded by homophobia everywhere I turn, I don't feel that I have any alternatives.

There have been many times where I've wanted to confide in someone whom I consider my friend, but then I repeatedly hear Bucknell students seriously talking about killing or beating up all homosexuals. I become terrified. How can I even consider talking about who I am when this could be the result? What have I done to deserve such treatment? I am not any different from everyone else here at this school. How can people want to physically harm me just because I am homosexual? Doesn't anyone think about what they are saying? When you call something "gay" or a person a "fag," you are making this campus more homophobic and more intolerable for myself and for every other gay and lesbian student at Bucknell. To a large degree, I've felt alone and persecuted during my time at Bucknell. I'm not a radical person by nature, in fact I'm quite conservative. I'm not willing to lose everything that I have worked for at this school. But at the same time I want Bucknell to know who I really am as a person. I am proud of my sexual orientation. Despite the discrimination that I have encountered at Bucknell, I am not willing to change who I am in order to satisfy a group of narrow-minded bigoted individuals, whose wish is that I did not exist. Well I do! And there are many other gay and lesbian students at this school who exist as well. I have been silent for too long. I will not stay hidden to perpetuate the stereotype that all students at Bucknell are heterosexual. The attitudes on this campus can't continue!

All I am asking is that you be more open to homosexuality at Bucknell... we need to understand different lifestyles...

All I am asking is that you be more open to homosexuality at Bucknell. It's not a matter of whether you agree with it or not, but if we as a campus are every going to burst this bubble, and yes, President Sojka, there is a bubble; we need to understand different lifestyles and things which we do not understand. I could be your friend or someone you know or see around campus. Why should my sexual orientation suddenly change the way you took at me? Next time you're at a party or talking among students, think about what you are saying, for I could be the one you are talking to. I would like to graduate from Bucknell knowing that things can improve at this school. I'm sorry that I do not have the courage to personally sign this letter, but in the future I will be able to come out of my isolation, and let my friends at Bucknell know that there is no reason to fear and react with violence toward homosexuality. If this letter should achieve anything, I at least hope it will stimulate some discussion. If you read this letter and react with anger or immediately throw it away as if it didn't exist, then you have just demonstrated the problems which continue to plague this University.

Professor stresses proof-reading

TO THE EDITOR:

I was delighted that The Bucknellian devoted extensive press coverage to the department of theatre and dance's production of A Midsummer Night's Dream, and it was a great pleasure to write the review of the performance which appeared in last week's issue (November 1, pg. 10). I must say, however, that my response to reading the published article wavered between amusement and chagrin.

Due to a series of typographical mistakes and inexplicable editorial changes (including the introduction of errors in syntax and the deletion of the concluding paragraph so that the piece trails off weakly with a sentence in parenthesis), the review does not accurately reflect my writing style or the care and attention I put into the preparation of the article. Needless to say, as a member of the English department faculty whose responsibilities include the teaching of composition, I have particular reason to be concerned about the impression such a sloppy presentation of my work may have created.

First, I wish to assure the Bucknell community that the rhetorical and verbal blunders in the piece did not originate with the author...

Women's soccer tri-captain upset at poor coverage

TO THE EDITOR:

I would just like to comment on the poor coverage of the women's soccer team this season in The Bucknellian. First of all, on several occasions incorrect facts have been written in several articles. For example, on October 4, The Bucknellian wrote, "Bucknell then takes on Gettysburg, a team that it has never lost to in its three matches dating back to 1988. Last year, Bucknell was victorious by a 2-1 margin." These statements are false. Bucknell has not beaten Gettysburg in the past three years. This season marks the first time.

Another example is in the September 27th article where it was written, "The loss (Holy Cross) has been lessened due to the outstanding play of the Bucknell defense. This unit is anchored by co-captains Genine Streeper '92 and Shannon Smith '92..." For the record, I played for only about half of the game due to an injury and when I did play, I was the right wing, an offensive position.

Second, the team is headed by tri-captains. The Bucknellian has failed to recognize Mandy Head '92 as a leader for women's soccer. This fact brings up another point. Not since September 6th has Coach Toby Lovecchio been contacted about the team or any of the games played. How can an accurate account of an away game be written when neither the coach nor any of the players have been contacted? If any of these people had been contacted, maybe some of the inaccuracies printed could have been prevented.

What has really made me distraught, and has initiated this letter is the fact that on October 25th there was no article written at all about women's soccer. I could maybe understand if the team had lost every game this season; HOWEVER, the team had a six-game winning streak going.

I don't intend to be mean to any of the other Bucknell sports teams when I say this, but that is more games than some teams win in a season (We were one of those teams last year.)

Nothing was written about the team's outstanding come-from-behind victory against Penn State, in overtime, to keep the streak alive.

Nothing was written about the team's outstanding come-from-behind victory against Penn State, in overtime, to keep the streak alive. Nothing was said about the team making the playoffs in only its second year as varsity and their first year in the Patriot League.

My only question is WHY? Not one word was written! Many parents were on campus for Parents' Weekend and also questioned why. On Friday, I could not wait to get a copy of The Bucknellian to see what had been written about women's soccer. To my surprise, I found nothing and it really disturbed me.

All that I have to say is that better coverage of this team, as well as, of other Bucknell sports teams needs to be done in the future. The athletes could be achieving great feats only no one will know.

Umbrella endorses advisor for gays, lesbians, and bisexuals

TO THE EDITOR:

We, the member groups of the Umbrella Organization, strongly support Friends of Lesbians and Gays (F.L.A.G.) in their efforts to create a new Bucknell staff position, responsible for dealing with the issues of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students. We agree that due to the inhospitable climate, the violence, the insensitivity, and the ignorance of the Bucknell community, such a position is both desirable and necessary.

We recognize that gay, lesbian, and bisexual students are not provided with the necessary support systems to deal with the victimization and abuse they suffer within the Bucknell community. Unknown to most heterosexual students on campus, gay, lesbian, and bisexual students are faced with incidents of violence such as physical assault, verbal abuse, harassment, vandalism, and undirected displays of violent homophobia. There exists no aspect of our university, all the way from administration and public safety to classrooms and residence halls, from which a gay, lesbian, or bisexual student is free from violence, harassment, homophobia. Presently all of this occurs within our community without adequate support networks for these students or institutional response to these problems.

...in light of the violence against gay, lesbian, and bisexual students and the silencing of these voices on campus...the University must make an offical commitment to respond to this problem...

A staff position created to deal with the issues and concerns of these students could meet the following three needs. First, such a person could serve as an advocate to these students in confronting violence and harassment within the existing support and judicial structure, much in the way that the Women's Resource Center assists and advocates for women in cases of sexual assault and harassment. Second, this position could also advocate the voice and needs of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students, through educational programming, staff sensitivity training, and enforcement of the Bucknell anti-discrimination policy. This would fulfill a similar role to the Multiculture Center and International Student's Advisor in monitoring the campus environment for the students which they represent. Lastly, this position could address the issue of gay, lesbian, and bisexual people's contributions to the academic and curricular aspect of the University.

The Umbrella Organization is according to its mission statement a coalition of student groups organized to empower those students work for social change, and "upholding the rights of all peoples regardless of race, gender, sexual orientation, class, religious affiliation, physical or mental ability, or ethnicity." As such, we feel it is our responsibility to support F.L.A.G. in its present effort to create a staff position. It would seem appropriate, that in light of the violence against gay, lesbian, and bisexual students and the silencing of these voices on campus, that the University must make an official commitment to respond to this problem and reinforce this commitment with the financial resources needed for this staff position.

Who is to blame for lack of health insurance?

BY JON HANSEN

It is wrong that there are people in the United States who are unable to obtain health care insurance. All people should be eligible and have some type of insurance to cover health care needs. The national health care issue is an extremely important issue, and it is one that is receiving too little press coverage.

As wrong as it is that there are people without insurance, it is worse to blame the medical professionals of this country for the crisis. Yet, this fingerpointing is exactly what many Congressmen in Washington are doing. Americans, especially politicians, love to find scapegoats. The medical professionals of the U. S. have been chosen to be the representative "goat" for this issue. It is supposedly their mismanagement and greed that has caused the problem, so now the government, many argue, should step in and take control.

The politicians have to find someone to blame (other than themselves), and since it is the doctors and dentists who ultimately must refuse treatment, they are easy targets.

Upon examination of the situation, one realizes that the lack of health care insurance is not the medical professionals' fault. The majority of people who are unable to obtain insurance are either unemployed, or are earning at or below poverty-level income. It is not, however, the medical professionals who have fired these people, but rather the multinational corporations who have taken their business to a cheaper region of the world. In fact, an overwhelming majority of these uninsured people have never worked in the medical profession. The politicians have to find someone to blame (other than themselves), and since it is the doctors and dentists who ultimately must refuse treatment, they are easy targets.

Some argue that people are unable to obtain health care because the medical rates are too high. I will not claim that a visit to the doctor's office is cheap, but runaway rates are not the fault of the doctors, but of the insurance companies themselves. Malpractice insurance is skyrocketing due to today's litigious society. Doctors, however, must deal with small insurance hassles every day that, over a year, add up to thousands of dollars. What is a doctor or dentist to do when a procedure costs $500 to carry out(excluding a fee for labor)but the insurance company will only, and legally, have to pay $325? Obviously, the deficit the doctor is left with must be made up in some way. This practice is ocurring in the U.S. today. Some may ask how insurance companies are able to establish these below-value wages—it is the Congressmen who pass the laws that allow this practice to occur. These are the same people who would be trying to establish wages if any type of regulation were to occur. It is safe to say that the only people who mismanage and abuse money more than insurance companies are Congressmen.

It is easy for people to blame doctors because they do make a solid living. Why shouldn't the doctor pay for health care insurance? After all, he has two foreign cars and two kids in college. Yet, there are just as many wealthy bankers in the United States, and no one seems to expect them to pay for the S&L bailout. If this country is to have health care insurance for all, then every taxpayer must bear the burden.

The Congressmen are afraid to tell you how much national health insurance will cost, because they realize the pricetag far exceeds even the most liberal estimate. They are even more afraid to tell you that you will have to pay even more taxes to cover the cost. So, they are content to blame the physicians, and potentially destroy their profession, rather than find a viable solution. Perhaps examination of the insurance companies themselves is in order, for after all, aren't they the ones denying the coverage? When the national health care issue comes to the forefront, do not allow some politician to try to tell you your doctor is to blame. You are as much at fault as he is.

on the line? Why did the Senate Judiciary Committee originally attempt to conceal the harassment charges from the public ear? Why shouldn't Supreme Court nominees be routinely subject to public scrutiny in a country that claims to be democratic?

Why were the expert witnesses who were sitting in the wings during the hearings never called on to testify? More importantly (and more interestingly), why was the incorrect psychological terminology, that was flippantly used by people so clearly out of their field of expertise, tolerated by the judiciary committee? (Indeed, why, when their lack of knowledge in the area of psychology was so lucidly demonstrated by Specter who picked up on a witness' misdiagnosis of Hill's alleged practice of "transference" when, even if it were a valid insight, the term he should have grasped for was "projection?") It's also interesting to point out that although the committee ruled not to bring in the expert witnesses, the Republicans then became anxious and began to press the nonexpert witnesses to come up with explanations as to why Hill was able to pass the lie detector test. Furthermore, the Democrats were of no help since they failed to object to this bogus questioning.

It's also interesting to point out that although the committee ruled not to bring in the expert witnesses, the Republicans then became anxious and began to press the nonexpert witnesses to come up with explanations as to why Hill was able to pass the lie detector test.

Why did Thomas's colleagues respond with such alarm when asked about his propensity for such crimes? These witnesses were, in fact, brought in to testify about his character so shouldn't they have known something about his recreational use of pornography? (The committee and the public did.) For those who did know about his hobby but thought it irrelevant, were they, perhaps, unaware of the empirical studies that demonstrate positive relationships between the consumption of pornography, sexist attitudes, and the tendency to engage in abusive and violating behavior?

Why, in most such cases, are the sexual "proclivities" of the woman always called into question, whereas the sexual lives and activities of men (however morally reprehensible) are always presumed to be "normal" and "expected"?

Finally, as expressed by Katha Pollitt in her article appearing in The Nation on November 4, why was it that when "forced to choose between a woman who had nothing to gain and a man who had everything to lose, a woman with a reputation for probity and a man who is a demonstrable hypocrite, a man who says he has never discussed Roe v. Wade with anyone on earth and who claims not to have written, intended or possibly even understood the ideas and opinions published under his name, most people found him the more believable[?] Is it any wonder women are reluctant to bring harassment charges against men?"

In closing I would like to say that while people may choose to believe either Thomas or Hill, neither his nor her failure to tell the truth could legitimate the disgracefully unprofessional proceedings of our Senate, nor the personally degrading treatment that Ms. Anita Hill was victim to.

ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENT

Boswell seeks to engage, entertain

The Weis Center is a forum for traditional and modern, "safe" and controversial art.

BY LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Perhaps you have found yourself sitting at a Weis Center performance, amazed at the professional quality and wondering how such a talented performer found his way to Lewisburg, your idea of the middle of nowhere. Or perhaps you have found yourself sitting in that same seat at a different performance, questioning how the performer gets away with calling her work "art" and wondering if Bucknell was the only place in the nation willing to let him perform in public.

Bill Boswell, director of cultural events, is the person with answers to these questions. Responsible for shaping the Weis Center performing arts season, he is faced each year with the challenge of providing a varied and balanced schedule of quality events for Bucknell and the surrounding community.

"The campus, however, is first and foremost in our minds," he states. "A tremendous amount of thought is given to what will expose the students to what is the best in art today, as well as historically."

With this in mind, Boswell begins to narrow the wide spectrum of artists from which he has to choose. The difficulty comes in trying to cover all of the artistic extremes in the only eight to twelve major events per season. An ideal season should include proportional offerings of classical and modern music, jazz and pop, dance and theatre, avant-garde and familiar.

Knowing that he cannot please everyone, he finds it especially difficult to achieve a perfect balance. He says, "If universal appeal topped the list of priorities, the Center could easily settle into a niche of presenting pop events, and my job would be appreciably easier."

Ashley Chertkof—The Bucknellian

Bill Boswell, director of cultural events for the Weis Center, tries to balance a wide spectrum of artists to appeal to the diverse preferences of his audience.

Boswell attends performances, listens to recordings, and views videos of potential bookings. Using his extensive background as a musician, composer, writer, teacher, and director, he leaves his personal tastes behind and looks for artists of the highest quality. "What I like about a performer is unimportant, as long as the event is well done and of a high artistic caliber," he comments.

Most importantly, Boswell talks to members of the Bucknell community, especially students, professors and administrators with interests in particular artists or genres of performance. He is always looking for those artists which can tie in with the music or theatre and dance departments and present master classes and workshops. Bucknell alumni or student performing groups of professional caliber are also considered.

A firm believer that "art should not only make you feel good," Boswell looks for performers that will engage the audience and provoke both an emotional and intellectual response. "If my personal tastes influence Weis Center programming at all, it is by attempting to jostle staid preconceptions and engender reactions from audience members, subscribing to the philosophy that art should engage and challenge, not lull."

Boswell says that he can feel the reaction to a performance by merely watching an audience. He also finds it useful to listen in the lobby during intermission or after a show. He looks at any of the performance-related comments that he overhears as a good sign. If patrons are "talking about taking their kid to the dentist," however, chances are that the artist did little to engage them.

October's sold-out concert of performance artist Laurie Anderson generated both extremely positive and negative remarks while few anywhere in between, according to Boswell. He says that he has heard nothing, however, to discourage him from bringing an artist of this genre to campus again.

He states, "I want people to be engaged in the performance. I am not attempting to stir up controversy but to expose the campus to a broad range of art, including what is being done in art today. This includes performance art, and I would like to see us do more of it."

Boswell hopes he can continue to introduce new forms of artistic expression as he finds it rewarding to contribute to the students' education in this way. "I enjoy working with students because they are energetic and their minds are still open. I get to do a lot of 'teaching' in this position," he explains.

"My hope for the immediate future is that more students will trust that what we bring in is going to be engaging on some level," he adds. "I am so pleased when students trust us enough to come to a performance because they know it will of good quality, even though they may not like it. The students need to trust that they will be entertained in the best sense of the word."

Modern dance at Weis Center tonight

Modern dance enthusiasts will be in for a rare treat tonight at 8 p.m. in the Weis Center as the renowned Lewitzky Dance Company brings its act to Bucknell. Directed by one of America's few West Coast choreographers, Bella Lewitzky, the 12-member ensemble has performed in 43 states and 15 countries on four continents in its 25-year history.

Lewitzky has been dancing, choreographing, and teaching for 50 years now and she has in that time become known as "one of the authentic voices of American modern dance" (International Herald-Tribune, Paris, France) with "a totally unique choreographic spirit." (Der Abend, Berlin) Her dancers are "superb; smooth-muscled, with limitless strength and flexibility." (Chicago Sun Times) She has been the recipient of more than 30 artistic awards as well as numerous creative grants.

The dance program, featuring live musical accompaniment, will include "Game Plan," "Episode #1 - Recuerdo" and "Pas de Bach." Harpsichordist Lois Svard, associate professor of music at Bucknell, and flutist Larry Attaway, musical director for the company, will perform the last piece together. Tickets for the performance are $15, available at the Weis Center Box Office. The performance is partly funded by a grant from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Council on the Arts.

Dancers Nora Reynolds and David Caley perform with the Lewitzky Dance Company at the Weis Center tonight at 8:00 p.m.. The five movements of PAS DE BACH, portray the wit and beauty of composer J.S. Bach while commenting lightly on the lingering mannerisms of the baroque period. Tickets will be available at the Weis Center box office for $15 ($5 with BUID).

Other People's Money not worth yours

– Movie Review –

Other People's Money, Rated R. – Danny Devito plays Larry Garfield, a unscrupulous takeover maverick who loves nothing more than "dogs, doughnuts and money." The project was sponsored by Dunkin Donuts, and seems at times to be a ninety minute commercial. Though the subject, the affect of corporate takeovers on small communities is important, Other Peoples Money does not deal with it well.

BY PAT MCCORMICK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The most we can ask for when we see a film is to see the best product the film-maker is able to give us. But, when Other People's Money substitutes its integrity for a ninety minute commercial for Dunkin Donuts, it loses much of its value. Larry Garfield, played by Danny DeVito, loves three: "dogs, doughnuts, and money" (Of course if Dinte Moore stew had sponsored the project, the three loves would have been dogs, beef stew, and money).

He does develop one other love though, when DeVito falls for an attorney, Penelope Ann Miller (Kindergarten Cop). Miller defends New England Wire & Cable for her father, the CEO, "Jorgy," played by Gregory Peck, against the scrupulous DeVito who wants to buy out the company. In the film's finale the shareholders place their votes to decide the future of the company. Jorgy resists Garfield, or "Larry the Liquidator" as he is known, by appealing to the worker's small town's sense of tradition, whereas DeVito steps in to remind the workers about their wallets in the movie's most provocative scene, where the audience is asked to question their own values as the stockholders are asked to answer theirs.

As the money hound, DeVito stays true to his character and doesn't "soften" to show his caring and "sensitive side." Garfield simply tries to get the girl and the money without sacrificing either. In that sense, Other People's Money honors its subject while avoiding the fantasy of "love overcoming all" in the world of hostile corporate takeover.

Other People's Money loses a step though, when it includes an upbeat "everything works out" ending, which consoles its audience with the implication that an "out with the old and in with the new" philosophy is the key to saving old jobs in a new age. Sure, DeVito is crude, and it's funny most of the time. But, his bite is timid compared with many close ups and dialogue dedicated to an extensive advertising campaign and wrapped-up conclusion sending everybody home feeling good. Whether the intention was to make a good movie or to sell a few doughnuts, nobody's hungry. The result may have been an insult to an audience's good taste.

Yello's album Baby is rich and enthralling

BY CRAIG BITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Although seemingly mired in total obscurity, the band Yello has at least one song I am sure is quite familiar to even the average Bucknellian. Yello's only popular song, "Oh Yeah" has been featured in such films as The Secret of My Success and Ferris Beuller's Day Off as well as television advertisements for Twix candy. However, behind the numerous promotional rip-offs, Yello is an extraordinarily eclectic and avant-garde band.

Album Review

Yello's latest release (1991), available only on import from England, is titled Baby. Prior to Baby, Yello has four other releases: You Gotta Say Yes to Another Excess (1983), Stella(?), Solid Pleasure (1985), and One Second (1987). Yello's sound has changed drastically over the years. Their sound was originally created by the trio of Boris Blank, Dieter Meier, and Carlos Peron. After Solid Pleasure, Carlos disappeared, and their sound improved enormously.

Don't ask what instruments they play, Yello is purely an electronic setup. All arranging, composing, and engineering is performed by Boris Blank while Meier is an insignificant figure, his vocals are extremely powerful and individualistic. I highly doubt anyone else could master his ability to "talk-sing" (there is really no way to describe it), which combines singing with a sense of both rapping and toasting with an unidentifiable European (German?) accent. There is little suggestion of Carlos Peron's input on Yello's first three albums other than "effects and tapes."

Yello's first album, You Gotta Say Yes to Another Excess, is a rather difficult album to listen to. I suggest that you start with some of their more recent releases and work your way up to dealing with You Gotta Say Yes to Another Excess. Their second album, Solid Pleasure is equally difficult to listen to, yet the songs compiled on it lay a foundation for Yello's more recent sound dominated by Latin rhythms and new wave electronic sound. Take for example the song titled "Bananas to the Beat,"... get the picture? Stella, Yello's third album, within the category of "alternative music" is more conventional, due to the debut of "Oh Yeah" on this album. The fourth album, One Second, is the one everybody should listen to. The swinging Latin beats and invigorating melodies are extremely intriguing. Songs such as "La Habanera," "Goldrush," and "Si Senor the Hairy Grill" are all powerfully rich and enthralling. However, much like Enigma and the latest release by The Orb, One Second must be listened to in its entirety to truly appreciate the work. The sound of One Second is so diverse because of accompaniment from added vocals, "real" drums, "real" guitar, piano and trombone. One Second could easily become one of your favorite albums.

Yello's latest album, Baby, is very similar to One Second in themes and sound, yet lacks some of the strong cohesiveness that One Second expresses. There is little chance that you will "experience" Baby the way it is possible to "experience" One Second. Whether Baby will be readily available in the US remains to be seen. Yello disciples may want to special order it from England for their collection.

Broadway choreographer in residence

Five time Tony nominee Graciela Daniele will choreograph for Bucknell Dance Company

BY NICOLE COBBAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Anyone who has seen A Chorus Line knows the heartaches and the triumphs that accompany a dancer trying to make it on Broadway. Graciela Daniele has not only made it to Broadway, she has choreographed and directed some of Broadway's most successful productions. Bucknell has the rare opportunity to share Daniele's experience and talent this semester when she joins the Bucknell community as an artist in residence with the department of theatre and dance.

While at Bucknell, Daniele will be guest-speaking at several of the theater classes and is choreographing a piece for the Bucknell Dance Company. Her work will be performed within the department of theatre and dance's collage project "El Arte Escenico Sobre Latino America" this March. It will, however, be premiered during the Fall Dance Concert on December 6 and 7. The Graciela Daniele residency is sponsored by the Bucknell Association for the Arts in conjunction with their Quincentennial Project which focuses on Latin America in the spring of 1992 and the North American continent in the fall.

Born in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Daniele graduated from a school of performing arts and at the age of 14 was studied in classical ballet. She moved to France to work for various ballet companies for five years. While in Paris, she saw J. Robin's production of West Side Story and that "changed my life."

From there Daniele moved to New York to become a professional dancer and attended several American dance schools to learn different languages of dance. Daniele feels she was very lucky because her dance teacher was a choreographer on Broadway and encouraged her to audition for a few of his productions. Within a month of moving to New York Daniele landed her first Broadway role in What Makes Sammy Run.

Soon after, Daniele began assisting Michael Bennett in several of his productions. She performed and assisted in several other of Bennett's productions such as Promises, Promises and Coco, starring Katherine Hepburn.

Throughout this transition, Daniele became more and more interested in the creative aspect of theater, rather than the performing. She feels that, "the real creation doesn't belong to the actor, it belongs to the director and the writer." The last production that Daniele performed in was Bob Fosse's Chicago, produced in 1975.

Daniele cites three major figures in the history of Broadway: Michael Bennett, whom she studied under for several years and who would go on to produce such hits as A Chorus Line; Bob Fosse, whom Daniele claims to be her second "guru" and whose long list of Broadway productions include All That Jazz and Chicago; and J. Robins, the legendary director of West Side Story. Daniele regrets never being able to work with Robins, describing all three of them as "geniuses."

Daniele's first Broadway project was History of American Film, produced last year at Bucknell. But she claims her first hit to be the Gilbert and Sullivan production of The Pirates of Penzance which she choreographed. Originally meant for public theater, the show became such a hit that it moved onto Broadway and eventually to London. Daniele was nominated for a Tony as a result of her work on The Pirates of Penzance and won a Drama Desk Award.

Since then, Daniele has worked several other major Broadway hits, Zorba the Greek with Anthony Quinn, The Rink starring Liza Minelli and Chita Rivera, The Mystery of Edwin Drood and Once on This Island. The result of all her work has been five Tony nominations, four for choreography and one for directing, and the distinction of being only one of two women to be nominated for more than two Tony awards. Most recently Daniele has directed Falsetto Land and March of the Falsettos by William Finn at the Hartford Stage.

Carroll's work a Jan-plan in Alice Project

BY KATIE DEBONVILLE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell theatre and dance department held three workshops this week in preparation for the Alice Project, a Jan-Plan that is being offered this year. Laurie McCants of the Bloomsburg Theatre, local composer and music critic Kyle Gann, and F. Elaine Williams of the Bucknell theatre department are the collaborators in charge of this project.

Improvisation classes were held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights. They will be held on the same nights next week as well. According to Laurie McCants, all interested students are invited to participate in an original adaptation of Lewis Carroll's Alice in Wonderland. The production, which will be directed by McCants and performed on January 30 and 31 and February 9, is a joint effort with the Bloomsburg Theatre Festival and combines theatre with puppetry. During classes, the students will practice improvising with puppets and masks, and staging ideas will be shared.

"The production is still in the embryonic stage," McCants stated. She continued, "The purpose of the classes is to get students used to working with masks and puppets." The project is a large undertaking, but it will be made easier by combining Bucknell's theatre resources with the professional resources of the Bloomsburg Theatre.

The collaborators of the Alice Project have been working for awhile planning the program. McCants credited F. Elaine Williams for her work and Kyle Gann for composing the score for the project. All three are looking forward to working with students on the production. "Alice in Wonderland is a wonderful piece to work on; the intriguing complexities keep unfolding," McCants commented, adding, "I think it will be fun."

Breakin' Bison eager for new season

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

It has been almost nine months since the stands, aisles, and doorways of Davis Gym have been filled by over-capacity crowds. Finally, the season tip-off is only hours away as the Breakin' Bison will host the Lithuanian National Team tonight at 7:30. But, more on that match-up later. First, here's a preview of the 1991-92 team, Patriot League, and the schedule.

THE 1991-92 BREAKIN' BISON

With nine letter winners, including four starters returning, head coach Charlie Woollum's team has the talent to once again challenge for a league championship.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Co-captain Pat King '92 averaged 7.7 rebounds and 12.6 points, while shooting a school record .670 from the field. King was named to the All-League's second team.

THE GUARDS

Bucknell's strength has always been in its backcourt. This season's corps should have no league peer. Starting at the shooting or #2 guard position, co-captain Bill Courtney '92 led the league in scoring (20.0 ppg, 3.6 apg) and was named to the First Team All-Patriot League team. The 6'2" The Sporting News' Pre-Season Patriot League Player of the Year and All-America candidate also set the school's single-season scoring mark with 619 points. Courtney needs just 51 points to become Bucknell's 21st 1,000 point scorer.

"If he improves and has a good year, he could be a definite NBA prospect. He has the size, skills, and desire to play," commented Woollum. "Everyone knows he can score, but he is also an outstanding defensive player."

Russell Peyton '93 will finally get his shot to run the show for Bucknell after backing Courtney up at the point guard position all of last season. He's one of the quickest players in the league and should give opposing guards headaches on both the offensive and defensive ends of the floor. Look for the 6'0" Peyton to keep the offensive tempo upbeat and to provide numerous lay-ups as a result of his skillful passing.

Depth and versatility should also make this the league's number one backcourt. Chris Simpson '94 will be the first guard off the bench. The 6'1" 203-pounder can play either the point or shooting guard spot which should allow Woollum to shuffle his starters to keep them fresh. Sharp-shooting Mark Matthews '95 could also find himself inserted into the line-up should the first three have trouble solving an opponent's zone defense.

THE FORWARDS

Both of last year's Second Team All-Patriot League forwards return to Lewisburg to continue their outstanding careers that began in different directions. Co-captain Pat King '92 was a "walk-on" junior varsity player his first two seasons before emerging as an inside force last year. King (6'6", 205 lbs.) averaged 7.7 rebounds and 12.6 points per game while shooting a Bucknell-record .670 from the floor. His leadership abilities and tremendous work ethic should continue to press his teammates to excel.

In the winter of 1989, Mike Bright '93 brought the alley-oop slam dunk to previously uncharted territory as the only freshman starter during Woollum's tenure in Lewisburg. Bright also hit 50 three-pointers last year on his way to a 14.6 ppg average. At 6'6", he also hauled in 6.6 rebounds per contest, as well as a Bucknell record 69 steals.

Matt Clark '93 and Raymond Brown '94 will be called on to provide important minutes off of the bench. Clark, who also possesses a long-range jumper to play the guard slot, will most likely spell Bright at the small forward position. Brown, an outstanding leaper at 6'5", should fill in for King at the power forward position.

THE CENTERS

Paul Olkowski '93 will be the work horse. At 6'8", 226 pounds, he accounted for 7.2 points and 4.6 rebounds per contest last season. He is one of Bucknell's most experienced players, having started every game last year and playing in 28 games as a freshman.

"In many ways, Paul is the key to our basketball team. He has to play hard and stay out of foul trouble. He is one of the most fundamentally-sound performers we've had in the center position," said Woollum.

Depth at this position could determine just how far the Breakin' Bison will go this season. Brian Eisert '95 is the team's tallest player at 6'11", but will need time to adjust to the Division I level, prompting Woollum to say, "We don't know how soon he'll be able to contribute." Brown and King could be asked to contribute valuable minutes as centers should Olkowski get into foul trouble.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

All-Patriot League selections Bill Courtney '92 and Mike Bright '93 look to lead the Bison again this season. Last year Courtney set Bucknell's all-time season scoring record with 619 points while Bright set the steals mark with 69.

THE PATRIOT LEAGUE

Last year's final four teams, Bucknell, Fordham, Lehigh, and Holy Cross, are all expected to rise above the other members of the second-year league. Army, Lafayette, Colgate, and newcomer Navy will most likely need to book hotel rooms for only one night during the league tournament.

LEHIGH returns four starters including All-League Senior selections Bob Krizanski and Dozie Mbonu, as well as the league's most annoying public address announcer. The Engineers finished second during the regular season and fell to Holy Cross in overtime in the tournament semi-finals. The nucleus of this team has been together for over sixty games, making them many people's choice as Pre-Season conference favorites. Besides, they get to host this year's tournament.

When you look at the FORDHAM Rams' roster, the first thing you notice is that last season's Patriot League Player of the Year, Damon Lopez, is gone. However, this hasn't given any players a false sense of security when they travel to the Bronx (not that one can ever be secure in that environment). They also return the majority of their starters, most noticeably Jean Prioleau. Prioleau's last-second jumper beat led his team to an upset over Seton Hall last season.

HOLY CROSS only gets two starters back from last year's runners-up, but twelve letter winners return to Worcester. Senior Scott Martzloff is a seven footer who could wreak havoc on the league's other centers.

The rest of the pack would have to play above and beyond their po-

Soccer shuts out Dragons in season finale on Tuesday

BY ANDY LABOVITZ
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The last week of competition for this year's men's soccer team was a microcosm of the season for this edition of the kicking Bison. Bucknell lost to the Patriot League champion Navy Midshipmen 3–0 at Annapolis on Saturday before returning home to play a superb game, defeating Drexel 1–0 Tuesday evening. The Bison finished their season 6–11, 1–5 in league play.

Navy had everything to gain in the game against Bucknell, because a win would give them the Patriot League title and the right to host the league championships, while a loss would accord that honor to Lehigh. Bucknell battled the Middies to a scoreless first half, but some key halftime adjustments allowed the Naval Academy to pull away in the second half of play.

Jerry Dearie of Navy opened the scoring five minutes into the second half with a well-placed shot which just got over the outstretched arms of goalie Mark Wrigley '94. Wrigley was peppered with shots all day, as Navy managed to pull the trigger 20 times to Bucknell's eight. Wrigley made ten saves before being replaced late in the game by backup goalkeeper Chris Wyszynski '95. Navy's Chris Carpenter finished off the Bison with two more Middie goals, and the Midshipmen were able to walk away with their first regular-season Patriot League championship.

An emotionally charged Bison squad took the field against Drexel for the final tiff in this 1991 campaign. That game would be the last for four key graduating seniors: Dan D'Angelo, Alex Lyras, and co-captains Evan Goldsmith and Keith Goodling. Unfortunately, D'Angelo, a starting midfielder, had seriously injured his knee in the loss to Navy and was not be able to play.

Bucknell played as fine a first half as they have played all year, to the delight of several hundred fans who braved temperatures well below freezing to send the Bison out with a cheer. Offensively, Bucknell created one solid opportunity after another, scoring one goal and just missing three or four others. Bruce MacKenzie '95, starting for the first time this year in place of the injured D'Angelo, tallied his first career goal. Goodling hit the left goalpost with a shot, and MacKenzie put in the rebound.

The defensive backs, most notably Goldsmith, Brian Buck '95 and Baird McIlvain '95 stifled the Dragon offense for the most part. When a shot did slip through the Bison defensemen, goalkeeper Wrigley was there to make the save, often in spectacular fashion. The Bison took their 1–0 lead into halftime, determined to finish their season on a high note.

In the second half, the game became somewhat more competitive, as Drexel, with a 9–5 record entering the game, improved their play. The Bison defense, led by Wrigley, slayed the Dragons by frustrating the Drexel offense. This frustration led to some choppy play, punctuated by a short scuffle in front of the Bucknell net. Wrigley made a save and was on the ground, but an overzealous Drexel attacker kept trying to kick the ball, and in the process, kicked the defenseless Wrigley. The Bison quickly came to their goalie's aid, and while there was some shoving, no punches were thrown. The Bison defense held firm against the Drexel attack, even after defensive stalwart Goldsmith went down with a knee injury with approximately fifteen minutes left in the game.

Wrigley ended up with ten saves, recording his fourth shutout of the season. He ended up with a .772 save percentage, good for fourth in the Patriot League. Greg Beatty '95 finished the season as the team's scor-

Women's soccer falls to Army in Pat League Championships

BY SCOTT BROWN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's soccer team has entered the Patriot League championships for the first time, matched against impressive foe Army, a team that had beaten them 4–0 earlier this season. But the Bison are a vastly improved team and they hoped to avenge their earlier defeat.

But, it was just not meant to be as Army's solid play and experience guided them to a 4–0 victory over the Bison. Army controlled the game much like they did on in the earlier match-up. On October 5, Army scored three first-half goals, outshooting the Bison 26–8. This game had the same score and virtually the same shots as Army put more pressure on goal by a count of 28–7.

Although Bucknell faltered a bit at the end of the season by dropping its last three, the loss should not mar what was an exceptional season. The Bison finished 7–9 officially, but that does not include two strong showings against club teams from Penn State and Fordham. These nine wins show how far the Bison have come from their 1–7 finish last season.

The Bison's future looks very bright as well. The squad will only be losing three women to graduation, Shannon Smith, Genine Streeper, and Mandy Head. Their leadership and experience, especially on the defensive end, will be sorely missed, but the Bison have a lot to look forward to. With one year of experience under their belt, the impressive freshman crop led by Lisa Gibbons should shine next season.

Gibbons ended the season with 15 goals and three assists for a total of 33 points, and an average of 2.36 points per game. These numbers led the Patriot League and were impressive enough to have her named the Patriot League's Rookie of the Year by the league's coaches. But, surprisingly, despite dominating many of the Lady Bison matches this season and also once being named the league player of the week for scoreing eight goals in a three game stretch, Gibbons was left off the All-Patriot League Team.

Gibbons, along with the efforts of Sara Patiro '95 and Joanne Crane '95, should provide plenty of power up front, while Kim Fekel '93 will anchor a solid defensive core. Barring injuries, the Bison have a squad that should be competitive not only next year, but for years to come.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

The women's soccer team finished its second varsity season with a 7–9 record and earned a spot in its first League Championships.

X-country competes at Van Cortlandt

26th-ranked men's team dominates field, captures top five spots

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Webster's Dictionary defines the word dynasty as: a succession of rulers. Its secondary definition should read: Bucknell's men's cross country team.

Last Saturday, the Bison traveled to New York's Van Cortlandt Park for the formalities of the Patriot League Championship race. The only question on each Bucknellian's mind was whether or not it would be a clean sweep of the top five places. Colgate's top runner, Rob Appenheimer, was thought to have an outside chance at breaking up the orange pack.

However, no such bomb would fall on the nation's 26th-ranked team. Matt Deardorff '92 surprised no one by crossing the finish line first. Four other Bison harriers followed closely behind to complete the sweep. Tom Wuchenich '92, Bob Kelly '92, Jason Cahilly '92 and Jeff Loomis '92 all beat Appenheimer, who placed sixth, to put the icing on their Patriot League careers. The sweep gave Head Coach Art Gulden's team its 17th straight conference championship, second straight in the Patriot League.

Judd Jarden '93 and Tom Eagleson '93 served notice to the rest of the league that Bucknell will return some talented runners next fall. Both underclassmen finished in the top ten.

"I'm extremely pleased that we were able to put five in front of him [Appenheimer]," commented Gulden. "They ran aggressively and confidently."

For all intents and purposes, the race was over by the end of the first mile and a quarter. The highly visible tank tops and shorts took the pack out by running a 4:40 time for the first mile. Any pretenders to the throne reevaluated any illusions of grandeur that they might have housed in a wild dream.

Colgate placed a distant second, edging out Lehigh for the silver medal. Fordham proved to be decent hosts, but little competition as they finished fourth. Holy Cross and Lafayette would have been better off saving travel costs instead of making the trip to NYC.

Next up for the school's perennial fall powerhouse is the IC4A/District II meet in two weeks. The top three teams from this meet will qualify for the national championships in Tucson, Arizona. Georgetown, Penn State, Villanova, and William and Mary are among the teams that stand between Bucknell and the land of the cactii. Iona could possibly be a "dark horse," as well.

"This team is good enough to win the district. But, the key is to finish in the top three and go to Arizona," said Gulden.

From 1978 to 1982, the Bison made a habit of partaking in the national championship, the high water mark being a 12th-place finish in 1982.

"If our practice today [Wednesday] is any indication, I think we can do it," reflected Gulden. The Iowa State meet three weeks ago in which the team finished third among numerous nationally-ranked teams should have provided the team with a preview of what it needs to do to both race and prepare for such a meet.

Kristen Opdyke '93 placed third, only 15 seconds behind the silver medalist, at the Patriot League women's cross country championships last Saturday at New York's Van Cortlandt Park. The Lady Bison, as a team, placed fifth.

Fordham, behind its outstanding runner Lauren Gubicza, took the title for the second straight fall. Holy Cross, Colgate, and Lehigh rounded out those who finished ahead of Bucknell. The Lady Leopards from Lafayette brought up the rear of the pack.

Despite the disappointing finish, Head Coach Art Gulden maintains that his team "wasn't out of its class."

Gina Abraham '93 captured 15th place with a time of 20:14. Kathy Wurster '94, Kris Deardorff '93, and Rebecca Tobin '95 completed Bucknell's scoring.

Next up for the Lady Bison is the University division of the Eastern championships in two weeks.

"We did the same thing last year [finished fifth] and were able to bounce back at Easterns, " Gulden.

Magic Johnson contracts HIV virus

NBA star forced to retire early from Lakers; hopes to heighten awareness of disease

BY MITCH BENTON
Bucknellian staff Writer

Many of today's college students believe in the myth of their own immortality, but the events of the past few days should open the eyes of many Bucknellians. One of America's seemingly most invincible public figures, professional basketball's Ervin "Magic" Johnson has tragically been afflicted with the HIV virus.

Said Johnson yesterday at a press conference in Inglewood, CA, "Because of the HIV virus that I have obtained, I will have to retire from the Lakers." He continued by asserting that he did not, in fact, have the AIDS disease.

The Lakers' team physician, Michael Mellman, elaborated by explaining that the virus can, over the years, impair the immune system. "We advised Ervin to avoid activities, such as basketball, that can also affect the system. The rigors of the sport include exhaustion and irregular eating, which can also impair immunity."

The shocking news hit the Bucknell community quickly and has already shown its impact. Men's basketball's head coach Charlie Woollum had this to say, "It has already had a visible effect on our team. He had a great impact on basketball and all of athletics. He and Larry Bird combined to revive the NBA in the early 80's."

Woollum expressed hope that this would not be a meaningless tragedy. "This brings to the forefront the realities of life. It brings home the fact that no one is exempt, no matter what their standing or how much money they earn."

When asked about his feelings, Johnson revealed that he too did not think that it could happen but now that it had, he would continue to live his life to its fullest potential. He claimed that his biggest goal was to maintain his seemingly everpresent bright attitude. Despite the fact that a major part of his life, athletics, had been taken away, he was in relatively good spirits and attributed that to the care of his new bride, who has been tested and does not have the virus.

The consensus All-NBA point guard was obviously distraught about leaving the team that he has led to five championships over the past decade. Speaking for the organization, the Lakers' general manager, Jerry West, stated, "This is a huge shock to us. It is devastating as a personal matter, as well as emotionally."

Johnson joined the Lakers after he had led his Michigan State Spartans to the NCAA Championship over Bird's Indiana State Sycamores, in 1979. He then had an immediate impact on the league and drove Los Angeles to the finals in his rookie season. It was there that Magic's legend began as he was named MVP for almost single-handedly defeating the Philadelphia 76ers. Over the next ten years he won four more championships and was named the league MVP three times.

When pressed, Bucknell's men's basketball captain, Bill Courtney '92, was obviously touched. "I've always been a big fan, he was a model as a basketball player. Magic represented so much more than as just a player, he did so much for others and the community. You could see the effect on the team already, everyone was talking about it and the concentration wasn't there."

Johnson was trying to get an insurance policy when the routine physical exam showed reason for further tests, conducted by the Lakers. Were it not for the insurance, Johnson belives that he never would have discovered his infection and he encouraged everyone to undergo testing.

Said Mellman, "What we have witnessed today is a courageous act by a special man...He should not only be commended but held as a modern day hero. Because of his presence and potential impact on society with a situation that is not only serious, but concerns everyone. Ervin is a very, very special person and this is a very, very special admission."

Johnson closed by saying, "There's no question it [his coming forward] is for the kids, that's why I am going to be a spokesperson for the HIV virus. I want them to understand that safe sex is the way to go. People say 'It's not going to happen to me' and here I am saying that it can happen to anyone, even Magic Johnson."

Bison Afield

BY MICHAEL CORELLI
Bucknellian Staff Writer

On location, November 1-3, 1991 — Louisville, Kentucky. It was Tuesday afternoon and a fraternity brother of mine dropped the phrase to me. He said, "Corelli, how about a sick road trip this weekend?" My ears immediately perked up and my interest was spurned. "Where to?" I asked. When he said Churchill Downs in Kentucky for the Breeder's Cup, the premier horse racing event of the year next to the Kentucky Derby, I knew then that I was going to escape the campus for the weekend. After gathering a few other strong men, we left early Friday afternoon. I must admit that before leaving I didn't even have a clue as to the geographical whereabouts of Kentucky in the United States. I had only seen the horse racing capital on television for the start of the Triple Crown (The Kentucky Derby, the Preakness, and the Belmont Stakes) each year. Regardless, I soon found out that Kentucky is nestled below Ohio and above Tennessee in the near Midwest. Not a quick jaunt, but rather a solid ten-hour drive in the trusty Bronco. (Which is, by the way, the finest road trip machine with its mix of comfort, ruggedness, and speed.) As we cruised along Rt. 80 with the bird dog (radar detector) on, the hours seemed to melt away, and despite a few minor detours through towns in Ohio named after large cities in the Middle East and Europe, we reached Louisville, Kentucky and checked into the Holiday Inn at 1 a.m.

Despite popular belief and convention in our pitiful little hamlet of Lewisburg, where bars remain open only 'til 2 a.m., in Louisville they rock until 4 a.m. Making quick use of the Hotel's complementary limo service we had our driver, Stein, take us to the Pheasant Hill, where we proceeded to pass on the tradition of the moon chug. I was often mistaken for a native with my cowboy boots, cowboy hat, and manufactured Kentucky accent. On the limo ride back to the hotel, Stein was kind enough to stop at Taco Bell where it was proven that four ravenous men can stuff themselves for a combined bill of $6.79. Incidentally, this was only the first of eventually four meals we ate at this fine establishment. (Corelli's stock tip for the week: Pepsico.)

After two hours of sleep and a missed wake-up call by the Inn, we jumped in the limo, scantily dressed for the 40-degree weather. It was 70 degrees when we left Lewisburg on Friday and we simply didn't plan ahead for such an arctic blast. When we reached Churchill Downs and paid the $10 admission for the international food festival and day of racing on the infield, we commenced warming ourselves with famous Kentucky Mint Juleps (Early Times Whiskey with a stalk of mint), Greek sandwiches that we couldn't get enough of, and $12 mittens which they were peddling at the Jamaica tent. Here it is necessary to point out that one would be hard-pressed to find such a plethora of delectable food anywhere else. We chowed Greek sandwiches and pastries, Japanese chicken and rice balls, American Trout sandwiches, Arabic 'meatballs' and 'egg rolls', and mammoth pork slab sandwiches. I felt like I had a stomach like Buddha by the time I desisted my feeding pattern. The track itself was spectacularly impressive. It was a well-groomed, high-class establishment.

The races began at 11:15 a.m., so we all sat down and diligently began analyzing the Daily Racing Form. We were choosing the Super Seven, where you pick the winners of races 2 thru 8. Then the flash of a camera bulb caught our attention. Looking up we saw two newspaper reporters staring back at us. They began asking questions about "where, why, who, and which," at us. We told them our picks for the day, which included Housebuster in the 2nd, Dance Smartly in the 5th, and Speed Dialer in the 6th. They thanked us and as far as we know to this point there is an article in Sunday's Lexington Herald Leader, displaying to all our misguided knowledge.

The races started. Having lost our spirits by seeing Housebuster get routed in the 2nd and our million-dollar Super Seven hopes dashed we rallied. Despite hitting the weakest exacta (picking the win and place horses in order of finish) of $9.60 in the 4th it was a long draught until another of us picked the winner in the feature 8th race, a long shot, Black Tie Affair. By far the most intriguing race of the day was the 6th, where the two-year-olds for early prominence for next year's Triple Crown. In this race, which included M.C. Hammer's horse Dance Floor, a horse named Arazi stole the show. The commentator was actually poking fun at the horse on the back stretch, saying, "And Arazi, the European sensation, unhurried in last by ten lengths." On the clubhouse turn and home stretch however Arazi left the entire field standing, looking similar to a Ferrari among Buicks. It was truly spectacular. (Early line: Bet the Ranch on Arazi in next year's Derby.)

On the way back to Bucknell we stopped at the small, but impressive city of Cincinnati, where a blues band added the finishing touches to our trip. We arrived back at Bucknell at 8 p.m. on Sunday, thoroughly blown out. I highly suggest this trip for anyone with an adventuresome spirit in the spring for the Kentucky Derby. I know I'll be there.

Athletes of the Week

Jeremy Hirneisen '92, Jeff Loomis '92, Tom Wuchenich '92, Bob Kelly '92, Matt Deardorff '92, Jason Cahilly '92

The Bucknellian has chosen the senior class of the men's cross-country team as Athletes of the Week for their performance at last week's Patriot League Championships.

The group captured the top five finishes enroute to their second consecutive league win. Previous to this, the team had won 15 consecutive East Coast Conference championships.

Next up for the squad will be the IC4A/District II meet in two weeks. If they finish among the top three teams, they will move on to the national championships in Arizona.

Crew competes in Occoquan regatta

BY JAMIE DIAFERIA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell crew team travelled to Fairfax, VA last week to compete in the Head-of-the-Occoquan regatta. The trip proved to be successful, as the squad finished in the top 50 percent in nearly each race in which it competed. The team will head to Philadelphia in two weeks for its final race of the season.

After racing in the prestigious Head-of-the-Charles regatta on October 20, the team was extremely optimistic about its prospects for the rest of the season. The team took the Virginia trip a step further by sending out eight boats on the river, four more than went out on the Charles.

The course on the Occoquan River was 500 meters, or three miles long, and it flows just a few miles from Washington, D.C. This particular race was sponsored by George Washington University.

The team was more prepared this season than last, as it committed a series of blunders, both mental and physical, enroute to a disappointing finish last year. This race went a bit smoother, as no boat went down the wrong branch of the river, or saw its members jump overboard, both of which occurred in the past.

The Men's Championship Eights (the heavyweight varsity boat) placed fifth in an 11-team field with a time of 16:06. The Men's Lightweight Eights also competed, but no information was available regarding its place-finish. The Women's Championship Eights boat placed fifth in a field of 13 with a time of 18:25.

Five novice boats raced on the Occoquan, as well, as the Men's Novice Eights sent out two boats to lead the pack. The A boat finished with a time of 18:01, enough for ninth in a field of 20, while the B boat finished with a time of 19:24. The Women's Novice Eights also sent out two boats, and ended with the best finish of the day. The A boat had a time of 20:06 which proved good enough for second in a field of 16. The B boat finished with a time of 20:46 which put them in seventh place in a 16-team field.

The final boat to race was the Men's Novice Four boat, but the time and finish for them was not available.

Carl Lindquist '94 was pleased with how the team performed. "We showed a tremendous improvement from the Head-of-the-Charles race. We had more time to prepare and we were finally in the class we are supposed to be in, and we didn't have to face world-class teams. We all had our heads in the boat better, and we were thinking better."

Norm Bartlett '93, a member of the lightweights, competes in the Head-of-the-Occoquan regatta. The team has one race left, as they will race in the Frostbite regatta in Philadelphia in two weeks.

The team will head to Philadelphia in two weeks to compete in the Frostbite Regatta. This will be the team's final race of the season, as it looks to increase its standing for next season.

Volleyball heads to Pat League Championships at West Point

BY DON REINHART
Bucknellian Staff Writer

After rounding out its regular season last weekend with two losses to Columbia and Seton Hall, the Bucknell women's volleyball team is looking for an upset at the Patriot League Championships this weekend. Hosted by Army, the championships will see top-seeded, and undefeated, Colgate face the underdog Bison in first-round action. Coach Cindy Oplaski and her team have spent the week preparing for what they feel will be a landmark for Bucknell volleyball.

The Bison dropped its match to a tough Seton Hall team last Friday in three straight games. Despite a top performance, Bucknell could not handle the Pirates, losing 15–10, 15–2, 15–10. Aubrey Schneggenburger '95 played a great defensive game, tallying eight digs. The Bison did not, however, prove threatening at the net. The team only accumulated 23 kills, with Schneggenburger, Meghan Kinney '93, and Kathleen Sullivan '92 contributing four each.

In what Opalski coined as perhaps its worst effort of the season, Bucknell dropped its next match to Columbia, again in three straight games 15–6, 15–11, 17–15. Despite a bad team performance, a few individuals stood out in the game. Kara Forosisky '92 killed 12 balls, while Dee Scinta '92 chalked up eight digs. Opalski noted the apathy from her team during the match and was displeased with their game, commenting, "I think collectively as a team, we had one of our worst performances of the season."

Opalski looks at next weekend with great optimism. Although the Bison drew undefeated Colgate in their first-round contest, the coach was happy with the pick. In their last match with Colgate, the Bison played well, taking the top seed to four games, losing the fourth 16–14. Opalski says the key to taking the first-round match is to shut down Colgate's top players, Heather Collins and Vikki Chung. She feels her team matches up well with its opponents, and Bucknell has a reputation of playing Colgate tough.

Another key to defeating Colgate, which Opalski has attempted to exploit, is preparation. After viewing their previous match 71 times on video, the coach feels Colgate has few surprises to offer. Additionally, intense scouting has added to the Bison chalkboard. Bucknell is also counting on Colgate's underestimation of their ability. They feel Colgate will come into the match unprepared and mentally down, something which Bucknell is hoping to take full advantage of.

Opalski is excited about the team's chances and has a positive outlook. The Bison will take to the court Saturday at 11 a.m. in West Point, New York where they hope to win and eventually move into the championships. Opalski adds, "This weekend will be a milestone for Bucknell volleyball."

tential to make a dent in the "first division."

THE SCHEDULE

Bucknell opens up with six of its first seven games on the road. Early season stops in Georgia, as well as Albuquerque, New Mexico, for the Lobo Classic, should provide the Breakin' Bison with some tough tests other than the engineering ones that many members of the team enjoy.

League play begins in January at Annapolis and ends on February 29 in Davis gym against the Leopards from Easton, PA. Fortunately, Bucknell will host five of its last seven league contests. Lycoming, Towson State, Fairfield, Cornell, and UMBC will serve to break up the league schedule. The middle three all knocked off the Breakin' Bison last year.

Tonight's contest with the newly independent Lithuanians will allow Woollum and his players to face someone other than themselves for the first time since the opening of practice on October 15. It is also the lone pre-season challenge for the team before it opens its season at home against UMBC on the 26th.

THE OVERALL OUTLOOK

Predicting a league championship may be too bold a call at this point. Last year's top three teams (Fordham, Lehigh, Holy Cross), along with Bucknell, are all in position to vie for the title. However, Davis Gym patrons should look forward to one of the most promising and exciting winters since any student's arrival on campus.

ing leader with six goals for twelve points. MacKenzie was second on the team with eleven points on three goals and five assists.

Looking forward to next season, the Bison need to replace those four key seniors, all from midfield or backfield positions. However, since the team's four leading scorers will be returning, as will Wrigley, the Bison have a solid base to build from. Add this to the deep Bucknell bench at midfield and back, and next year looks like a promising one for Coach Craig Reynolds' squad.

H_2O polo qualifies for Eastern Championships

Team places fourth in Mid-Atlantic Conference Championship tournament after beating Villanova; will face Brown tomorrow

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Last week's Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships resulted in a mixed outcome for the Bucknell men's water polo team. At Navy, the Bison accomplished their secondary goal of qualifying for the Eastern Collegiate Championship Tournament, an honor which had eluded them for the past two years. However, the Bucknell men did not fare as well as they had hoped at MAC's, placing fourth of the eight league teams.

Bucknell opened the tournament against Villanova in the game that would determine its Eastern consideration. The Bison took control of the game from the outset, scoring three quick goals early in the first quarter, before Villanova could answer with one of its own with 1:39 remaining in the period. Bucknell responded with yet another and ended the quarter 4–1.

The final three quarters saw much of the same action as Bucknell led 10–4 at the half and 14–6 after three. The last goal of the contest was scored by the Bison with 1:26 remaining, before the game eventually ended in an 18–9 victory for Bucknell.

Contributions to the winning effort included: six goals, three assists, and a steal by co-captain Walter Kelly '92; three goals and an assist by Sean Tierney '95; two goals, five assists, and two steals by co-captain Kevin Schroth '92; two goals, an assist, and three steals by Dan Brown '92; two goals each by Steve Benson '92 and Chris Retzler '93; a goal, an assist, and a steal by Dan Killinger '92; and an assist by Ethan Daniels '94.

Goalies John Bradbury '92 and Rupert DeVink '94 also added their share of help. Bradbury collected seven saves in three quarters of play, while DeVink had three saves and a steal during his sole quarter in the cage.

Next Bucknell faced second-seed Navy, who went on to an overtime loss to Slippery Rock for the championship title later in the tournament. The Bison, finding themselves up against a more formidable opponent in Navy, fell behind 2–0 by the end of the first quarter. The Navy offense then exploded into action, outscoring Bucknell 4–1 in the second period.

The Bucknell men began the second half in better form, playing tighter defense and capitalizing on offensive opportunities, as they matched Navy two goals to two. The final quarter, however, was another display of Midshipman power, and the game ended in a 12–4 loss for the Bison.

Two of Bucknell's four tallies were credited to Retzler, with Brown and Kelly splitting the other two. Schroth, who saw no scoring action versus Navy, furnished the Bison with two assists and a steal, and Bradbury collected another seven saves in the net.

Bucknell's final game against Princeton would decide who would capture third place at the Championship Tournament. Unfortunately, the Bucknell/Princeton matchup once again proved to be a difficult one for Bucknell, who dropped their third straight one-point game to the Tigers this season. The Bison came out strong and opened the contest with a goal by Kelly at 5:04 in the first quarter. However, the tired Bucknell team was uncharacteristically out-of-sync defensively for much of the first half, and Princeton went ahead 3–1 by 2:57 in the second quarter.

Fifteen seconds after their first time-out in the second period, Killinger capitalized on a man-up situation to bring the Bison within one. Schroth then tied up the score 3–3 at 3:44 in the third quarter. With 0:34 remaining in that quarter, Bucknell unknowingly saw its defeat at the hands of Princeton's next goal.

The Bison and the Tigers both put forth excellent defensive effort during the final period of play. Neither team allowed its opponent to score, rendering the game a bitter disappointment for the Bucknell men, who succumbed to a 4–3 loss at the final buzzer. All three Bison points were assisted goals—two by Brown and one by Retzler. Extra credit must also be given to Bradbury, who did an outstanding job in goal, recording thirteen saves to keep Bucknell in the Princeton game.

This weekend, The Bison travel to Brown to play in the Eastern Collegiate Championship Tournament, which they have been working toward all season. They are scheduled to meet Brown, a team that they have previously beaten, for their first game of the tournament. Bucknell will then face either Navy, once again, or Iona in its second contest of the weekend.

According to Kelly, "This weekend has been the focus of our entire season. We are definitely looking for a top four finish in the East. This could also be the last weekend of water polo competition for Killinger, Brown, Schroth, Bradbury, A.J. Zottola '92, and I. With so many seniors going out, we'd like to end the season with a strong finish."

Dan Killinger '92 looks to shoot during action earlier this season. The senior has anchored a strong Bison defense throughout the season. Bucknell will compete at the Easterns this weekend.

Ward tops school mark as field hockey finishes season

BY NATHAN WOLAVER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's field hockey team experienced a roller-coaster of emotion this week as it ended the season 9–9. The Lady Bison played two games against nationally-ranked opponents. Their first game was played against West Chester who was ranked eleventh in the nation.

For the Bucknell squad, West Chester represented the toughest opponent since the loss to a number two-ranked Penn State team. The Bison needed this win to stay above the .500 mark for the first time since 1984. Both teams came out for the first half determined to win the game. A hard-fought battle began between the teams that would set the tone for the entire game. Bucknell's defense led the way by staunching the West Chester assault and setting up the offense for its own attack. At the head of the defense was goalkeeper Danielle Ward '93 who continued her fine play that earned her two Patriot League Player of the Week Awards. Ward also recorded her record-breaking seventh shutout of the season, an unbelievable feat that put the finishing touches on a season that was nothing short of spectacular.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Attacker Almira Baldwin '94 fights for the ball during action against Georgetown. The Lady Bison finished their season with a 9–9 record, an improvement over last year's 4–12 squad.

After no one scored in regulation play, both teams continued to play hard-nosed defense throughout the first period of overtime. With only 36 seconds left, Tricia Way scored on a loose ball in front of the net. For Tricia, this capped her finest game of the season and gave Bucknell its first win against a nationally-ranked opponent.

For Coach Jen Averill this represented the team's biggest win since she arrived three years ago. "I'm really thrilled now that they know that if they keep working hard they won't always fall short," remarked the coach. "Now they know what it's like to be a national contender."

Bucknell played Ursinus next in a make-up game from October. After the emotional high from their win against West Chester, the Lady Bison played flat through the first half. However, their defense was once again rock solid and shut out Ursinus going into the locker room. Averill reminded the team in the locker room of their expectations for the season and fired up the Lady Bison.

Bucknell roared out onto the field, a new team, and had their best half of the season. Key performances from Allison Arth '93, and Amber Baxter '92 helped spark the team back into the game. Unfortunately, the Lady Bison fell short when Ursinus scored with 30 seconds left in the game.

"This was by far one of the best games we played. We fulfilled all expectations for the season," commented Averill. The Lady Bison had finished at 9–9 but showed tremendous improvement from last year's 4–12 record. Due to the astonishing improvement in the team's record and for her dedication to coaching, Averill earned Coach of the Year honors from the Patriot League. "I'm extremely honored by my peers, but I share this award with my team because it is a reflection on them."

Averill was not the only one on the team to receive accolades for her outstanding accomplishments. Jeanette Aurand '92 received co-MVP for the Patriot League. During the course of the season she had been a spark for the team because of her impact play. She controlled the mid-field constantly and surprised opponents with her amazing quickness with the ball. Aurand also made first-team honors in the Patriot League as well as Katrina Mueller '93 and Almira Baldwin '94 who provided outstanding leadership for the team, as well as exceptional performance on the field.

Next year, the team looks to be even stronger despite the loss of four seniors. Averill will have had the team for four years and have molded them into a fluid machine. As well as recruiting for speed, Averill plans to have more power and a tighter attack for next year's club. This year the team worked well as a unit. We look forward to them breaking into the national rankings.

Football falls to Colgate, will face Holy Cross tomorrow

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's football team finally returns home this week. If it seems like five weeks since you've seen the Bison in action, it has been. The Bison's return to Christy Mathewson Stadium is not likely to be graced by a grateful guest. The Holy Cross Crusaders will travel from Worcester, Massachusetts with seven wins and no losses in their previous encounters with the Bison. The Crusaders are also riding a seventeen-game win-streak which is the longest in Division in I-A or I-AA. Yes, it's even longer than Florida State.

The caliber of the opponent this week will only add to the woes of a Bison team that is reeling from five straight losses. Last week, at Colgate University, the Bison were crushed by the Red Raiders 38–6. Colgate scored touchdowns on four of its first five possessions and never left any doubt about the game's outcome. The Red Raiders held possession nearly twice as long as the Bison, and ran 93 plays to Bucknell's 48. The only bright spot for the Bison came from a familiar source. Travis Kopp '95 hit David Bereardinelli '92 for the Bison's lone score. The 27-yard touchdown was Berardinelli's sixth. He leads the team in scoring with 24 points.

The Crusaders will provide a particularly difficult matchup for Bucknell. The Bison offense has been unable to control the ball and Holy Cross has the personnel to take full advantage of that. Fullback Jerome Fuller is the leading rusher in 1-AA averaging 141.1 yards per game. Quarterback Tom Ciaccio was Patriot League Offensive Player of the Year last year and there is no reason to believe he can't repeat. Add to the offensive prowess of Holy Cross the fact that Bucknell is still banged up on the defensive side. Bill Pisano '92 is questionable for the game, and cornerback George Rocchino '92 who had come back from a fractured leg in the season-opener is now out with a neck injury.

The odds against a Bucknell victory seem infinite, but that doesn't mean no one should show up at the stadium on Saturday. In fact, the situation is almost ideal for a 1–7 team. They have an opportunity to salvage their season by upsetting the eventual league champions and the #1 ranked team in division 1-AA. This provides motivation for an injured and inconsistent football team. Additionally, Holy Cross played the most exciting college football game of the year two weeks ago. Up 31–0 at halftime at Lehigh, the Crusaders stopped the Engineers on a 2-point conversion with no time left on the clock to hold on for a 43–42 win. This will be their first road game since then and they could lose their focus during the eight-hour bus ride from Worcester. The Bison have been competitive at points during the season, playing solid football as recently as the second half of the Lafayette game. An upset is not an impossibility.

Despite the 1–7 season several Bison are still chasing individual honors. Brian Henesey '92 now needs only 109 yards to overtake Brad Meyers '53 as the Bison's all-time leading rusher. Also, with 16 tackles at Colgate last week, John Spatafore '92 is now seriously challenging the career tackles mark needing 25 tackles in the final two weeks to surpass Mark Wisniewski '86. Several Bison are also competing for Academic All-American honors. Leading this list is Berardinelli with a 3.9 GPA in history and political science. Jeff Hart '93, Tom Martin '92, and Ian DiBernardo '92 are also in contention for the honor.

In 1969, the Mets won the World Series. In 1970, the Jets beat the Colts in Super Bowl III. In 1985, Villanova beat Georgetown to win the NCAA basketball crown. The 90's are searching for a great upset; the Bison have the opportunity this weekend. Hey, if they win, ABC might even post the score.

Football co-captain Brian Henesey '92 has carried much of the Bison offensive load this season. The senior is closing in on Bucknell's all-time career rushing mark.

Trustees set course for campus growth

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Board of Trustees met on campus this weekend and discussed, but made no final decisions on, several issues: revising the January Program, redistributing financial aid dollars, and improving the student social scene. Plans to build a Bucknell retirement village in the near future, however, were decisively cancelled, according to Chairman of the Board Lee Idleman in a telephone interview from his home in New Jersey.

Plans to build retirement village abandoned

"One of the biggest surprises to me," said Idleman, "was the vote against the retirement village. There was a big effort in the last year and a half to put together a specific proposal to start building, but now it certainly won't be happening any time in the near future."

If the vote had been successful, it would have permitted the construction of 74 living units on the 25 acres between the golf course and the west playing fields. The village would have been an opportunity for "Bucknellians or people who just like Bucknell to live near campus and maybe attend some events. The idea of having the older generation there to possibly mix with the students was very appealing," explained Idleman.

The Board voted against the proposal, however, citing possible need for that land in the future, questions about Bucknell's desire to enter the nursing home business, and concerns about being able to provide high quality service. Ultimately, Idleman said, "There's just not enough demand right now to ensure success. Perhaps we'll revisit the idea again in the future in a different form."

Jan Plan to be reviewed

Idleman expressed concern that the Jan Plan was not working as it was originally intended. "The impetus for the decision to the review the program is that we're going downhill in terms of doing meaningful work related to the University compared to the length of time that we're out of school," said Idleman.

IFC to vote on BYOB enforcement

Amendment would create team to monitor house parties

BY JOHN GODBOUT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Interfraternity Council is currently considering an amendment to the BYOB policy which would establish a Greek monitoring team to visit fraternity houses unannounced and monitor adherence to the policy.

The Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) voted 5–5–2 last week on the BYOB amendment that would provide for its enforcement, two votes short of the majority required to pass the amendment.

The IFC met Wednesday to once again discuss the enforcement amendment, among other more general business, but did not retake the vote. IFC president Denis Maguire '92 is certain that another vote will take place before the end of the semester, and predicts the motion will pass.

"The motion probably would have passed [Wednesday], but politically it would have been the wrong thing to do," said Ed Dadez, advisor to the Council on Greek Life. Many of the chapter presidents felt uncomfortable voting without discussing the changes in detail with their brothers.

The Alumni Greek Council (AGC) unanimously passed a resolution last Saturday declaring support for the BYOB policy. Noting the conflict arising from the need "to host well-received social functions" and "the financial costs and liability risks of hosting social functions where free alcoholic beverages are provided to guests," the AGC resolution asserted "that we cannot and will not tolerate violations by any of our chapters of the policies established by the Interfraternity Council."

Stressing the need for enforcement, Bob Lynd '67, alumni advisor and current executive board member of the National Interfraternity Conference, stated "unless (Greeks) are able to come up with a way of enforcing the policies, someone else will do it."

Maguire said that the complete BYOB policy is composed of three parts: criteria, sanctions, and enforcement and investigation. "We knew that we'd need somebody to do the enforcement when we first passed the BYOB policy. This enforcement team was proposed by the Executive Committee to do that job," said Maguire.

All of the fraternities agreed to the BYOB policy, and Maguire feels that they have made a lot of progress through BYOB. "The problem is that we're seeing different levels of compliance. We need some common ground," said Maguire.

Ashley Chertkof—The Bucknellian

"The problem is that we're seeing different levels of compliance," said Denis Maguire '92, president of the Interfraternity Council.

Dadez agreed, saying that it was important for the IFC to monitor its own policy, to insure adherence to that policy, thus insuring equity

Six injured in DUI car accident; East Buffalo police to file charges

BY BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Six people, including several students, were injured in a two-car accident near Rooke Chapel Friday night. East Buffalo Township police are preparing to file drunk driving and underage drinking charges in connection with the incident.

According to Officer Hoffman, the accident occurred when a pick-up truck driven by Karen Lenker of Dalmatia, PA failed to stop at the intersection of Dent Drive and Moore Avenue and collided nearly head-on with a car operated by Cory Wajda of Coventry, CT Both vehicles suffered severe damage.

Hoffman said "there were too many [people] in both vehicles, and nobody was wearing seat belts;" there were a total of eleven people riding in the two vehicles. He said six were treated for injuries; one person remained overnight at Evangelical Community Hospital, and one was transported to Geisinger Medical Center in Danville.

Although neither operator was a Bucknell student, Hoffman said there were students in both vehicles. Wajda's sister Jennifer '95 was one of the passengers injured, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Hoffman said multiple arrests are still pending, including several citations for underage drinking. He expects charges to be filed within a few days, and would not comment further or release names of passengers while the investigation is continuing.

Ironically, the accident came on the eve of Alcohol Awareness Week, a week-long series of events designed to heighten concern over the dangers associated with excessive alcohol use.

Mitch Goldman '92, one of the week's coordinators, said alcohol abuse "is definitely a serious problem on campus. I hope people can learn that drinking and driving is serious.

"I'm glad nobody got killed," he continued, "and I hope some people can learn from this. Maybe they will know some of the people involved and will be touched by that." Goldman said he is involved in the education effort in part because he lost a friend in a drunk driving accident.

Goldman believes campus education efforts are paying off, and cited the success of such events as weekend programming in the Bison as evidence that more people are having fun without alcohol.

"I'm optimistic," Goldman said. "I think there's a definite trend for the better."

Woman assulted in off-campus attack

On Thursday, November 14, at approximately 1:30 a.m., a female Bucknell student was walking west on St. Catherine Street near 7th Street when she was grabbed from behind by an unknown assailant who threw her to the ground and attempted to molest her. The victim managed to wrestle free from her attacker and run to safety. She notified the Department of Public Safety yesterday afternoon, and the Department contacted the Lewisburg Police Department. The victim sustained minor abrasions but was not seriously injured. She was unable to provide a description of the perpetrator. A complete investigation is underway. University policy prevents the Department of Public Safety from releasing the name of the victim.

Anyone having any information concerning this incident should contact the Department of Public Safety at 524-3333 or 1111 or the Lewisburg Police Department at 524-5151 or 911. Confidentiality will be preserved.

Congress fills final position on board of academic review

BY JULIA STOUT

On Sunday, Nov. 10, the BSG elected Peter Morris-Keitel, assistant professor of modern languages, to serve a three-year term on the Board of Academic Review.

In September, three positions on this board, which is composed of both faculty members and students, were open. At that time, the BSG held an election; Deb Mathinos, assistant professor of education, and Richard Waller, acting chairman and assistant professor of history, were elected to serve on the board.

Dan Hoffman, associate professor of biology, was unable to attend the initial election, but sent a letter of interest to the BSG.

According to Alex Sherer '93, President of the BSG, while the Congress "didn't want to discount Professor Hoffman, they didn't want to elect him by default."

For this reason, the BSG postponed the selection of the third member for the board, and again accepted letters of interest for the position. At that time, Professor Morris-Keitel, who began teaching at Bucknell at the beginning of this semester, expressed interest in serving on the board.

At Sunday's election, both Hoffman and Morris-Keitel addressed the topic of academic dishonesty. Hoffman stated that in his opinion, students are often compelled to cheat as a result of "pressure from society to succeed," and that cases of academic dishonesty reflect "inability on the part of our society to provide young people with positive role models."

Morris-Keitel stated that "academic responsibility is not only something that is expected at a university, but also in the outside world."

After a question-and-answer session, the decision was put to a vote, and Morris-Keitel won by a considerable majority.

When asked about his role as a member of the board, Morris-Keitel explained that "having been a student in three different countries, this position is of particular interest

Groups stress alcohol awareness

BY ELIZABETH DANNEBERG
BucknellianStaff Writer

Bucknell's Alcohol Awareness Week has lived up to its name, as the slogan, "Open your eyes to the alternatives" echoed throughout campus this past week. The week, which is a part of a National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, has been planned since early September by a committee composed of Bucknell students, faculty and staff. The group was represented by many different organizations on campus and was founded by Bob Thomas, coordinator of drug and alcohol programs, and Gerard Turbide, area coordinator for developmental programs.

According to Turbide, the week was sponsored in order to, "make people stop and think about their drinking behaviors." Turbide also commented, "What will get at the issue [of alcohol abuse] more is education and awareness, not enforcement."

Turbide and Thomas encouraged students to become directly involved in planning Alcohol Awareness Week. Thomas stated, "Students know what is going to make an impact." Mark Abrahamsen '93, a committee member and alcohol peer educator said, "everyone on the committee is committed to the cause for some reason or another."

The planning group has sponsored several discussions, lectures, and an information booth in the Langone Center mall to distribute buttons and cups bearing the slogan, and has run videos on alcohol abuse.

among the chapters.

"This is not a perfect system, because presently different groups look at the problem in different ways. Some [improvements] I think we are seeing are people concerned with risk management, and more responsible drinking," said Dadez.

This system of self-government was suggested by various fraternity presidents, and the IFC consulted with the Alumni Greek Council to work out the details. Maguire said that the Alumni Council proved to be a valuable asset, and the IFC plans to consult more with them in the future.

Maguire would like to see the vote take place next week but is unsure if this is realistic due to the impending elections. He anticipates a simple vote with little discussion beforehand.

"I hope that the extra time will serve to educate more people about the policy; both the fraternity members and the community members," said Maguire.

The BYOB policy, which prohibits fraternities to provide alcohol for its guests, was adopted by the IFC earlier in the semester.

The Bucknell policy virtually mirrors the policies of the Risk Management Association of the FIPG, which gives national insurance to ten of the 14 Bucknell chapters .

As part of the Alcohol Awareness Week, recognized nationwide, Will Keim spoke last night at 8 p.m. in the Weis Center. When the Jan Plan was designed in the 60's, students were, according to Idleman, "expected to be learning by doing things that they would not normally do in a university setting." In recent years, however, only 20 to 25% of the campus has participated, whether on or off campus.

"It seems like we have 20% of the students on campus doing projects and then another 10%, consisting of those students' boyfriends and girlfriends, visiting and sledding down the hill on trays that they've stolen from the cafeteria," Idleman joked.

Changes being considered include shortening the length of the January program, offering courses for credit, or possibly requiring participation for three out of the four years.

Acknowledging that January allows faculty time to do research and students time to earn money at home, Idleman stressed that no decision would be made until the campus committee reviewing the program had made its report.

Trustees address rising financial aid needs

Citing the approximately 43% increase in the number of requests for financial aid in this year's applicant pool, Idleman said, "It's far beyond our ability to fill these needs. We must allocate our available funds in the manner that is best for the University," said Idleman. For future classes, this allocation will mean the reinstitution of the admit/deny policy (under which students could be accepted to the University but refused financial aid) and a stronger emphasis on talent grants.

Idleman described the University in past years as "democratic" in giving aid to everyone who requested it. Under the admit/deny policy, however, students with less-impressive records will be refused aid in order to offer better packages to the stronger applicants. Also, talent grants for "the best poet, best tuba-player and best football-player" will continue to be offered in order to improve campus diversity.

The result of these policies will be a group of academically-impressive (or otherwise talented) lower-income students. According to Idleman, these applicants will, in theory, attract other high-achieving students who do not require financial aid to fill out the class and not require financial aid. He added, "We don't like to return to the admit/deny policy, but the University has no other choice at this time. The net result of the process, however, will be a stronger class."

When asked where the middle-class students would fit into these plans, Idleman answered, "Bucknell hasn't been affordable for the middle-class for a long time. What do we define as the middle-class? $30 to $70,000 a year? I think we're kidding ourselves if we think that we're affordable within that range of income."

Student Activities Fee increase approved

The trustees approved a $10 increase in the Student Activities Fee (SAF) but, said Idleman, "it's not our job to get involved in the allocation of those funds. We just looked at the figures and agreed that the student government had a good case for raising the fee." Idleman does hope that the funds will help to provide social alternatives in this transitional time. "There was a little too much abuse of alcohol before, but I think now we're seeing fewer hospital reports every weekend," he commented.

"It may take more activities, more social alternatives, and these things have price-tags associated with them. But we recognize that we have an obligation to contribute to campus-wide events...Still, these changes must be approved and endorsed by the students. We can put something on in the Bison every night of the week, but if it's not what the students want, it won't do any good. It costs to do these things, but if it works, we'll spend for it."

Greek System changes

Although sophomore rush has not been put into practice yet, Idleman is already concerned about the relations between freshmen and upper-class students. "We didn't achieve all that we wanted in terms of freshmen coming in contact with the fraternities this year. The idea was to let them get familiar with what life in a fraternity house involved, but I think that's not happening as we would've liked it to," commented Idleman.

The two groups are "almost farther apart than last year, which was not our intent," Idleman said. More open houses and other such events will be considered in the future.

Security Log:

Editor's Note: The Security Log is a weekly compilation of events deemed newsworthy by the Department of Public Safety. The descriptions of events are summarized by Public Safety officials from initial crime reports. The Security Log is not a compilation of all incidents of the past week and the staff of The Bucknellean has no control over which events are included or ommitted. It is University policy not to release the names of any students involved in campus crime reports.

Sorority offers "safe rides" on Saturdays

By Micki Hamilton
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Last week the Saturday night escort service provided by Delta Delta Delta sorority from 10 p.m. until 3 a.m. went into effect on the Bucknell campus.

According to Allison Shanken '92, a member of Delta Delta Delta, the idea for "Safe Rides" originated within the sorority. "We wanted to do something on campus to raise our image and get involved," said Shanken.

For now, the escort service is completely run by Delta Delta Delta sisters. The sorority members voluntarily devote their time to answering the phones and picking up students.

Two people sit at a phone in the Department of Public Safety and record the name of the person requesting the escort, where that person is, and where that person wants to go. There are also two University cars with two sorority members per car, so that the driver does not have to drive alone.

Shanken said that in the future, "we want to get more organizations involved." She suggested that certain fraternities or sororities could contribute volunteers for a week or a month at a time.

This service is approved by the Department of Public Safety. Vince DeCerchio, director of public safety, is very pleased with the program. "I'm really happy with it," said DeCerchio. However, DeCerchio also pointed out that this service is provided primarily for safety and not convenience. He stressed that it is "not your personal taxi service," because this misuse could be taking an escort away from someone who needs it for safety reasons.

DeCerchio commented that the Delta Delta Delta sorority is "providing a service that is really needed." He explained that even though the Department of Public Safety has an escort service through student security, there is not enough personnel to respond to all the requests quickly. This especially becomes a problem on the weekends. DeCerchio added that on a busy Saturday night there may be as many as 25 to 30 calls for an escort.

Minority needs, concerns addressed

By Timothy W. Kirk
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Editor's note: In an effort to expose the thoughts and concerns of the University community regarding multi-cultural issues on the Bucknell campus,* The Bucknellian sponsored a round-table discussion involving participants of various cultural, ethnic, and racial backgrounds.

Participating in the discussion were Terry Carter, assistant director of admissions and director of minority recruiting, Kristine Elliott '92, David Skena '92, Victor Tchiprout '92, Sharon Nunez '93, Kraig Pannell '92, Alyssa Chumnanvech '92, Michele Simms '94, and Melissa Skelton '92. The opinions expressed in the discussion are those of the individuals, and are in no way representative of a particular group of people.

Amy Clare—The Bucknellian

Facts about minority contributions to all academic fields need to be included in the curriculum, according to Terry Carter, assistant director of admissions.

Concerns of the campus regarding minorities are not unchanging. While some problems and barriers are not new, others arise following specific trends. Defining campus problems is only the first step in initiating change. Offering solutions and feasible methods of implementing these solutions constitutes another formidable task.

Last of two parts

Examining what has been done in the past, as well as conceiving new ideas for the future, is necessary for change to take place. A goal must be defined toward which the campus community strives, in order for progress to occur.

Minority Greek Organizations

The controversial role of a predominantly-black fraternity or sorority becomes clearer as one examines the purpose and history of such an institution.

"I look at the number of white fraternities and sororities, and there is no 'cushion' there for the black male or female like there is for the white male or female. There is if I go out and work for it and form a group, and it can be done—it is being done," said Simms.

Noting the discrepancy caused by the absence of a black sorority, Simms continued, "But, at the same time, it's not there. So, I have to find another outlet. By having to put out the extra effort, it's not the same. If I want to join a feminist group as a female I can, if I want to join a sorority I can, but I cannot join a black sorority, that cushion isn't there. If I chose to be in a sorority to perpetuate my womanhood I could do that, but I cannot join a group that has as its common bond my black womanhood."

"I don't think of them as white fraternities and sororities," said Skelton. "I think of them as fraternities and sororities that, unfortunately, have a low percentage of minority members. A lot of people don't understand a need for black Greek organizations—that cushion. We [non-minorities] are not understanding why you [minorities] are not joining the fraternities and sororities."

Commenting on the history of black fraternities and sororities, Simms explained, "I'm not saying we are excluded from the Greek system here; we're not. There is a difference, however. The history behind the black sororities and fraternities—and I have to refer to them as black because that's what they primarily are, they're not excluding white people, that's just what they are—is important."

Pannell stressed the cultural bond shared in a black fraternity. "It's not just the history, it's the culture. Some people feel they have to compromise a piece of themselves to join an organization which doesn't have the same cultural background they do. It's not a case of exclusion, it's wanting to share that special bond that comes from a common historical and cultural background. A lot of black people want to have that cushion."

A Question of Progress

Addressing the idea of progress, Mark Abrahamsen '93, who moderated the discussion, asked, "What's the trend at Bucknell? Are relations improving? Are the barriers being broken down or are the walls still there?"

"There are a lot of programs to make you culturally aware. A lot of people go, they sit there for an hour, but then they go back and they don't have to deal with it anymore," commented Nunez. "They feel they went to the program and now they have done their duty. It's a difficult thing to open yourself up to a subject like this."

"I think of a comedian I went to making jokes [at the expense of minorities]. No one laughed, but I got the feeling no one knew why they shouldn't be laughing. Like they knew they shouldn't laugh but they really didn't feel it," Nunez continued.

"People are aware enough that they know if they say or do something ignorant they will get called on it, but they're not smart enough to know why they shouldn't do it," echoed Skena.

"I disagree," said Chumnanvech. Referring to a Hemingway passage in which a character is changed when entering a river, she said, "the minute you step into that river you're not the same person you were before. You can't hide from race relations. If someone is exposed to something, that has changed them. I would have to say that the trend is getting better. Sure, it's slow, it's not going to happen overnight, but in my four years here I have seen improvement. People are opening doors. They're not necessarily stepping into any rooms, but it is progress. Identification is definitely a first and a very positive step. People are asking questions."

"How do people take that next step? How do we fully understand our prejudices and dispose of them? How do we become color-blind?" asked Abrahamsen.

Give yourself a hand against breast cancer

Breast self-examination is easy, takes only a few minutes and can be performed in the privacy of your own home. It's an important way you can detect early and highly curable breast cancer. Through monthly breast self-examinations, you will learn how your normal breast tissue feels and will be able to recognize a change if one occurs. In fact, most breast lumps are found by women themselves.

Take control of your body and your life.

Make breast self-examination a part of your monthly routine. And see your doctor regularly for clinical exams and advice on mammography.

Bucknell Student Government: Election '91

Editor's Note: The candidates for BSG executive offices were interviewed by members of The Bucknellian*'s staff on Wednesday. Candidates for each office were asked a series of questions. The questions were not availabe to the candidates prior to the interview.*

Questions for all candidates: If elected, what experience would you bring to the office? What are your goals for your term in office? What can be done on campus to ease strained race and minotiry relations? Why are you running? What do you think are the three most salient campus issues today?

Question to candidates for treasurer: The BSG has recently passed a motion which would significantly increase funding for campus-wide programming. What kind of specific programs would you like to see on campus?

President

President

Rick Scott '93

I've been on BSG for three years and I know how it works. BSG now is a body of 50 people who are supposedly elected to represent the student body, but I don't think that they are doing that to the degree that they should. I would have representatives attend residence hall and RHA meetings. We need to bring student opinions into BSG meetings. Now, the faculty and administration... see BSG as apathetic and they see students as not caring.

Experience

I was the freshman class president and have served on all five BSG committees as well as the Presidential committee. I have been involved in BSG since the fall of my freshman year. I have a strong basis for understanding how BSG works.

Goals

I plan to bring the students back to BSG. I want the faculty and administration to take us seriously. With sensitivity...if people learn about other groups around us, sensitivity could improve. We need a common course that teaches students how others feel. A required course may be impossible, but a course is definitely an option.

Why Running

The more I stay with BSG, the more I enjoy it. I'd like to be a part of that. I have a lot of good ideas for BSG.

BSG and Trustees

Trustees take BSG most seriously, above faculty and administration. The trustees work well with us, yet they tend to treat us like kids. We don't seem to make that large an impact on them.

Michael Thomas '94

I am the most qualifiifed because I can represent the student body to the fullest. I'm involved in Umbrella, which deals with minority and environmental issues. I was also freshman class president and I am also Greek. Involvement in these groups will help me represent the student body to the fullest.

Experience

I have worked with both the executive committee and with the entire congress. I've worked and helped during elections, along with taking minutes and other executive office duties. I've worked a lot on the elections committee. I'm very conscious about the various committees that operate within BSG.

Goals

I'd like to work on the University Council. All groups and organizations should have a say on the University Counsel. They need direct input from the student body. I also think that we should develop better ties with The Bucknellian. The Bucknellian is the main student informer, which should work with the main student voice, BSG. The two should be working together. Everyone needs to be more informed. Some students don't even know what BSG is. BSG needs to represent the student body, not just the representatives. We need direct student involvement.

Race Relations

We need to open up to the special interest students. Until you actually meet a minority student, you will not fully understand. We need to push for more diverse courses. We need to open up our concerts to more diverse groups. We need to work more with minority organizations. Now we have a minority student representative, which is a step in the right direction. There are cultural biases that people learn, which need to be cleared up.

Shane Lympus '93

Experience

I am on the football team and am also a brother at Sigma Chi fraternity.

If you want to be a good football player, you have to work extra hard. That same analogy applies to becoming a good BSG president. The BSG needs some fresh blood and some fresh ideas. I believe that I will be able to handle any situation that arises.

Goals

I'd like to help legitimize BSG. I cannot understand how any government body can claim legitimacy when possibly up to 80% of the campus has no idea who or what BSG stands for.

Why Running

I've given that a lot of thought. I'm not exactly sure. Anyone can sit around and complain about what's going on. I don't like people who just sit back and criticize without trying to make a difference. That what I want to do. Try and make a difference.

Race Relations

The solution to most problems is through education. Classes are a way of education, but I believe that there are many other medias to educate. I believe that most of the tension comes from a lack of education. Education begins when people start talking. Through talking, further knowledge will be acquired.

Salient Issues

Sexism, homophobia and the Greek issue are the main issues. You can't change people's minds if they are ignorant. I believe that the freshman metamorphosis, and more programs like that help break the walls of ignorance.

BSG and Trustees

I feel that with the change in climate, they have no choice. They must get into matters that deal with students. If BSG dosen't get involved in these situations, who is going to speak up for the students? That's what BSG is, a voice for the students.

Treasurer

Treasurer

Elva Josephson '94

I am a transfer student with an associate's degree from a community college. I was student treasurer for two years, and I was the president of my two-year honor society. I was also on the student conduct committee, and the vice president's search committee. I was really involved in community college and I enjoy being involved and knowing what is going on withing the school. There is a lot that needs to be changed. There was a lot of apathy at yesterday's debate, and I was very disappointed in how many people showed up. There was hardly anyone there. I hope to see this changed. This is their life and home for four years. I'm sure there are issues that have to be addressed, but if they can't come to the student leaders, who can they come to? I want to be the kind of person that people can come and talk to, especially with financial matters. Sometimes you have to take the brunt of things, but sometimes that is the best way to go. I can handle that. I definitely want to get involved.

Experience

Leadership training and conventions, I also went to a national student programming convention. I was a student leader for two years. Actually being in the position before is the best experience. I know what I've done wrong and hopefully I'll be able to learn from my mistakes and do it better this time.

Goals

I'd like to see the students voice their opinion more. I'd like to take a fresh point of view with experience behind it. I want to see what groups are being overlooked and try to balance things out. I'd like to hear what people are saying.

Race Relations

I agree that education is the best policy. If people don't understand about other cultures, that barrier can never be broken. You need to educate people. If you don't want to learn, if you want to be ignorant for the rest of your life, then you will be. About mandatory classes, you may learn something but mandatory classes won't help. Educational programming will help.

BSG Money for Campus programming

We all know the reasons why people [in the past] have gone to fraternities and not to the Bison; probably because the fraternities were serving beer. That's a shame. People should be able to go to a program without the necessity of having beer. Maybe we need to have better programming. Advertising for these events is terrible. We need to look into something different. BU needs to break its bubble.

David Barry '94

Experience

I was the Vice Chair of Appropriations, Chair of COSP, and also the chair on the Bucknell Concert Committee. I am on the B.U. Student Lectureship committee and I am the treasurer for both the Umbrella Organization and Amnesty International.

Goals

I want to make funding fair and more objective, especially towards special groups. There are reasons to make exceptions to rules. The guidelines are currently very strict and they don't allow for exceptions. I want to make it more fair for everyone involved.

Race Realtions

The treasurer's main job is to treat everyone fairly. Everyone should be funded equally and fairly.

BSG money for Campus programming

Every weekend there should be something for people to do other than go to fraternites. We need more lectures, more interesting lectures. You need money to get the good speakers and bands. You need the proper money and support to get the big names and controversial speakers. With more money, the quality of the programming should increase, and more people should attend.

Why Running

I feel that it is a very important position and I think that I have the qualifications for it. I think that I can make it more equal on campus. I feel that different groups have input to my thinking, I think that I can be fair to the whole campus.

BSG Financial Aid/ Student Activities Fee

I don't think that the SAF should be paying other students' scholarships. The University should be doing it.

Byron Frey '94

I think I am qualified because I am active in BSG. I also sit on the fiscal affairs committee. I'd like to bring BSG back to the students. My biggest attribute that I could bring to this position would be a new perspective. I'm not affiliated with Umbrella or anything like that. I would be impartial to any group. I would be sensitive to others by not having sensitivity towards any group. Each group would get the proper treatment that they deserve.

Goals

Certain groups need to know BSG guidelines for obtaining BSG funds. They need to know what is required of them when they come to the appropriations committee. I'd like to address special interest groups and how their funds are appropriated, such as Hillel. I'd also like to bring the students back into the student government. It's amazing how many people don't even know what it is. We need to get student opinions before we vote.

Why Running

To bring BSG back to the students. We need to get them aware and more informed. Their opinions need to be heard, it's their government.

Salient issues

I think that The Bucknellian is one of the big ones. The Bucknellian and the way that we did things was wrong. We also need to keep the 24-hour section of the library.

BSG money for Campus programming

The money for student-wide programming is being spent on activities that a lot of students aren't being involved in and money is being wasted. We should find ways to get students involved. We need to get other students' input and find out how they want the money spent. We need to know what they are thinking.

First Vice President

Sean McCarthy '94

I have been on BSG for the last three semesters.

One of the biggest problems with BSG is that noone wants to get involved, or that no one knows about it.

I have also been involved with Congress, CCA, I and I am the Student Affairs Chair.

My goal is to make sure that everyone on campus knows about BSG.

Currently, representatives do not serve a function. They do not do what they are supposed to do. They should go back and get a full campus scope.

Goals

I've recently been working on the Bison, and on the weightroom. I'd also like to get the UC smoke free.

Racial Relations

We need to integrate the campus. We need to try and meet the minorities, it is our job as the majority. We have to go out and meet them. We need to increase participation and attendance in lectures, etc. I'd like to see the representatives in congress go to these events. You have to push people to go to these events. Once pushed, people will want to go these events.

Salient Issues

Sensitivity, harassment, verbal abuse, and insensivity are the major issues facing campus today. In the MG101 ad, they were not intentionally being sexist or elitist. They may not have meant to do this, but they did it ignorantly. Things like that need to be controlled. There is also still a ton of student apathy. I am at a loss to figure out how to get people more involved on campus.

BSG Funding

Each place where money was given had a different need. Bison Programming was very successful and they have come up short before, so they need the money.

Why Running

I like BSG and I want to improve how it runs. I think that more people should be running for positions. I have worked closely with the past two vice presidents and I like their job.

Charron Anderson '93

Experience

I bring with me qualities of committment, leadership, a never-quit and team-spirit attitude. I have worked with AACS, special interest housing, marketing, and others. I am active in Sigma Mu Beta, which is not a fraternity, but a seperate social group that was started here at Bucknell.

Goals

I would hope to work well with the other candidates. We will need to sift through everyone's ideas. No one has yet to come out with a clear set of guidelines. I'd like to see BSG's public relations improve. It seems that BSG is the bad guy lately. People need to see what BSG is all about.

Race Relations

Everyone seems to stress education through courses. Education is the best way to help people, but how many candidates themselves have taken a course in race and gender or sensitivity? Education is the key and a class is a good idea, but it is still up in the air. Awareness definitely has to be made. We should be open to ideas. There is definitely room for improvement. The masses need to be aware of the minority.

Why Running

I have always wanted to do something and this year I feel that I can make a difference. I feel that I am diverse enough to represent all of the students. I try to meet new people all of the time. I feel that I have gotten along with everyone. I am of the people.

Salient issues

Definitely Greek life is an important issue. So much of the social life revolves around the Greeks. Now BSG programming is scheduled for non-alcoholic events. You cannot just throw money into something without looking into the issue deeply. Student sensitivity is also important. I'd like to see everyone come together as a whole student body. BSG itself has been of importance lately. Students need to be better educated and that will only come from BSG. We seem to be the source of people's complaints.

1st & 2nd VP

Second VP

Jason Leitner '94

I care. I'm not going to beat around the bush. I have no government experience, but I do care. I'm a hard worker and I really want to get involved.

Goals

To change the campus apathy. We have to get to freshmen early and involve them. We need to explain and promote events, lectures, etc. By getting to the freshmen, you get a feeling that everyone can get involved. The only thing that was available was the Greek system in my freshman year and that's not enough..

Race Relations

Education is a good idea, but the main thing is how to get the education in place. If you're going to make a course, with this, make it mandatory. It is the only way to get the message to the people.

Salient issues

Treatment of women is important. Especially in light of what happenned last year with the assualt. Another issue would be the pressures of freshmen going Greek. Bucknell freshmen also need a better orientation, to prepare them for the workload and for the pressures.

Why Running

I want to get involved and do something for the University. I care.

Scott Perricelli '94

I am currently in BSG Appropriations. I'm co-chair for the fiscal commitee. I've taken minutes at BSG. I'd like to see the campus get in better touch with BSG. I'd like to have the students have more of a say in matters, not just what the congressmen think. I like to see lists of congressmen and their numbers made public. Especially in the Bison. People deserve to know who their representatives are and how to get in touch with them.

Experience

I've been involved in BSG and I know how it works. I know what people there do.

Goals

To make BSG more candid, and to make people believe that we're there for the students. It doesn't seem that we're in touch with the student body. We need to see what the Bucknell students want and how they want things changed.

Racial Relations

Education needs to be done. The student populus at Bucknell is too homophobic. More courses need to be brought up to educate the student body in minority affairs.

Why Running

I'd like to getwe more involved and improve Bucknell. There are a lot of improvements that can be made here.

Salient Issues

Major issues are homophobia and race relations . Another issue is that Greek programming and Bison programming are very conflicting. Less emphasis should be put on alcohol. There's money there to pay for for bands at non-alcoholic events/parties. It would be good for the fraternities to get more involved with the students.

"I don't want anybody to become color-blind," said Pannell. "When you become color-blind you neglect important aspects of a person. I want people to become less culturally and racially ignorant. I want them to recognize that I am an African-American male and that that doesn't make me any less than a European-American male. I have no problem with people recognizing what color I am or where I come from."

"The problem is that people are still hung up on stereotypes. I have been followed around the bookstore, down the street by the police, all because I was black and therefore suspicious," said Pannell.

"It's a question of mutual respect," said Tchiprout. "I come from Colombia, so I'm used to white people, darker-skinned people, black people, Jewish people, and being from a different culture, I never had any chance to discriminate. Whenever you met anyone on the street, you treated them with the respect with which they treated you. If I walk by an African-American student on this campus and they treat me with respect I will give them that same respect back, and that goes for whites or anyone else."

Responding to questions concerning segregation on campus, Nunez stressed that "people with common interests hang out together."

Skena added, "In regard to the issue of African-Americans sitting together in the caf, there are two or three tables of SAE's in the caf, all the Sammy's sit together, and no one has a problem with that. If you painted them all blue, they would stand out. It's just that African-Americans are identified by their skin color so people notice it more. Segregation isn't always a bad thing, we segregate ourselves all the time."

"Segregation can be helpful and can be harmful, just as integration can be sometimes helpful and sometimes harmful. What you have to worry about is harmful segregation, and I don't see that here," said Simms.

Peter Ho— The Bucknellian

"You can't hide from race relations," insists Alyssa Chumnavech '92.

MINORITY CONCERNS AND PROSPECTIVE STUDENTS

"What do you tell prospective minority students about the environment at Bucknell?" Abrahamsen asked of Carter.

"Students are students," said Carter. "Minority students have academic questions, they want to know student-teacher ratios, they want a good education. We will begin to talk about the race issue, and I tell them outright, 'It's tough.' Any time you're coming out of your home environment to a place that probably doesn't have the same minority representation it's tough. You'll probably have to deal with this or that issue and it's not easy, but support structures are there, and you can be successful."

"I could tell you about my experience as a student," continued Carter, "and this is like Utopia in comparison. The positives definitely outweigh the negatives. You are lucky to have a good President and administration here that care about minority concerns and are always willing to listen. It's not the place for everybody, and that's alright."

"I love this school," asserted Simms, "but I know minorities who hate it. It varies."

"And that's like any other student," said Carter. "A lot of the same things are issues for white and non-white perspectives."

"Things like minority perspective day is also really helpful," said Pannell. "It's very informative and you get information on minority issues from minorities. I tell them that Bucknell is just like a little piece of the world when it comes to minority issues. You have to give to get. You get happiness from being involved. You are going to run into racially ignorant people and sexist people anywhere, and Bucknell is no exception."

"What the University does need to do," adds Carter, "is to get some minorities in some real faculty and administrative positions. I'd like to see more professors, some non-white deans. That is the next step, and I think they are working on that."

THE SOLUTION: A UNIVERSAL EFFORT

"Who should be the catalyst in continued progress and improvement in relations between minorities and non-minorities?" asked Abrahamsen. "Should it be the University, minorities, non-minorities, faculty? Who's court is the ball in?"

"It's up to the individual," asserts Nunez. "You have to go to the programs and learn on your own. They are not going to come walking to you."

"A lot of the programs attract the same people again and again," noted Pannell. "As far as who's responsibility it is, it's everyone's—faculty, administration and students. As soon as people are educated as they are being now, then something is happening that wasn't happening before. You have people working together toward a common end of understanding. A lot of faculty are speaking out more, and things have improved since I've been here."

"A lot of what happens in the classroom can break down barriers," insists Carter. "Round tables and forums like this are good, but they are only opinions. The classroom is key. We all have to go to class, and what's presented in class is fact. If you learn that this African-American invented this or that minority wrote that, you break down barriers with facts. A lot of faculty were educated a generation ago and they simply don't know about the contribution of minorities in their fields."

"The idea of a liberal arts education should include learning about minorities and problems such as racism and sexism," says Tchiprout. "I would like to see a UC course encompassing all of this."

"You're dealing with a problem that's been ingrained in students for eighteen years—of course it's tough to change and education must begin earlier, but we can have an effect now," says Carter.

Obscene art stirs Tufts students

Tufts University of Meadford, Massachusetts had a major problem earlier this year between the Psi Fraternity house members and their neighbors.

Those living next to the Psi residence, most of whom are female, stated that they witnessed several of the fraternity men painting a "graphic description of a rape" on top of a car. When they were asked to stop, they verbally assaulted the women, and refused.

The University said that they consider this particularly disheartening, as it breaks down the bond between the community and the school. There were no charges pressed, but the alleged graffiti artists have written letters of apology to their neighbors, their mayor, and school officials.

WRC beneficial at St. Lawrence

The students at St. Lawrence University established a Women's Resource Center in the spring of 1989, and students say it has been extremely beneficial.

In November, they will be holding open houses for those unfamiliar with the resource center and all which it entails and gives to the university. Among other services, Safe Walks are available, which are much akin to Bucknell's campus security's optional rides back to dorms; additionally, they have taken this concept a step further, introducing Safe Beds, which are areas where women can sleep if they do not feel safe in returning to their homes.

The Women's Resource Center opened eyes with their first workshop entitled "Rethinking Sexual Assault and Rape," and hopes that similar workshops will also have positive effects on the campus community.

Need-blind stays at Amherst

President Peter Pouncey recently announced that the college would be retaining its need-blind financial aid party. The decision sparked some concern, but mainly relief among the students.

The policy ensures that students will be admitted "without regard to their ability to pay the College's fees and without extensive watering down of individual financial-aid packages." When the financial-aid plan was in jeopardy, students worried that if Amherst turned to another method, the diversity of students might be jeopardized as well.

The need-blind plan will be up for discussion again in five years at Amherst.

Pro-choice stirs debates in PA

The Franklin and Marshall Coalition for Choice held a demonstration on October 28 in conjunction with Millersville University Students for Choice in the "hopes of delivering a message supporting a pro-choice position to both Senate candidates."

The idea for such a coalition began with a plan to hold a nationwide demonstration, but right now, Pennsylvania is being used as a test model. There are 30 to 40 schools participating including Lafayette, Millersville, University of Pittsburgh, Elizabethtown, Dickinson, and Bucknell.

Said co-chair Emily Lichtman, "We've found at other campuses it has been really easy to do and when other schools do it, we have a big impact."

Boston rallies against obscenity

Men attending Harvard University, Tufts University, and Wheelock College have joined women from three surrounding women's colleges in protesting the recent opening of a pornographic video store which recently opened nearby.

"If men do not speak out against pornography, then it will be the sexist, abusive, and violent men who would come to speak for all men," said Jackson Kaatz, a member of "Harvard Anti-Sexist Men." "Violence should not be what a man is about."

His organization is involved in speak-outs at high schools and colleges, picketing sexist concerts, and handing out leaflets at sporting events.

cator, felt that the performance art pieces in the Bison, cafeteria, and the Terrace Room, involving disputes between students who drank the previous night and their concerned friends, were especially effective demonstrations, for they were situations which "students could relate to...it got their attention."

Goldman mentioned that all but one of the posters entitled, "Do you think there is a drug and alcohol problem at Bucknell?" asking for students' written responses, were taken down.

In response to this situation Goldman remarked, "This demonstrates the attitudes prevalent at Bucknell...people who have a problem with alcohol abuse just don't want to look at it."

In order to prepare for the week, Turbide and Abrahamsen attended a National Alcohol Awareness Week planning conference in Mobile, Alabama which, said Abrahamsen, "enabled us to gather some thoughts and ideas that other schools had developed."

The lecturers and discussion leaders were chosen by the committee in order to "provide more specific programming with local speakers," said Thomas. The committee felt that a more varied mix of alcohol abuse topics with smaller group discussions would make a greater impact.

As well, campus events which were already planned, such as Will Keim's lecture, "Demythologizing the Animal House," which dealt with the Greek system, fit in well with the week.

In the past during Alcohol Awareness Week at Bucknell, those students who were at least 21 years old were asked to participate in demonstrations in the LC mall which involved drinking one beer at a time and signing their name after each one. This year's committee did not feel this event was necessary; Thomas stated, "we all agreed that it was counterproductive to what we are doing."

Alcohol Awareness Week ends on Saturday after a mocktail party celebration in the Bison—where non-alcoholic cocktails will be served—and "safe rides," sponsored by Delta Delta Delta on Saturday night.

DeCerchio further explained that Saturday night is the busiest for security because the personnel are out on patrol, and they are often delayed in responding to the escort request.

Kim Rose '92, president of Delta Delta Delta sorority, said, "This service is a response to the necessity for safety especially against sexual assault and drunk driving."

Rose commented that a lot of drunk driving occurs on campus, and there are also many situations in which students risk sexual assault. For these reasons Rose would like to see "people to use the service."

"Safe Rides" has been advertised all over campus, including a mail box stuffing of a fluorescent pink card. On that card the phone number was wrong. The correct number is 524-1057.

BSG: If you don't vote, don't complain

It's that time of year again — time to talk about Monday's elections for officers of the Bucknell Student Government (BSG). As in past years, The Bucknellian has interviewed each candidate, and a transcription of those students' comments appears on pages 4–5. We have also examined the qualifications and responses of each candidate, and make endorsements below.

In general, many candidates this year appear to have similar platforms. The themes of better education about minority concerns, more student input on BSG decisions, and greater sensitivity to issues of tolerance were mentioned by nearly every candidate. Despite these superficial similarities, however, we believe the broader views of the candidates endorsed below will drive our student government into a more significant position on campus and re-legitimitize it with Bucknell students.

PRESIDENT

Mike Thomas '94 is an energetic, thoughtful, and down-to-earth young man who would propel the BSG to new heights. His reasoned responses to our questions seemed to stem from a serious consideration of the issues, not just a passing thought. Thomas' pragmatic approach to everyday life would allow him to keep his cool, no matter the situation, and bring to fruition the programs he initiates.

At the same time, we pause to admire and congratulate Shane Lympus '93. Unsatisfied with the present BSG, and having realized the futility of complaining to deaf ears, Lympus has taken the initiative to try to change Bucknell for the better. Though his dearth of student government experience makes him a tremendous underdog, he sets an impressive precedent for traditionally apathetic Bucknell students to follow.

TREASURER

Perhaps the most challenging of BSG positions, the treasurer must balance the burgeoning monetary requirements of student organizations with limited amounts of available funding. Both Elva Josephson '94 and David Barry '94 bring important qualifications to the post.

Josephson already holds an associate's degree in business and has had two years experience as student treasurer at another college. However, this is only her first semester at Bucknell. Barry, on the other hand, has had a fair amount of government experience and represents a wide spectrum of political views, yet he hasn't nearly the economic expertise of Josephson.

We endorse both candidates and encourage students to consider their choice carefully: which is more important, specific budgeting experience or a knowledge of salient campus issues?

FIRST VICE PRESIDENT

Sean McCarthy '94 is a student government veteran with a clear understanding of what new directions the BSG must take to better represent the student body as a whole. His proposals to expand the role of congressmembers and to enhance dialogue between special interest group are significant and timely.

He seems to have a clear grasp, not only of the operations of BSG, but of every aspect of Bucknell life. He also seems genuinely concerned about changing this university for the better.

SECOND VICE PRESIDENT

While both candidates for Second Vice President appear enthusiastic about the job, we can endorse neither for the position. Neither one has the experience and training necessary to fulfill the duties of the office.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Support group addresses gay men's issues

TO THE EDITOR:

We, the members of the Bucknell Gay Men's Support Group, are writing in response to the letter signed "A Concerned Member of the Class of '92." Last week's letter raised several concerns which are most obvious to gay, lesbian, or bisexual students but should be important to all members of the Bucknell community.

We would like to point out that there are a great number of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students on campus, and also that there are a number of resources for such students. First, Friends of Lesbians and Gays (FLAG), a student-run organization, provides political support for members of this minority group. Furthermore, the gay awareness group, which is open to faculty, staff, and students, provides institutional support. There is also the Gay and Lesbian Alumni (GALA), which, among other activities, offer stipends for anyone wishing to pursue a Jan Plan dealing with gay, lesbian, or bisexual concerns. Psychological services also assists students struggling with their sexual orientation by providing counseling. Psychological services and residential life can also act as liasions between support groups and same-sex oriented students.

In order to address and cope with a number of the issues raised in the aforementioned letter, we have come together to form the Bucknell Gay Men's Support Group. In our past meetings, we have helped each other work through problems, defined who we are, and arranged social events with other support groups.

Unfortunately, because of the homophobia cited in the concerned student's letter, we cannot publicly disclose the time and location of our meetings. Confidentiality is the major concern, so if you call the FLAG swithboard at X-1609, you can be assured that your concerns wil be addressed discreetly.

We extend an invitation to the "Concerned member of the Class of '92," and others similiarly situated on this campus, to attend our future meetings. There is no longer any reason to be in isolation.

Umbrella recommends BSG candidates

DEAR EDITOR:

On Monday, November 18, 1991, the student body will elect fellow students to the four top positions of the Bucknell Student Government. Given the importance of these positions, representatives of the member groups of the Umbrella Organization spent three hours listening to the candidates' speeches, asking questions pertinent to the mission of the Umbrella Organization, and then deliberating among ourselves to determine which candidates will best support our mission. This mission is to uphold the rights of all students as well as to empower those students who are working for social change and environmental improvement.

For the position of President the Umbrella Organization feels that Michael Thomas is the most qualified candidate. Through membership in marginalized campus groups, Mike has the deepest concern with, sensitivity to, and understanding of the issues with which the Umbrella Organization deals. Through this understanding Mike shows the ability to step beyond awareness of social change issues to resolutions. For example, Mike supports the FLAG recommendation to fund a position for a gay/lesbian resource person at Bucknell. In addition he wants representation of marginalized groups on the University Council. Finally, Mike is an accessible student leader who has been actively and successfully involved with Bucknell Student Government since his first days at Bucknell.

The Umbrella Organization supports Charron Anderson for the position of First Vice President. Through living in special interest housing, as well as his membership in organizations working for social change, Charron has a personal investment in the mission of the Umbrella Organization.

The Umbrella Organization does not endorse either Scott Perricelli or Jason Leitner for the position of Second Vice President. Neither candidate has shown himself to support the mission of the Umbrella Organization.

David Barry is the choice of the Umbrella Organization for the position of Treasurer. Dave has served as the treasurer for social change and marginalized groups on campus, so he is sensitive to the special needs of these groups. Furthermore, Dave has been involved with Bucknell Student Government, including the Appropriations Committee since he began his Bucknell career. Dave's understanding of the needs of the member groups of the Umbrella Organization, as well as his understanding of financial matters within the BSG, make Dave the most qualified candidate.

After considerable deliberation, the Umbrella Organization feels that these three candidates are most qualified to represent the voice of those students working for social change and environmental improvement.

Students angered by Marine Corps' campus recruitment

TO THE EDITOR:

As concerned students, we feel compelled to express our beliefs concerning the discrimination occuring on this campus against gay, lesbian, and bisexual students. Two years ago, Bucknell University amended its anti-discrimination policy to include sexual orientation. We are openly requesting that Bucknell University uphold its legal obligation to protecting the rights of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students on its campus. We think that the Marine's recent job recruitment stands in violation of the Bucknell anti-discrimination policy.

It is a well known fact that the Department of Defense has a written, legal, discriminatory policy excluding gay, lesbian, and bisexual peoples from employment opportunities. Although other organizations might be discriminatory in practice, this policy sets the DOD apart in that it has institutionalized its discriminatory practice into policy. As a private university, Bucknell has the right and responsibility to enforce its anti-discrimination policy. Allowing branches of the Department of Defense to recruit only heterosexual students on campus is a flagrant breach of this responsibility.

We must consider if a case involving the discrimination against women or people of color would be allowed in the same manner in which the discrimination against gay, lesbian, and bisexual student is being overlooked. Would the University permit a company or organization, which explicitly excluded African-Americans or women, to recruit on our campus? Is the University unconcerned with the policies and practices of those companies and organiza-

Biology chair's letter disturbs department major

TO THE EDITOR:

Two days ago, a notice was mailed to all biology majors regarding problems in their curricula interests. This notice was sent by the acting Chairperson of the Biology Department, Professor Sally Nyquist. The Chairperson briefly presented the source of her anguish: the negligible interest in the two plant sciences courses offered this coming semester. As of a few days ago, only two biology majors total had signed up for the two courses, besides a group of non-majors. The letter went on to chastise the biology majors for our apparent shortsightedness and shallow interests. Professor Nyquist outlined her opinion of the biology department she chairs as well as the future biologists currently being educated here.

"If Bucknell continues to educate its biologists as it is presently doing [allowing students to pick the 300-level courses they take], our biology majors simply will not be able to contribute in any significant fashion."

My response to Professor Nyquist's notice really does not concern the majority of this campus. Most will completely ignore this letter in The Bucknellian. It is, however, the most effective way I could grab the attention of the biology department and its majors.

I agree with Professor Nyquist's concern towards the lack of student interest in the plant sciences. What I find inappropriate is the tone and presentation to the department and its students. A large percentage of the majors I discussed the notice with, as well as a faculty member or two, were extremely disturbed by the general implications of the Chairperson's letter. Although she may have not meant it, Professor Nyquist's tone im-

Political Correctness at Bucknell

BY LEE GUZOFSKI

Faculty and students, I have just heard the most distressing bit of news. For those of you that don't know me, I am involved in an improvisational comedy group called "Some Assembly Required." It is a group composed completely of Bucknell students who perform in the Bison, typically for large crowds. Every comment given to me personally by any audience member has always been positive; all have told me how much they enjoyed the show and how funny the group was. Well, that's great. I have always been filled with pride and joy after a show; after making all of those people laugh. Well, I guess I've been misinformed about the laughter, apparently not everyone was laughing...

I have just come from the Bison, from discussing our next show with someone involved in the Bison Programming Committee, or whatever fascist group controls what you can see. Anyway, this person informed me that we can not, in any way, shape, or form, make any comment that is remotely insulting to anyone, or else we "will never perform anywhere, ever." I was then informed that from now on, Bison Programming will include in any contract with a performer, a clause that states that they cannot remotely insult anyone. What, exactly, is going on? I, as a performer, have just been threatened by Bison Programming.

For those of you that haven't seen our shows, we get suggestions from the audience and then create entire skits around those suggestions, completely improvisationally. We have no scripts or rehearsed material, we make it up as we go along. This, as most of you could guess, is a particularly demanding form of performance. If you are told that you are in a New York subway station then you have to pretend that you really are in a New York subway station, and make it funny. Without any prepared material. The next question that probably comes to mind is, "How can you do this?"

The only way to be funny at all is to make fun of stereotypes. All comedy is based on stereotypes, universal stereotypes that everyone has seen before and can relate to. If I am in a subway station, then I could be a bum, a business man, a teenage punk, whatever. I have to personify and embody stereotypical aspects of a certain type of person. Now, Bison Programming is trying to tell me that I can't be insulting. You cannot personify a stereotype without insulting some over-sensitive member of the group you're personifying. When I say "insult" I do not mean calling names and hurling epithets; I mean, you have to take on the most blatant stereotypical characteristics of that group. This, of course, could be deemed as insulting by some but it can also be extremely funny. That is, if you have a sense of humor and are strong enough to laugh at yourself.

I have just been informed, nay, threatened by Bison Programming that our last show was too offensive. I was sort of surprised that people were actually upset and moreso that I was being threatened. However, I can almost understand that maybe a few lines were crossed, maybe. I will also defend all of those "offensive" aspects of our show because those comments or whatever were done within the characters that we were playing and therefore: good improv. We are not on that stage to make everyone content with life. We are on that stage to poke fun and to perform good, funny, quality improv.

I have just been informed that although we perform great improv, not everyone is happy with our subject matter. The sad truth is that our subject matter comes from the audience. All of you that are accusing me are really the ones at fault: I am merely your puppet.

Now, as I said, I can understand some people may have been upset over a couple lines from our last show. In fact, one of our former members will no longer be with us as a result. It's funny, no one ever comes up to me and says anything. I always have to hear it from somewhere else.

This person never came up to me, the people who are allegedly complaining to Bison Programming never came up to me; instead I hear it secondhand, as a threat. No one has ever once walked up to me and told me that any aspect of our show was offensive; instead I have to hear it from people who have little or no sense of humor anyway. Weak people who can't laugh at themselves, who can't "take a joke." But these people are also the same people who whine and need protection from the University. Who do these people and the University think we are? Toddlers, who have to be protected from everything mean and "not nice" in the world? How old are we? Wake up! Life stings, and we do not need neo-Nazis like Bison Programming holding our hands and leading us down a rose-colored path to maturity because the fact is, that path dead-ends, if it ever existed at all. Growing up involves dealing with reality, with hurt.

To be honest, the most insulting comedian I have ever heard, outside of Andrew Dice Clay, I heard perform in the Bison. However, I have to admit that he

Coffee with Alice

BY DEAN BAKER

Eleven years into the reign of the Reagan-Bush era, there is at last some hope that we might be seeing the light at the end of the tunnel. The complete humiliation of Dick Thornburgh by Harris Wofford in last week's senatorial race, raises the prospect that the Reaganites might finally be pushed from power.

Thornburgh's defeat was so striking, because as a former Attorney General and popular two-term governor, he should have had little difficulty defeating a comparatively unknown candidate like Harris Wofford. But he managed not only to lose, but to lose by a wide margin, capturing less than 45% of the vote. While there are good reasons for voters to have been disgusted with Dick Thornburgh personally (such as his support of Operation Rescue's harassment of women seeking abortions), such a strong performance by Wofford can only be seen as evidence of serious disenchantment with the Reagan-Bush agenda. Furthermore, it is likely that this disenchantment extends well beyond Pennsylvania and is shared by much of the electorate throughout the country.

Wofford made the focus of his campaign national health insurance and the state of the economy. Bush gave him ample ammunition on both issues. Health care costs have risen rapidly throughout the decade. As a result the number of people who can no longer afford health insurance is at record highs. Also the quality of care for many has deteriorated as the government and private insurers have cut back on the services that they cover. Wofford advocated a national health insurance plan modeled on the one currently in place in Canada. This undoubtedly looks quite attractive to many voters, since Canada is able to provide care to its entire population at a cost that is approximately 1/3 less (per person) than what the U.S. is currently paying. Canada also does better than the U.S. on almost every statistic used to measure the quality of health care.

The fact that the bills from the Reagan era ripoffs are now coming due also contributed significantly to Wofford's victory. The Reagan-Bush policies spawned the most massive run-up of debt (both public and private) in the history of the world. The federal debt nearly quadrupled in this period going from approximately $900 billion when Reagan took office to about $3.5 trillion presently. The interest on this debt will soon surpass military spending as the largest single item in the budget.

Similarly, many private corporations ran up huge debts in carrying through or resisting corporate take-overs. And of course, the banks and S&Ls ran up hundreds of billions in bad loans on speculative and fraudulent ventures, which the taxpayers now have to cover.

This debt burden has led to such an economic morass that the Bush administration is completely unable to devise a strategy to re-invigorate the economy. As a result, unemployment has been rising, and incomes have been falling.

This economic situation, combined with the concern over health care, were clearly the major factors in causing Pennsylvania's voters to reject Thornburgh. Since voters around the nation are concerned about the same issues, last Tuesday's election makes it seem possible that a competent Democrat running on a progressive platform could defeat Bush. And perhaps then it will finally be possible to begin to correct the damage done by twelve years of vicious racist policies.

Since voters around the nation are concerned about [health care], last Tuesday's election made it seem possible that a competent Democrat running on a progressive platform could defeat Bush.

Before that can be done, it is first necessary to get a Democrat nominated who is committed to running a progressive campaign. This is not an easy task, since the primary process depends heavily on the size of a candidate's campaign contributions, and the candidates who are committed to helping the rich even more than Reagan and Bush are likely to do best in that area.

The media (which are all owned and controlled by rich people) are also likely to do their part by playing up those candidates most favorably disposed to the wealthy. Still, there is at least one Democrat in the race, Iowa Senator Tom Harkin, who is running a progressive campaign. Wofford's victory has to be seen as a boost to Harkin's candidacy, as it shows that voters will support a candidate who insists that government do more than give tax breaks to the rich.

One other point worth noting about Wofford's victory. It presented one of those rare cases where a person with some integrity and commitment to justice was elected to an important office. Wofford was an early and active participant in the civil rights movement. He was a close friend and ally of Martin Luther King. He also helped form the Peace Corps, an organization that at least aspires to a noble vision, even if this vision is not generally realized in practice. In short, there is reason to believe that Wofford may have some greater concerns than his personal enrichment and his re-election.

Skena's Prescription

In the past few weeks, Bucknell students have received copies of the new sexual assault policy and an informative pamphlet concerning sexual harrassment. Last week there were no less than five articles about awareness issues in The Bucknellian, not including the Editorial. The Bucknellian cited recent steps taken by the University to combat the various 'isms' that plague the community as positive and welcome.

The steps, indeed, are positive, but now that we have the ball rolling, why don't we go one step further? Why not incorporate a course addressing racism, heterosexism, and feminist issues (or something along those lines) into the core distributional requirements required for graduation? I know that's not a very original idea, and I'm aware that the appropriate committees are already developing such a course but I suspect this issue has not been on the lips of most students. Perhaps it is time for more people to push for such a course.

Assume for a moment that this change occurs in the immediate future. Who should have to take it? Surely, engineers should be exempt from it, their four years are regimented enough as it is. In fact, most, if not all, science majors should not be forced to take something so clearly unrelated to their career goals. Even Management majors have pretty tight schedules, far too busy for such frivolous adventures. Maybe this course should be for those Liberal Arts majors, they have the time.

Of course, all the above arguments are ridiculous and I'm sorry I stereotyped the above majors to make a point but I have heard such arguments raised. There is no reason for anyone to be exempt from such a course. While the lab sciences we all must take may be of little relevance to us in the future, most should understand why we have been told to take them. Bucknell seeks to create a holistic educational environment that produces academically well-rounded students who will, in turn, be responsible citizens.

While students could argue that some courses are irrelevant to their common life, such arguments should not be advanced in relation to an awareness course. I may have little use for the Baby Bio I've learned but I cannot think of many professions that would not cause me to work with women, minorities or gays and lesbians. Bucknell is in the business of preparing students for life, professional and otherwise. I cannot think of a course that would be a better means to that end. We will not only experience the future after graduation, we will help to form it. I would like to see Bucknell take even more initiatives to make sure it is a future based not just on tolerance, but understanding.

was funny. Everyone was laughing and therefore, Bison Programming did a fine job of finding entertainment. Now, one has to distinguish good humor from crude insults. Andrew Dice Clay is not, in my opinion, funny. I am insulted by most of the things he says, but I would never threaten his right to say them. If people want to buy his albums, fine, he won't get a penny from me.

This is part of Bison Programming's argument: we are paying you to perform therefore we can control and dictate what you can and cannot say. I disagree. Bison Programming is paying us to render a service: to put on a show that the students will enjoy and again, in my opinion, I think it is safe to say that the students have enjoyed our shows. We have drawn some of the biggest crowds ever seen at the Bison, we have received numerous requests to join our group. In fact, we were selected to commemorate the one-year anniversary of the Bison! As long as we're politically-correct... Bucknell students, but by some faculty as well! Does that mean that Bison Programming is going to cut cable service to all campus buildings and all faculty homes on Sunday evening when this show is on?

The Bison is a convenient venue for "Some Assembly Required" to perform. We can reach all members of the Bucknell community: upperclassmen, freshmen, even faculty. I would never want to lose the privilege of performing in the Bison. However, I will not ever compromise my means of expression, of my improvisation, for a bunch of censors in Bison Programming! If some people are offended by our show, that's too bad, that certainly wasn't our intent. We are on stage to perform quality improv and we never, ever mean to hurt anyone. If you are offended, then it's a good thing you are speaking up! But speak to us, the performers, not Bison Programming. Bison Programming can't change a damn thing, all they can do is eliminate.

If you are offended, before you open your much-too-large mouth, analyze what it is that offends you. Is it really that big of a deal?

Even the Bucknellian wrote a favorable review of our show. I did not see so much as a one-paragraph editorial about its offensive nature. Even so, look at the comedic greats throughout history: Lenny Bruce, Eddie Murphy, Richard Pryor, George Carlin, the late Redd Foxx. Even the all-time great Saturday Night Live and "Mr. Clean" Bill Cosby have been deemed racist and sexist and offensive at times. Now, look at "In Living Color": a show that is blatantly racist and sexist but still, admittedly, funny. In fact, it is arguably one of the most watched television programs by not only

We are the ones performing, we are the ones that are trying to make you laugh, we are at your mercy! Talk to us if you have a problem and we'll try to change it for next time, but let there be a next time.

If you are offended, before you open your much-too-large mouth, analyze what it is that offends you. Is it really that big of a deal? Can you really not laugh at it? Is it really that hurtful to your morals and ideas? And even so, who cares? Maybe that's exactly the kind of entertainment we should support, at least it makes you think! How can you possibly try to eliminate it?

On My Mind...

Earvin "Magic" Johnson has always striven to be an inspiration for others. He possesses a rare and special gift to make the individuals around him better, both on and off the court. As one of the world's most recognizable athletes, he undoubtedly influences many people.

Perhaps his biggest contribution to date has been assuming the role of "ambassador" for the game of basketball. Along with Boston Celtic Larry Bird and National Basketball Association Commissioner David Stern, Johnson resurrected the N.B.A. in the early 1980's, a time when it was desperately needed—drug abuse and financial difficulties plagued the league during the 1970's. Due largely to Magic's efforts, the sport has now developed in popularity so much that it has surpassed football and baseball as this nation's hottest ticket. He is a consummate professional.

As we are all now aware, tragedy struck Johnson without warning. Then, on the afternoon of November 7, he nobly informed the world that he had contracted the virus that causes AIDS.

At the press conference, Johnson spoke courageously, and he promised to educate young people about the importance of safe sex. While this challenge places him into another position where he intends to influence others, I find that he is going about it in a troublesome fashion.

In this week's issue of Sports Illustrated, Johnson has written a first-person account of what transpired in his last few weeks and what his future plans entail. He says he will "become a spokesperson in the fight against the human immunodeficiency virus and an advocate for practicing safe sex by using condoms... Guys, go get your hat, your raincoat—whatever you want to call a condom—and wear it."

I have the utmost respect for Johnson as an individual and the contributions he has made and will make; however, if he moves ahead with his pledge as he states, it could be a disservice to others, even though I'm certain that is clearly not his intention.

As Johnson travels to junior highs and high schools to advocate safe sex, he forgets three important things: wearing a condom does not guarantee 100% safety, "limiting" yourself to monogomy is the least risky form of any sexual relationship, and practicing abstinence is also a viable option. Sex has been and will continue to be an integral part of human activity, but by promoting safe sex, Johnson in effect sends the dangerous message that intercourse is risk-free, given that the man wears a condom.

This is wrong. Johnson's unfortunate incident needs to make all individuals reevaluate their moral and ethical standards on a higher level than simply remembering to fumble for a condom when the time is right.

plied several veiled threats (such as removing the students' freedom of choice, or boosting the core requirement ,which is already extensive enough). I personally find this condescending chastisement somewhat offending, and I assure you I am not alone in this feeling.

I would like to point out to the Chairperson that in all four of the corerequirements in which I and my classmates ('93) were required to take BI-241, BI-242, BI-243, and BI-244, plant anatomy or plant systematics were included. This involved laboratories as well. The general opinion I have found among the majors tends to be that we have been exposed to an amount of plant science that is quite sufficient for those who have little interest in it. It is important that we gain a broad understanding of biology if we are to be successful contributing members of the scientific world; of that fact, no one is in disagreement. At the 300-level, however, most juniors and seniors understand themselves and their desires well enough, I think, to judge for themselves what is appropriate for their personal education within the field.

My point is obvious. Only positive encouragement can effectively influence us; negative pressures are both inefficient and futile. Does Professor Nyquist expect a plethora of majors to now run pell-mell to the sign-up sheets and sign-up after this scolding? I think not.

My advice? Work with us, the students, to more effectively utilize this fabulous $12 million Biology Building. We must expand the available courses that are being offered, cut down on the stifling bureaucracy that has infected our department, and restore a positive working environment among faculty and students alike.

For now, the changes are within your jurisdiction to grant. Stop the finger-waving, and implement some positives back into the biology department. Professor Nyquist, the choice is yours.

Student thanks Umbrella-endorsed BSG exec. members

TO THE EDITOR:

As we approach the end of another term in Bucknell Student Government, it is necessary to thank the three current officers that the Umbrella Organization endorsed last November: Megen Karakelian, Mare Rasmussen, and Vanessa Mayo. We feel their work has, to an unprecedented degree, managed to both recognize the Bucknell student population as a diversity and taken steps to empower those groups of students that have traditionally struggled to make their voices heard on this campus. The latest BSG motion urging the University to hire a gay/lesbian/bisexual support staff person is just the latest in a series of such efforts to recognize the special needs of all students, making our campus a safer and more enriching environment. As we approach the coming election, we are encouraged by past successes and hope our new officers will continue to build upon the remarkable progress of the past ones. Megen, Mare, and Vanessa, thank you again for your dedication and the countless hours of work that have indeed managed to better our University community.

Chaplain invites campus to converse about religious faith

TO THE EDITOR:

In chapel announcements and publications I have invited students to call or drop by anytime to talk things over. Three students this past week reported experiences which constrain me to repeat this invitation through your letters column.

What's the problem? It seems that other students are harassing them about matters of religious faith. Beyond shared conversation in which a person of faith explains beliefs which give meaning and direction to the believer's personal life, these troubled students described ways they seemed to be targeted in some religious campaign.

It is not only regrettable, but unacceptable, when conversations or activities—whether "religious," "political," or other—cross the line into coercion.

Any student feeling this kind of pressure is invited to come talk things over. Or if you think you may be one of the offenders, I would welcome conservation with you too.

tions which come onto this campus, and use its facilities?

The University must decide whether it is going to acknowledge its responsibility to enforce its own policy, or whether it will allow itself to continue its hypocritical neglect of this policy. It must decide whether it is truly committed to the belief that all students have the right not to be discriminated against.

We think that the present contradiction between the University's written policy and its actual practice is unacceptable! We think the Administration must resolve this contradiction by ending the practice of military recruiting on the Bucknell campus, until the Defense Department changes its policy of discriminating against gay, lesbian, and bisexual peoples.

We think that the present contradiction between the University's written policy and its actual practice is unacceptable!

Pimple problems? How to rid, cure them

Oxycution is great, but you really need not wait for them to appear to start getting rid of whiteheads, blackheads, pustules, papules

BY JOYCE DOLLINGER AND LISA LIPARI
Bucknellian Staff Writers

Stress, chocolate, gender, hot weather, soap, make-up, oily foods, and menstruation: some may, some may not cause acne. Each of these factors is prevalent in the lives of college students today, (especially the stress), but many don't realize what triggers acne or how to prevent and cure it. Getting rid of them is not as easy as just "Oxycuting" them as advertisers would have us believe. The commercials we are exposed to show a teeny bopper applying the awesome acne power medicine and then running off to the big date. Acne can actually affect people of all age groups and can't be solved "on the spot," so to speak.

Technically speaking, acne is an inflammatory condition of the sebaceous glands (the glands which underline the skin and secrete oils), which often affects adolescents and adults who have had previous skin problems. Hair follicles connect the sebaceous glands to the openings in the skin. When the glands become blocked with either dead skin cells, bacteria, or other debris (such as sebum, a solid white substance formed from the sebaceous oils), acne results. Under normal conditions, dead skin cells are carried to the surface through the hair follicles by sebum; if these follicles are blocked, the dead cells accumulate, along with bacteria and more sebum, and completely block the follicle. Chemicals produced by the bacteria involved increase this obstruction, which leads to further inflammation.

There are four different types of acne, three of which most of us have either heard of or unfortunately experienced. The whitehead, blackhead, and pimple are common terms used by many. The fourth type of acne is known as the pustule. The whitehead, or closed comedo, is a hard, white bump and is the result of a blocked pore. On the other hand, a blackhead, or open comedo, occurs when the pore is blocked with dead cells but is not closed. (The black color results not from dirt, but from pigments in the skin.) When pressure builds in the pore and the oil is moved to surrounding tissues, a red, irritated swelling can be seen. This is a papule, more commonly known as a pimple. Finally, when the body sends white blood cells to the site to combat infection, pus forms and the resulting inflammation is called a pustule.

While many may think the above information is boring, scientific, or even disgusting, it is important to understand the source of the problem in order to combat it successfully. Nearly 95% of the population has acne to some degree, and the degree of it varies from person to person. Of this 95%, the majority are not under a dermatologist's care, nor need to be because there are many simple skincare solutions. There are also many misconceptions in reference to skincare. For example, it is said that acne is caused by eating certain foods: this is not true. However, foods like shellfish and salts, which contain high levels of iodine, can aggravate existing acne. Many people believe that acne is caused by stress: this is also not true. While a person's mental state may affect his/her physical well-being, there is no evidence to prove that stress directly causes acne. As for gender, both sexes are affected equally. While men have a hormone that increases oil production by the sebaceous glands, women have a menstrual cycle which offsets these statistics.

The most common misconception about acne is the effectiveness of over-the-counter products. Studies show that it is actually just better for your skin to use soaps like Ivory, Dial, and Safeguard in the summer, and Dove or Tone in the winter to maintain a relatively dry skin condition. It is also important to wash your face often, especially before bedtime. For women who wear makeup, water-based makeup, as opposed to oil-based, is better for the skin. However, the makeup need not necessarily be hypo-allergenic.

Benzoyl peroxide, the potent stuff which most acne medicines contain, is a shedding agent that promotes peeling of the skin, which reduces blockage. Vitamin E can be applied externally to help heal dry or rough skin that acne medicines typically cause. Astringents can remove the surface oils without closing the facial pores. Benzoyl peroxide, vitamin E, and astringents are all non-prescription products that are effective in fighting acne.

To prevent acne, avoid hand/face contact and squeezing pimples. A good diet is also conducive to good skin care. Balancing your intake of "healthy foods" to sweets keeps your skin in balance. Most importantly, remember that your skin is a sensitive part of the body that requires special care and attention. Also remember that acne does not clear up overnight, and if the problem persists, see a dermatologist for prescription-strength medicine such as Retin-A.

I'm in the cafeteria last week standing a couple of people behind one of the members of the visiting Lithuanian basketball team, and I suddenly notice that one of the servers at the counter is trying in vain to get his attention. At length, a student taps him on the back, and the fellow finally turns around to the caf worker.

"You can't take two plates."

Obviously, this poor guy has no clue as to what's going on since he doesn't understand English, so he goes back to getting himself a Coke at the dispenser—you know, because, if you don't speak the language, you just ignore the person and hope it goes away. As it happened, I had seen the team come in and understood the situation, and quickly explained the deal to the woman behind the counter. Hi, sheepish.

I don't know, but we may have been looking at an international incident had she decided to vault over to the sneeze guard and slug him one for turning his back on her. It's pretty pathetic to think about, though— these folks have to stand in line all day long for food over there and we're sweating over this guy taking a second entree in the land o' plenty.

•Don't you hate it when you walk into a class on the day of a huge exam and someone asks you, "Did you study for this?" No, you truffle, I counted the dust tumbleweeds under my bed last night! Geez.

•There was this stick of Care-Free bubble gum sitting here beside my terminal in the MAC lab, and I ate it just now. Well, not just ate it, but sort of chewed on it for awhile and then, after the taste had faded, spit it out in a trash can. I really never swallow gum, but—Anyway, what I mean to say is, whoever's stick it was, I'm sorry. It was just calling me.

•Why are there always word limits on papers where you always have so much to say?

•Set a tennis ball down outside your door in the hallway. It's guaranteed that it will be kicked at least once within the next 24 hours—college-age people just can't resist that kind of temptation.

•Why is it that our parents had to force us to go to sleep when we were younger, and now going to bed is basically all we think about since we've entered college?

•In all likelihood, the worst (and most frequently employed) excuse that people give when they're caught sneaking into the cafeteria has to be, "Oh, I'm not here to eat." Like, oh yeah, you're just here for the ambience and stimulating conversation. Weak.

•True story, part two: This guy is pouring himself some milk in the caf the other day, and he accidentally drops his glass on the floor. The glass hits the tiling, bounces once, pops up, bounces a second time up off of the floor, and then finally smashes all over the place the third time. Is it the fact that the glass bounced two times before at last shattering that amazes me? No, no. It's that this loser has two chances to catch the thing before it breaks, and he doesn't even lay out for it! Now that's what I call apathetic, right there!

•Why is it that I used "stress" as a noun before I entered college, and now I use it as a verb?

•So, I'm down in the washroom with a friend of mine, who I'll refer to as "friend," and "he," and "him," and I ask him, "Do you wash your colors and your whites together?"

"Sure," he answers defensively, "I'm not prejudiced."

Next time: We examine why "Grape Nuts" cereal has such an appellation, since there's no grape in it to speak of. Our distinguished panel includes Drs. Eric Gallun and Doug Bertel, biology department co-chairs at the University of Maryland at College Park; Benjamin Wexler, professor of political science at Wake Forest University; and Scott Mostrom, head golf pro at Bowdoin College. We look forward to seeing you here.

An engineer who did more than eat, sleep, and study

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Ask anyone around campus. There's no question about why engineers drop their program of study at a higher rate than any other major. No doubt it's one of the hardest, quite possibly the hardest, majors at Bucknell. Most semesters these students spend over 20 hours a week in classes. Once they leave the classroom or lab, they are then faced with a more intense than usual workload.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian

Chemical engineer Mary Smolka '90 met a variety of students while working on the paper, including Russian major Steve Hoerter '91.

Many students drop the major because it leaves little time for a social life or other outside activities. Or so they think.

Tuesday night though, Mary Smolka '90, a chemical engineer and editor-in-chief of The Bucknellian while in college, returned to give a talk of encouragement called, "Reflections on Bucknell Engineering and a First Year in Industry." This successful Chem-E and student journalist now works as a process engineer with Eli Lilly and Company in Indianapolis, Indiana. She designs and constructs the start-up of storage tanks and says that this job is very challenging—just like Bucknell.

Reflecting upon the engineering program at Bucknell, Smolka does admit that it is tough to spend the majority of the day and night writing up labs and studying such wonders as fluid and solids; but, "putting in time in college is not a problem because there are so many opportunities when you get out." She does warn however, "It's not worth it if you're muddling along and don't like it."

Obviously Smolka did enjoy her major. She also found her professors to be very understanding—especially while she was editor-in-chief of The Bucknellian. Since her freshman year, she had enjoyed working on the paper because it enabled her to meet different kinds of students. She also liked "to get engineers on it to show they weren't holed up in Dana all the time."

Smolka served as a copy editor, newswriter, and associate editor before being elected editor-in-chief. Because of the large amount of time her engineering studies required, she was never able to be a section editor. The extra time that she needed to be "head of the newspaper" came about second semester senior year, which is typically the lightest semester for engineers. Due to a couple of classes from high school that counted for credit, Smolka only had to carry three credits that semester, one of which was the newspaper.

Smolka's involvement in an outside activity provided a break from the day-to-day drone of schoolwork and definitely looked impressive when she went to apply for a job. So if you're an engineer or a friend of one, don't get discouraged, just get involved for it may just make all the difference in your attitude and G.P.A.

Whatever you like to write about—this is the section. Call Susan at x1156 because new writers with new topics are always needed!

Center Gallery opens new exhibit

Young Hollywood will be the first-ever exhibition of toys inspired by American movies

BY NICOLE COBBAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Photographs courtesy of the Center Gallery

These Charlie Chaplin and Marilyn Monroe dolls are among the many toys that will be on display in the Center Gallery as part of the Young Hollywood exhibit opening tomorrow.

Lights, camera, action. Tomorrow, the Center Gallery will open its newest exhibit of antique and classic toys based on images from the silver screen, titled, Young Hollywood—Toys derived from motion pictures from the Lawrence Scripps Wilkinson collection. Bob Metzger, director of the Center Gallery, feels that this is "the first exhibition of toys ever that has concentrated on motion pictures." The exhibit will run from November 16 through January 26. The Center Gallery is located on the third floor of the LC.

The toys run the gamut from rare and vintage collectors items from the 1920's to modern-day, stuffed Ninja turtles, a "little time capsule of pop culture" as Metzger explains it. Some of the highlighted figures include Charlie Chaplin, Marilyn Monroe, Walt Disney, and Little Orphan Annie. The Lawrence Scripps Wilkinson collection, from which most of the exhibit was borrowed, is the largest collection of "quality toys" in the country. Affiliated with the Detroit Historical Museum, the collection contains over 5000 toys and spans American history from the mid-1800's to present day. Additional items from other private collectors supplement the exhibit with photographs, magazines, and books.

Metzger feels that the exhibit will be educational for the Bucknell community, as well as enjoyable. "People have a realistic attachment to their toys," he explains, but at the same time warns that they're not just kids' stuff. "Toys have such a wide ramification in the larger society. Toys reflect the larger world, they're the world in miniature."

The exhibit represents the American industrial revolution, when mass-producing toys made them accessible to every child in America. Toys and games became an effective advertising gimmick for studios. The success or failure of a Hollywood figure could depend on the success or failure of his advertisements.

Nowhere else is the motion picture industry as famous or influential as it was in America. Other societies judged, and still judge, American life based on the silver screen. As Metzger puts it, "Hollywood defines what America is."

A major section of the exhibit is dedicated to posters depicting modes of transportation that parallels the timeframe of the toys. Metzger describes them as "posters from the material culture. They parallel the larger mercantile culture of toys." The posters trace the industrial revolution of the transportation world in three areas: locomotives, motorcars, and steam ships.

There are no captions under any of the toys or posters, since most of them are self-explanatory, but Metzger has asked several members of the Bucknell staff to write descriptive commentaries that will help audiences to appreciate the significance of pop culture in society.

Tyranny's final show at Bucknell tonight

BY KATIE DEBONVILLE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Composer/performer "Blue" Gene Tyranny will give his final Bucknell performance tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Bucknell Hall. The concert will feature four of his own works, which consist mainly of piano and electronics. "Only about one-fourth of my music has to do with piano," Tyranny stated. "The rest is for voice, electronics, and some orchestration."

Tyranny specializes in music of the avant-garde. The first piece that he will perform in Friday's concert has to do with recording daily life and then analyzing it electronically. "From the analyses, acoustic pieces are then made," Tyranny explained, adding, "A lot of my music is about research in life." The first piece is a part of a larger series of "research" that Tyranny has done. The whole series will be released on compact disc in the near future.

"Blue" Gene Tyrrany will give his final Bucknell performance tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Bucknell Hall.

Tyranny's second piece, entitled "Pals," is based on experiments in telepathy that were conducted by J.D. Rhine at Duke University. The work is about friends who are able to know things about one another over a distance. Concluding the first half is a piece called "Nocturne With and Without Memory." It was written for Bucknell professor of music Lois Svard. It consists of three movements, the final two which stem from the first. Tyranny will be doing what he termed a "free reading" of the piece.

The second half of the concert will feature a tape and piano music form called "audio storyboard," which Tyranny invented. "It's not any particular kind of music," Tyranny said. "It consists of five parts (storyboards). All of the storyboards are based on a different world, another dimension."

Tyranny has been at Bucknell as an artist-in-residence for the past month. "Bucknell is a very good place to contemplate," Tyranny stated enthusiastically. He continued, "I've had the chance to think through compositional problems. Being able to talk about music all the time has been very helpful. It's been wonderful."

After leaving Bucknell, Tyranny will be doing a few television interviews and "lots of recording." He has three piano commissions to complete, and one of his works for voice and electronics will premiere in April. Tyranny is also a contributing editor for The All-Music Guide, a book that recommends types of music for people who haven't had a great deal of experience with music. This book will probably be published in about a year by St. Martin's Press.

Don Johnson gets a reprieve in Paradise

— Movie Review —

Paradise, Rated PG. Don Johnson and Melanie Griffith star in this beautifully set film about love overcoming hardship. This is a good movie for those who like happy endings.

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Just when you thought Miami Vice-fame Don Johnson would never be in a decent film, along comes Paradise to save his drowning career. Although he puts in a strong performance as a simple shrimp fisherman named Ben Reed, the success of the story hinges, equally, on the performance of his co-star and real life spouse, Melanie Griffith, who plays his wife Lilly.

About the only thing paradise-like in the movie is the setting. Writer Mary Agnes Donoghue (Beaches) has made a concerted effort to dazzle the audience with the beautiful scenery of a waterfront town, in her directing debut. At times, she gives viewers the feeling that this is a "solve all your problems in an hour after-school special."

In the first part of a two-tiered plot, a ten-year-old city boy named Willard (Elijah Wood) is dumped out in the country by his mother to stay with her friend Lilly. With the help of a sprite, nine-year-old tomboy named Billie (Thora Birch) he spends the remainder of his visit coming to grips with the fact that his father, a seaman, has left him and his mother. A bit of a wimp at the start, he is toughened by his new best friend, who must face the fact that her father, a professional roller-skater, has rejected her as well.

Willard is kindly taken in by the Reeds, who have a few problems of their own. As Willard begins to build deeper relationships with Ben and Lilly individually, he notices they are curiously not at all sensitive to each other. In fact, they barely acknowledge one another. The truth is painfully revealed in the movie's most dramatic scene where a frustrated Ben confronts his alienated wife about the loss of their infant son three years ago. In a convincing and cathartic sequence, Lilly reveals her anger, guilt, and her consequential inability to feel anything for her husband anymore. Needless to say, Ben leaves.

The remaining third of the movie is spent bringing them back together through Willard. Things become predictable from herein, save for a scene where Ben saves Willard from falling off a five-story surveying tower. Things coast to an easy conclusion with Willard returning home a changed boy. During the return from the bus stop, the Reed family is emotionally reunited. It's a fitting conclusion to a movie that is quaint and easy to swallow. Those who enjoy seeing the rainbow after the storm will enjoy it.

Robertson's Storyville is a break from his past

BY DAVE GOLDSTEIN

Album Review

Four years ago Robbie Robertson released his self-titled solo album. It was his first pop recording since the dissolution of The Band, and marked the return of one of Rock's most influential musicians and songwriters. Although not a popular success, the album contained some great songs. One of which, "Fallen Angel," has just been recently covered by Rod Stewart.

Critics gave the album favorable reviews, but believed Robertson relied too heavily on his collaborations with Peter Gabriel, U2, and Bo Deans for it to be have been a resounding success. Some critics believed Robertson's effort showed an unwillingness to break with his past.

For those not familiar with The Band, Robertson combined with Rick Danko, Richard Manvel, Levon Helm, and Garth Hudson to produce some of the most original songs to come out of the late sixties and early seventies. Robertson was a major contributor lyrically and musically. His guitar style with the Band was so evocative and original that I know of no one else who sounds even remotely similar. No one could create resolve moods as he could.

© 1991Geffen Records

With songs like "The Weight," "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down," and "Arcadian Driftwood," Robertson evoked uncommon moods and feelings, far more complex than most rock lyrics. He used myths, characters, and religious imagery in his songs. Like any good artist, he made the listener imagine his fictional world. Influenced by Bob Dylan and the famous Spanish film Bruneel, Robertson looked for new ways to express himself through words. To see The Band in all of their glory you can rent The Last Waltz, a documentary of their last concert directed by Martin Scorcesse. To understand their impact, all one has to do is see the stars that came to out to celebrate their last concert. The list includes Van Morrison, Eric Clapton, Neil Young, and Bob Dylan.

While Robertson's first solo album can be seen as transitional, his second, Storyville, embodies a more solid achievement. In this album, he has written a song cycle about two poor lovers in New Orleans. He specifically picks the music of New Orleans not only to retrace his influences, but also to pay homage to its heritage.

No song on the album is complete without first hearing the others, just as one cannot understand Joyce's Araby without reading the whole of The Dubliners. Robertson writes of love from the perspective of one of the lovers, but the tone is more emblematic of the third person. Robertson does not go for the throat or for the cliche, but rather is sedated instead. The music is modal; less is more here.

As with The Band, Robertson uses religious imagery to emphasize the experiences of his characters. While none of his songs are as good as his best work with The Band, they seem to grow larger, distending with each listen. Of the ten songs, "Night Parade," with its subtle use of horns, "Go Back To Your Woods," with its funky guitar and soulful undertones, "Soap Box Preacher," with its pretty melody and wonderful lyrics, and "Shake This Town," with its "carpe diem" philosophy are my favorites.

The album is marked by fine instrumentation. Robertson once again draws upon other stars—Aaron Neville, Neil Young, and Ivan Neville sing backing vocals. However, their contributions are limited. Robertson's vocals have improved greatly from his previous solo record.

The critics have come out and announced Storyville as an improvement on his first solo album, but I question this. Storyville seems a bit too contrived, too well crafted for my taste. None of the instruments are allowed to play, to jam, to be let loose. Robertson seems to have lost the fire from his belly and replaced it with a slick reserve. The first album on the other hand, was looser, true, and it seemed to have more life. While the lyrics on Storyville are very good, they seem to lack the complexity of his work with The Band or his first solo album, nor do they use his skill for involving myths. Furthermore, if Robertson truly had in mind the music of New Orleans, it's hard to tell from his modal use of horns and other instruments. I hate to imply it, but Robertson seems to sample bits of New Orleans, rather than truly dive into it. Overall, anything by Robertson is of noteworthy quality by today's terms. This is no exception.

Blues Traveler will play at BU

Chan Kinchla, Bobby Sheehan, John Popper and Brendan Hill combine to form the band Blues Traveler which will perform Sunday night at 7:00 p.m. in the Davis Gymnasium. Tickets will be available at the door for $9.00 with BUID.

Appearing this Sunday at Bucknell University will be the up and coming band Blues Traveler. The show starts at 7:00 p.m. in Davis Gym. Tickets are $9 at the door with BU I.D., $12 without. The show is sponsored by the Bucknell Concert Committee and Delta Upsilon, with $2 from each ticket sold going to benefit Rain Forest Conservation.

Their performance is part of a nation-wide tour to promote their new album Travelers and Thieves, on A&M records. This effort comes hot on the heels of their 1990 debut, Blues Traveler, which sold over 100,000 copies. The success of their single "But Anyway" led to an appearance on "Late Night with David Letterman" as well as feature articles in "Rolling Stone" and "Spin."

Although they have been successful in the studio, the band is best noted for its live performances. They focus elements of rock, jazz, blues, and folk into a spirited show. Improvisation and impromptu jam sessions are common occurrences. Last year they played 230 shows, opening acts for such bands as The Allman Brothers, Santana, Jerry Garcia, the Neville Brothers, Little Feat, and Lynyrd Skynyrd.

The Brooklyn, New York-based band was founded in 1983 by lead singer John Popper and drummer Brendan Hill. As high school students in Princeton, New Jersey, they got their start performing at keg parties. With experience, they improved their act and upgraded to the club scene. Along the way they picked up bassist Bobby Sheenan and Chan Kinchla, rounding out the quartet as it exists now.

Although their average age is only 22, A&M Records claims they "produce an inspired and innovative sound that defies their youth." Come prepared to witness an upbeat show.

Cohen choreographs BU, F&M, Dickinson dance performance

New York-based Ze'eva Cohen and Dancers, with the Bucknell, Dickinson, and Franklin and Marshall Dance Companies, will tour the three universities November 15—17. The tour begins tonight at Dickinson College. The dancers then travel to Franklin and Marshall College for a performance tomorrow evening and conclude the tour with a Sunday matinee at Bucknell University. The Bucknell concert is November 17, begins at 3:00 p.m. and will be held at Coleman Hall in the University Theatre. The event, sponsored by the Central Pennsylvania Consortium, is free and open to the public.

Originally from Israel, Cohen studied at the Juilliard School in New York and in 1971 began her pioneering Solo Dance Repertory Program that has toured throughout the United States, Europe, and Israel. In 1983, she founded Ze'eva Cohen and Dancers. She has choreographed works for Boston Ballet, Munich Tanzprojekt, and Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble, among many others. Cohen has been Lecturer and Coordinator of Dance Studies at Princeton University since 1969.

Cohen set "Displaced," a political piece about the Middle East conflict, with eight of the Bucknell Dance Company members during her week long residence in October. She set two other works, "Flight" and "Walkman Variations," on the Dickinson and Franklin and Marshall dancers respectively. Cohen and three of her company dancers will also perform works from Cohen's repertoire in the concerts.

The Guess Who rocks... Northumberland

BY DOUG HONABACH AND BOB RITTER
Bucknellian Staff Writers

Twenty-six years ago five guys from Canada came to play their first show in the United States. After several albums and a few member changes, the Guess Who sounded as strong as ever Wednesday night when they played to a sold-out crowd of over 400 at Front Street Station.

Although the Guess Who remains popular today among college students, most of the crowd was old enough to remember the group's performance at Woodstock over two decades ago. The fans, greeted by a nightclub-type atmosphere for the special event performance, were mostly subdued, but were clearly having a good time.

The band kicked off their set with "Bus Rider," and rolled through several of their classic hits with energy and flair. They did a solid rendition of "No Sugar Tonight/New Mother Nature," as well as extended versions of "Undone" and "Hang on to Your Life." They ended with a powerful performance of "American Woman" which literally rocked the house.

The group also played two songs from their newest album, "Rock 'n' Classic" and "Razor's Edge." Both were strong and memorable, showing the group hasn't lost its creative edge. The band's new sound is not inconsistent with their traditional style, but does reflect some of the current pop and rock elements. Both songs will appear on their planned, but yet untitled album.

The energy of the band helped bring off the show despite a lack of forethought by the promoters. The tables were arranged in long rows perpendicular to the stage. This not only gave the room the look of a bingo hall, but was extremely cramped, making it difficult for both patrons and waitresses to move through the crowd. In addition, security for the show appeared to be non-existent despite the presence of alcohol, and only the conclusion of the show prevented a brawl in front of the stage.

Despite poor acoustics in the room, normally a banquet hall, the Guess Who still sounded clean and professional.

The same cannot be said of the opening band. When the tickets were printed the promoters forgot to include Stagefright, a local band. This is understandable, since Stagefright was totally forgettable. Although the songs the hard-rock band played were originals, all were standard fare, copying the usual forms and "borrowing" riffs from well-known groups.

Emmy award-winning actor visits BU

BY MARC HAIMES
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Emmy award-winning actor E.G. Marshall entered stage-right onto the Bucknell campus last Friday afternoon. A small group of professors and students joined the performer in Walls Lounge for an hour-long, informal chat about acting, drama, and life itself.

The veteran of over twenty Broadway plays, thirty motion pictures, and hundreds of television dramas spoke frankly and candidly about his career and the industry. He began by describing his experience playing Reverend John Hale in the premiere of Miller's The Crucible. He related the difficulties of the cast and crew spurned by a bickering production staff and conflicting interpretations of the text. He asserted that theater and film frequently brings about the clash of "difficult" personalities. "However," Marshall asserted smiling, "I am not difficult."

In response to questions by Brian Clark '92, who will be directing Bucknell's own production of The Crucible this spring, Marshall mentioned some of his views on the play. Marshall believes that Miller's popular script written during the communist scare of the 1950's should not solely be examined in the context of one single historical event, but viewed as a more general discussion of, "the outsider, the dissident."

The distinguished actor then talked briefly about his roles in other plays including the New York premier of Sam Beckett's Waiting For Godot and his work in the film The Caine Mutiny.

Marshall went on to offer some philosophies on drama and acting. Frequently, the artist jumped from his chair to enforce a point or perform humorous impressions, including a hilarious rendition of Clark Gable's "duck"-like speech patterns.

In response to questions about the unique relationships between actor and audience, Marshall related that an actor must "get control of the audience" in order to truly "move" on stage. He applied this theory to theatrical comedy. "The first thing to do is to get them to laugh. Then you know they'll listen."

In concluding his inspirational lecture, Marshall offered some views on the role of the actor in relation to society in general. "An actor sells his body and his voice. Does that make us a member of one of the oldest professions?"

E.G. Marshall's continued commitment to important social issues and the performing arts is obvious. The Bucknell community thanks him for his visit.

Equestrian team jumps Penn State with first-place finish at Seton Hill

BY JENNIFER WALSH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

After taking a close third place to Wilson and Penn State Universities at their last horse show, the Bucknell equestrian team members redoubled their efforts to come up with a sparkling performance and a first-place victory this past Sunday at Seton Hill.

Allowed only 20 riders per team, Bucknell virtually blew the competition away with an excellent final score of 46 points. Finishing second was last show's victor wilson, and in third place was perennial rival Penn State. In all, ten teams competed at this indoor event held in Greensburg, PA.

The limitation on the number of riders for each team turned out to be an advantage for Bucknell as so many individuals handed in shining performances. Most importantly, many of the team members selected as point riders for their class took first place in that class, thus adding greatly to Bucknell's overall score. The team was also helped by simple luck-of-the-draw, as the horses they selected at random proved to be good picks, and the overall quality of the horses was better than that of the Scranton show. Even the judging seemed fair, as Bucknell riders generally acknowledged the feeling that they had all placed according to the level of their performance.

Throughout the competition on the flat courses, the team fared extremely well as they exhibited their horses under saddle at the walk, the trot, and in certain classes the canter. Executing each gait on spontaneous command by the judges, Bucknell riders performed excellently on the flat, with Amy Clare '92 taking first place in the walk-trot class, Brenda Rose '94 taking first in the novice class, Sharon Nesbitt '94 with first in the intermediate class, and team captain Kelly Kordish '92 also finishing on top in the open class.

As if those spectacular results weren't enough, Bucknell also dominated in the fence classes, whereby riders must jump their horses over a course of fences, with the height of the fences ranging from two-and-a-half to three-and-a-half feet, depending on class level. During this time, riders are also subject to judging on the style of their performance. Bucknell's Jeanine Romanelli '93 took top honors in the novice over the fences, Becky Tyler '92 took first in the open over fences, and Nesbitt completed a sweep of the intermediate class as she again took first place, combining with her performance on the flat to tie her for high point rider of the day and lead to an exciting ride-off between the two tied for high point. Although Wilson's rider edged ahead of Nesbitt to win top honors, Bucknell still finished as high point team on the strength of Nesbitt's two rides.

With the equestrian team's two strong showings at both Scranton and Seton Hill, Bucknell is now ranked approximately second in its region of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association. This achievement is a far cry from where the team stood even as recently as a few years ago, where they were looked at as no more than a tiny club team from a small school who just did the best it could. Quite suddenly, it has become a real contender, and respect for Bucknell has grown rapidly. Team leaders have felt this new respect and are preparing for the challenge it presents.

"The team is really, really strong this year and we should do very well — we're looking for nationals," said team president Cathy Retallack '93. Her optimism was echoed by Jo Meszoly '94, another of Bucknell's leading riders.

"We're getting stronger and stronger at every show, and we're really coming together as a team even in an individual sport like this. If we do well at the next show, there's absolutely no reason to think that we can't go on to win regionals and maybe even make nationals as a team."

Bucknell's next horse show will be on Sunday, November 24, at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, and will mark their last competition of the semester.

Athlete of the Week

Kevin Schroth '92

For the second time this fall, water polo co-captain Kevin Schroth '92 has been named The Bucknellian's Athlete of the Week.

Schroth has been named first-team All-East after leading the Bison to a 16–15 record and a spot in the NCAA Top 20 for most of the year. He led the Bison in scoring this year with 71 goals and 44 assists, and his career totals of 187 goals, 125 assists and 312 points all rank him in the top ten on Bucknell's all-time lists.

Schroth is the first Bison to earn First-Team All-East recognition since 1988.

Ice hockey laces up for new season

BY JENNIFER WALSH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

As the temperature begins to drop and winter approaches, the members of the Bucknell ice hockey team are again lacing up their skates and preparing to take to the ice for the upcoming season.

After last year's disappointing slide in the month of February which kept the team from making the playoffs, this year's squad has come back with some changes in store and a new hope for a successful season in the Mason-Dixon League.

"With all the scheduling changes that we've made and the more practice time and games, we should win the league this year, no question about it," said John Werring '93, one of the team's three captains. In complete agreement was captain Pete Cook '92, who stated that "If we lose this year, it won't be due to a lack of talent, it'll be because of a lack of participation."

Though these may seem like rather lofty predictions on the surface, the Bison hockey team does actually have good reason to be optimistic when the situation is examined up close. For the first time the team will be competing before Christmas break, playing in five away games, with their first game being on November 24. Bucknell will also increase its chance of making the playoffs this season simply by playing more games and not having to worry about losing personnel due to fraternity rush come crunch time in February.

"Our schedule is a lot more balanced this year, and we're a more dedicated team," remarked Bob Hauser '92, also a captain. Most importantly, this will be the first time that the team has ever been able to start practice before January. The skating rink at Sunbury which serves as Bucknell's home ice is not open until then, thus making it difficult for the team to get in enough practice. The lack of practice time is a problem that has plagued the team consistently in the past as the other teams in the league are usually able to begin skating as early as October, due to the fact that most have access to their own rink. Were Bucknell to get a rink of its own, the hockey players say to look out.

"Our league is getting stronger every year, and so is our team," said Werring. "If we were to get our own rink, it would not only give Bucknell a chance to be really competitive in such an exciting sport as hockey, it would also be a great social alternative for the campus. Students could go to games and events like public skates could be held for entertainment."

Though the prospect of a rink on Bucknell's campus might seem far-fetched to some, it is important to note that not only would such a building be able to pay for itself, it would eventually raise a profit as well as promote athletics.

But before the Bison hockey team can request their own piece of ice to play on, they must first prove themselves worthy of it. After successfully shifting over to a tougher, more physically aggressive style of play last year, the team plans to continue that trend as well as increase its productivity in terms of goal-scoring.

"We've only had one practice so far, so it's hard to make any concrete statements," said Hauser, "but our goal production should definitely be up this year."

"Also, our first line is extremely talented," added Werring. "It's really now a matter of team spirit."

To be sure, several members of last year's team will be missed—particularly forward Carl Zuckerberg '91 and defensemen John Guelcher '91 and Todd Krutchkoff '91. However, with several good additions coming from the freshmen combined with the strength of upperclass players, the loss of last year's leaders could be overcome. Forwards Don Bateman '92, Ben Johnson '94, and Jamie Abrahamson '93 are expected to lead the way in scoring, while Cook remains the one stand-out at the blue line.

"Our defense is young this year," said Werring, "but not necessarily bad." However, to a team looking to get ahead with a great deal of aggressive play, that means taking penalties, and taking penalties means having to kill them off, a task which will no doubt put a strain on the defense. If Bucknell can't compensate for its inexperience at the blue line, playoff hopes could be in danger, let alone a league championship.

The Bison hockey team expects tough competition this year from two teams in particular, a scrappy group from Loyola, and an extremely talented squad from Johns Hopkins. Bucknell's first game of the season will take place on November 24 against Drexel University, and will be followed the next day by a match against Johns Hopkins.

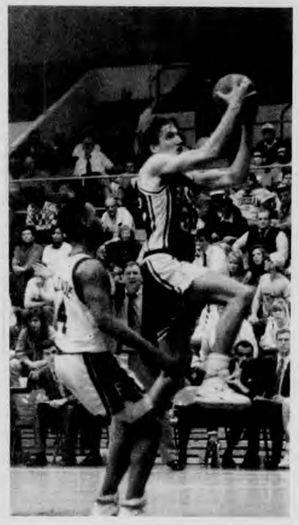
Breakin' Bison open exhibition season with win

Bright '93 and Courtney '92 combine to pace Bucknell to 107–89 victory against Lithuanians; team readies for UMBC and Georgia

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's men's basketball team opened its exhibition season last Friday night with a win against the Lithuanian Zhalgiris team. The Bison shot 55 percent from the floor on their way to a 107-89 win in front of 2,000 fans at Davis Gym. Bucknell also lived up to its Breakin' Bison nickname, gaining many easy buckets in transition. Bucknell was also effective from three point land, a tradition the fans have come to expect.

Leading the Bison stampede was forward Mike Bright '93, who collected 30 points. Bright added three fast break dunks to 8 of 11 shooting from three-point land for his points. "Coming in I just wanted to have a good game," remarked Bright, "but I felt good shooting the ball and really got into the flow."



Colin Bridgewater —The Bucknellian

Co-Captain Pat King '92 drives against Fordham in action last year. King scored 12 points against Lithuania.

Bright attributed some of his success to being in good condition from the early season practice. "I felt really strong and in good condition. I wasn't getting tired offensively or defensively and I really think it helped my shooting." Bright also collected twelve rebounds, three assists, and a steal to complete a great all-around evening.

Also igniting the Bison offense was co-captain Bill Courtney '92. Courtney, who played the point last season, was moved to shooting guard to fill the opening left by the graduation of Keith Fenton '91.

"It will take some getting used to, but that's why we play these games," said Courtney about his role. Courtney didn't seem to have any problems adjusting to his new role against the Lithuanians as he scored 20 points in 33 minutes. "We played pretty well as a team. We shot well for this early in the season. We do need some work defensively, but it's early and that will come," remarked Courtney on his team's performance.

Paul Olkowski '93 also played a strong game for the Bison. Without much depth at the center position, the Bison will need some consistent effort from the veteran pivot man. Olkowski was a solid 7 of 12 from the floor and perfect in two attempts at the free throw line for a total of 16 points. He also did a good job controlling the paint with 12 rebounds, including five on the offensive end. Helping Olkowski down low, co-captain Pat King '92 played his usual tough inside game. He collected 12 points and six boards.

The Bison also got a good game from guard Russell Peyton '93 who was more than ready to take the point over from Courtney. Though he scored only two points, Peyton did a nice job leading the offense, and was particularly effective running the fast break, collecting a team high six assists. Additionally, contributing for the Bison were reserves Raymond Brown '94 and Chris Simpson '94.

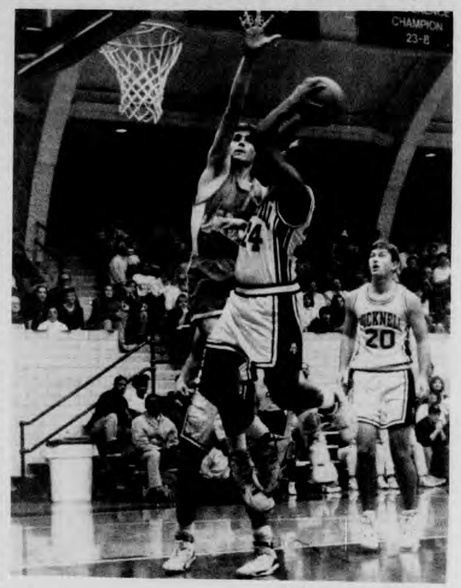
Though many members of the Bison put on great individual shows, none lost the understanding of the importance of the team. "As a team we had a good flow offensively," said Bright. "We still have a long way to go, but we're further than I thought we would be. I think we will be an exciting team. I think we have the ability to play a good up-tempo game and we have some good depth with Ray Brown, Chris Simpson and Matt Clark '93 coming off the bench."

Courtney was also excited about the team and his role as captain. "I'm going to try to pull everybody together and try to keep everybody up. We have a chance to do some real exciting things this season."

With four returning starters, the Bison are looking ahead to a promising season. Though the Zhalgiris team could not stay with the faster and deeper Bucknell team during the second half, they did provide a good early season test for the team.

The Bison, despite some sloppy moments, showed the potential for offensive explosiveness as they not only ran the break well, but also executed ball-control in the half court. The Bison will next take to the Davis Gym floor on November 26 against UMBC. They will then travel to Athens, Georgia to take on Litterial Green and the Bulldogs.

Breakin' Bison fans can look forward to a very exciting season in 1991–92 as the team will combine experienced leadership with explosive youth as they vie for the Patriot League Championship.



Ashley Chertkof—The Bucknellian

Co-captain Bill Courtney '92 drives for two of his 20 points on Friday. Courtney's leadership and skills should be the force behind Bucknell's expected success this season. Last season, the first-team All-League guard led the Patriot League in scoring with more than 20 points per game.

Volleyball closes out season with loss in championships

BY DON REINHART
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The women's volleyball team ended its fall season last weekend in the Patriot League Championships at West Point, New York. The Bison dropped their first-round match to top-seeded Colgate and then went on to lose to Lafayette. The team finished the season with a 9–23 record.

Despite some tough defensive efforts, Bucknell could not control the Patriot League-powerhouse Colgate. Kara Forosisky '92, Joanne Lewis '95, and Dee Scinta '92 each tallied nine digs while teammates Amy Miller '95, and Aubrey Schneggenburger '95 contributed eight and seven digs respectively. The Bison offense was a bit weak at the net, only totalling 28 kills. Kathleen Sullivan '92 led the team with eight kills, and Meg Kinney '94 added six. Although the team lost 15–5, 15–10, 15–8, head coach Cindy Opalski was pleased with her team's efforts.

"We're on the right road, we're not at our destination yet, but we're further down the road than before and that's exciting"
—Cindy Opalski
Volleyball head coach

In the following consolation match with Lafayette, Bucknell did not look as sharp. Sullivan turned in another outstanding performance at the net with ten kills, while Scinta held up the defensive end with a superb 14 digs.

According to Opalski, had the squad played Lafayette as tough as Colgate, the outcome of the match may have been different, but the Bison lost in three straight sets, 15–13, 15–8, 15–12.

Sullivan played well throughout the tournament, and earned a spot on the All-Tournament Team. In addition, Sullivan's performance throughout the season enabled her to be named to the second team All-Patriot League. She has been also been nominated by the CSIDA as a potential Academic All-American athlete. Sullivan led the Bison this year in hitting percentage, with a 0.296 and in total blocks, with an outstanding mark of 154. She was second in total kills with 230. Opalski added, "Kathleen was a great role model for the team this year."

In addition to Sullivan, the Bison will lose two other starters at graduation, Forosisky and Scinta. Forosisky leaves Bucknell volleyball as a four-year player and two-time captain. She led the team in total kills this year with 238. She also was ranked first in service aces with 32. Scinta was the offensive stronghold, leading the team in setting. She also was third in total digs, tallying 157. Opalski will miss the experience of the seniors next season. She commented, "The seniors have really helped leadership-wise and have really directed us in our attempt to improve the program."

Looking toward next season, there are several returning players for whom Opalski has high aspirations. Meg Kinney was this year's utility player. She was fourth on the team in kills, and second in blocked shots with 92. She filled a variety of roles on both offense and defense. About Kinney, Opalski commented, "Meg Kinney really helped some of the freshmen out, becoming more aggressive and better competitors."

Opalski has confidence in her future team of which she saw glimpses this year. Four new players, Schneggenburger, Miller, Lewis, and Laura Spinney '95, saw significant playing time and starting action. They contributed greatly to the team's effort this year. Miller led the team in digs, while Spinney was third in kills. Other rookies who Oplaski believes will develop their game during the off-season and become a factor in next year's competition are Heidi Dawson '95 and Amy Wiens '95. They will see playing time during the spring competition.

Opalski's thoughts of this season are positive, "My perception of the season is quite positive. I think in retrospect we had a very good season, and it depends on what good you use to measure as very good."

With improvement as one of her good goals, Opalski views this season as a success. When she came to the Bucknell program two years ago, the Bison had just come off a one win season, and this year their record was 9–23.

Opalski adds, "We're on the right road, we're not at our destination yet, but we're further down the road than before and that's exciting."

Tae Kwon Do is a hit with defensive Bucknellians

BY SCOTT ALBRIGHT
Bucknellian Staff Writer

When one thinks of the many athletic teams and clubs that are available to students here at Bucknell, it's safe to say that such varsity sports as football, basketball, and baseball usually come to mind first. This fact does not mean that these sports have any more importance than some of the club sports that exist here, it's just that the varsity sports have traditionally always received more publicity than some of the other athletic groups.

One of these athletic groups that often doesn't receive much attention but still attracts a sizable amount of participants is Bucknell's Tae Kwon Do class.

Now, many of the Saturday afternoon college football couch potatoes out there are probably wondering what exactly Tae Kwon Do is (and no, it is not the name of the newest downhill fraternity on Sixth Street). Being a college gridiron fan myself and owing the complete amount of knowledge I have of any martial arts to the Karate Kid movies I've seen, the same question came to my mind.

Tae Kwon Do is the martial art of Korea and is similar to karate (the martial art of Japan), the basic difference between the two being that the former places more emphasis on kicking while the latter utilizes more punching. The main use of each is self-defense.

The Tae Kwon Do group here at Bucknell is technically not a club, but is actually a non-credit class sponsored by the Physical Education department. The class meets at the American Tae Kwon Do Academy in Sunbury and is limited to Bucknell full-time students and faculty.

The class of approximately fifty students is instructed by former Bucknell graduate Daniel Rheam, who founded the group back in 1983. Rheam, a third-degree black belt, first became interested in the martial arts in 1974 when he began learning karate. He credits his time in law school at Wake Forest as being the place where he first became seriously involved in Tae Kwan Do, for even though he was a member of the karate team there, the team competed in the style of the Korean art.

While some of his students occasionally compete in regional tournaments on an individual level, Rheam explained that Tae Kwon Do is more than just a competitive sport. "It's an excellent activity for staying in good physical shape," said Rheam, "and it has an added benefit in teaching you self-defense." The instructor also remarked on how Tae Kwon Do can improve a student's mental concentration and perseverence, as well.

Kevin Shinal '93, who has been involved in Rheam's Tae Kwon Do program since he was a freshman and is now in the advanced class, explained that while the Korean art is primarily meant for self-defense, it can also be used in "getting out of holds and making the attacker realize that you didn't want to be in that hold in the first place."

Shinal described his teacher as "concerned" and "very enthusiastic as far as all belt levels go" but noted that "[Rheam] will lose his enthusiasm for you if you're advanced and you're not working hard." At the same time, Shinal recognized that "if you show him that you've set a goal and say you want your black belt or that you want to be the best at this that you can possibly be, he'll give 110% to make sure you get there."

Rheam stressed that the class is available to all age groups, beginners and advanced students alike. Typically, Rheam sees students who begin as freshman earn their black belts by the end of their junior year. The class will be admitting new students this February.

Henesey breaks 1952 Bucknell rushing record

BY MITCH BENTON
Bucknellian Staff Writer

First-year quarterback Travis Kopp '95 takes the snap from center Vince Mays '94 and turns to hand off to Brian Henesey '92 who crashes off left tackle for a three-yard gain.

A typically safe first down play with the typical results, a play that has been run innumerable times during the tailback's four seasons of Bison football—but this one was different.

Not only did it continue the touchdown drive that pulled Bucknell back into its final contest of the 1991 season, but it also marked the 2,623rd rushing yard from scrimmage for Henesey, now the most prolific rusher in school history.

His game statistics of 19 carries and 63 yards pushed his totals past Brad Myers' '52 old school record of 2,622 yards set from 1950–52. His season total of 686 yards led the Bison and marked the first time in Orange and Blue history that an individual accomplished this feat four times in a career.

Jury convicts offender in sexual crimes against Bucknell student

BY TARA GILLIGAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

A jury of ten women and two men found Donald Perkoski of Stillwater, PA guilty of charges of indecent exposure and open lewdness, both misdemeanors, following a full day of complex witness testimony this week.

In addition to the verdict delivered by the jury on Wednesday, Union County Court of Common Pleas Judge Wayne Bromfield found Perkoski guilty of two charges of harassment and one charge of disorderly conduct—both summary offenses. Bromfield dropped a second charge of disorderly conduct.

Perkoski plead innocent on Wednesday to the criminal charges filed against him for a Feb. 2 incident on Smoketown Road. The victim of the incident, a female Bucknell student, testified that she had been jogging along Smoketown Road when a light-colored station wagon pulled to the side of the road. She approached the car, believing the driver to be lost. Perkoski yelled a comment to her and masturbated in front of her, according to the victim's testimony.

To illustrate the way in which investigators tracked down Perkoski, Graham Showalter, the district attorney, called in two student witnesses from a similar incident which occurred on April 8 on River Road.

Public Defender Lonnie Hill objected to the line of witnesses connected to the April incident. Bromfield reminded the jury several times to separate the two incidents; Wednesday's trial was to determine only whether Perkoski was guilty of the February crimes.

The victim from the April incident, also a Bucknell female, testified that while jogging, she saw a man who was standing in the tall weeds next to the river, facing the road, and masturbating.

Though the victim said she ran away too quickly to retain an accurate description of the man, she was able to catch up to another runner, David Skena '92, who returned to the site, took note of the perpetrator and his vehicle, and reported the incident to the Department of Public Safety.

Sergeant James Middleton of Public Safety testified that he then drove to the scene with Skena, and observed the same man who was, by then, standing next to his car, a light-colored Plymouth station wagon. Middleton reported the license plate number to the Public Safety dispatcher.

Richard Miller, patrolman for the East Buffalo Police Department, conducted an investigation, connecting the February and April incidents. By tracing the license plate number, Miller's investigation led to Perkoski.

Within a month of the April 8 incident, Skena was able to positively identify Perkoski in a photo array at the East Buffalo Police Department. Middleton also identified Perkoski in the photo array.

When shown this same photo array, the victim of the Feb. 2 incident identified Perkoski as the offender.

One other piece of evidence offered by a witness for the prosecution came from Miller. Miller testified that following the preliminary hearing on Aug. 16, Perkoski asked him, "When I get sentenced over there [for the Feb. 2 incident], will I be allowed to go on work release?"

Two of the witnesses for the defense testified that during the alleged time of the

Chaplain search nearing completion

Jim Hammerlee, interim University Chaplain, said that his replacement may be chosen by the end of the semester.

BY THERESA KANE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Chaplain Search committee hopes to announce its choice for the University Chaplaincy by the end of this semester, according to Shannon Pickering '93.

Yesterday the fourth of the six final candidates for the position, Peter Heinrichs, came to Bucknell for a 30-minute service and a question-and-answer session.

Pickering stated that the final two candidates, Brent Waters and Alison Boden, will conduct services this Sunday, and Sunday, Dec. 8, respectively. The other three candidates, Anne Ferrugio, Peter Carman, and Marie Lindhorst, have already been to Bucknell for their final review.

The new University Chaplain would begin services July 1, 1992, when the term of Jim Hammerlee, interim University Chaplain, ends. Hammerlee assumed the position temporarily, following the resignation of James Gardner, shortly before the fall semester of 1990.

In response to concerns that certain Bucknell graduates who applied for the position are not among the final six, Hammerlee stressed that the committee has not made its decisions lightly, but "with great effort."

The committee has reviewed over one hundred applications including four from Bucknell alumni and all have received equal consideration, said Hammerlee.

The Chaplain Search committee consists of Hammerlee, Natalie Rooke—wife of Trustee Robert Rooke, William Payn—chapel director of music, Mary Evelyn Tucker and William Becker—professors of religion, and four students, Mike Baittinger '93, Wendy Kreitler '93, Chris Simpson '94, and Pickering. Richard Smith, professor of English, was appointed to the committee but has been unable to serve due to health problems.

Also involved in the search are approximately 30 students who responded to an open invitation to participate, and 15 faculty and staff, including a breakfast discussion group of seven.

To be appointed Chaplain, according to the University's job description, a candidate "must be ordained within a Protestant Denomination." Hammerlee stated that this is consistent with "the tradition of the University and the establishment of Rooke Chapel."

Hammerlee stressed that the Chaplain's role is to be non-sectarian and ecumenical in outlook and approach to the campus.

Two of the stated roles of the Chaplain are "to coordinate the on-campus efforts of advisors to religious groups" and to "work actively to enhance understanding between members of different faiths," said Hammerlee.

Blues Traveler performs for a sparse audience

BY K. LARS BRUNS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The BSG Concert Committee and Delta Upsilon fraternity both agreed that last Sunday's Blues Traveler concert "went pretty smoothly," according to Concert Committee co-chair Derek Shields '92. Although the turnout was less than anticipated, DU President Mike Powers said that the concert was a "good learning experience for DU."

Originally, the Concert Committee first expressed interest in Blues Traveler last year after student interest in the group seemed to be high. Unfortunately, Little Feat had just played at Bucknell and "the money just wasn't there," said Shields.

This fall, DU wanted to try again to bring the band to Davis Gym, but they were unsure of how to go about doing it. "DU wanted the band and after we made contact with Blues Traveler management, we went to the Concert Committee to help us out," said Powers.

"The Concert Committee was granted $7,500 from appropriations and DU put in $10,500. Any more expenses over that sum were agreed to be picked up by DU," said Shields. "Then the ticket revenue would go to DU first and the Concert Committee would absorb any losses."

"Generally, we split the cost with the Concert Committee. Overall, we didn't have to put that much out. We might be able to break close to even," Powers said. "We had no plans for making a profit, but having the concert on a Sunday night didn't help."

"In the past, big concerts like Blues Traveler have lost a lot more than $7,500 and if DU can break even that would be great," Shields said.

Unfortunately, Davis Gym was not filled and attendance was disappointing. "We thought that there would be more of a turnout," said

SAMS plans second 'Dance for a Chance'

BY LAURA GRISIN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Over thirty campus organizations will be coming together for the second annual Students Against Multiple Sclerosis (SAMS) "Dance For a Chance" twenty-four hour dance marathon from 8 p.m. Dec. 6 until 8 p.m. Dec. 7 in the Bison.

Last year, "Dance For a Chance" raised over $5700 for the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, an agency in support of scientific research aimed at finding a cure for this chronic disease of the central nervous system. SAMS hopes to donate $10,000 this year, according to Maria Glod '93 and Jen Hunt '93, co-chairs of the dance marathon.

In addition to raising money, SAMS wants to increase awareness and understanding of multiple sclerosis. "We are also looking to promote campus unity by bringing together students, faculty, administration and staff for a common positive purpose," says Glod.

A highlight of the weekend will be the lip sync contest from 10 p.m. to 11 p.m. on December 6. An MTV talent scout will be on hand, searching for acts to become part of a new show, Lip Service. The same lip sync teams will also take part in a SAMS-sponsored contest, the winner of which will be videotaped and viewed at the regional MTV contest. The regional MTV winner will win a trip to Florida for spring break. Sign-ups for the contest will take place in the Langone Center Mall after Thanksgiving Break.

IFC passes BYOB enforcement policy

BY MARK ABRAHAMSEN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Interfraternity Council (IFC) unanimously passed an amendment to its existing BYOB policy which establishes guidelines for its enforcement.

Denis Maguire '93, president of IFC, said, "This constitutes the first step allowing fraternities the opportunity to govern themselves."

The amendment, to be implemented in the spring semester, mandates that each fraternity is required to assign one or two members to become "Greek Monitors." These individuals, along with the IFC executive board, will comprise the "Greek Monitoring Team."

The responsibilities of the monitoring team will include a visit to each house every Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday evenings. Rounds will be conducted by two monitors and one individual from the executive board.

Fraternities will be required to allow the monitoring team free access to all common areas of the house. Upon completion, each member will submit a report of their findings to the IFC executive board. If a violation is suspected, the issue will be forwarded to the Peer Review Board for adjudication. All of these actions will be in alignment with the current IFC risk management policy.

Maguire mentioned that President Gary Sojka and Acting Vice President for Student Services Barbara Shailor have been "enthusiastic" about the IFC's decision to develop a self-governance structure, and they encourage its pro-active work.

The policy is designed to lessen the current involvement of Public Safety's monitoring of houses for their adherence to the existing risk management policy.

Maguire concluded, "The monitoring team will act as a catalyst for setting a unilateral acceptance of the BYOB policy between all of the fraternities."

Feb. 2 incident, Perkoski was eating lunch with them. The first, Kathleen Deluco of Bloomsburg, PA, said that at noon on Feb.2 Perkoski was at her house eating lunch, as he was wont to do. Her mother, who worked with Perkoski, provided the same testimony. "He [Perkoski] was a creature of habit," she said. She said she recalled sitting in the kitchen, discussing Groundhog's day.

Perkoski, notably distressed at the announcement of the verdict, will receive his sentence in December.

CORRECTIONS

In last week's front page story, regarding the appointment of Peter Morris-Keitel, professor of modern languages, to the Board of Academic Review, several lines of the article were not printed due to a production error. The story should have concluded as follows:

When asked about his role as a member of the board, Morris-Keitel explained that "having been a student in three different countries, this position is of particular interest to me in understanding the problems of students."

Although a recent addition to the faculty, Morris-Keitel has had six years of teaching experience, and is committed to the interests of Bucknell students.

The Tae Kwon Do article in last week's sports section incorrectly stated that classes are held in Sunbury. Classes are held at Bucknell with optional sessions in Sunbury.

Joyce Dollinger '94, co-chair of the Concert Committee.

"It would have been nice to see more people take advantage of this opportunity. We did advertise at Susquehanna and Bloomsburg, but we didn't get a good response from there at all. We should have gone to Penn State, then we would have easily filled Davis Gym," Powers said.

Blues Traveler was the first concert co-sponsored by the Concert Committee and a fraternity. "People seem to have mixed feelings," said Powers. "I'd like to do this once a year in the fall semester, possibly with another fraternity, and maybe get a tradition going."

So far this semester, the Concert Committee has sponsored Blues Traveler as well as Pandora's Box and the concert on the Academic Quad. This is the first year that the Concert Committee was not allotted a specific amount of money in the BSG budget.

"We look at the recent trend and try to keep them in mind," said BSG Treasurer Vanessa Mayo '92. "This semester they have asked for $7,500 for Blues Traveler and $5,000 for others."

This spring the Concert Committee plans to hold this year's biggest concert on Earth Day. "Last year we took a survey and the response for Indigo Girls blew everyone away. "We were recently in touch with Indigo Girls management and unfortunately it appears that they will be cutting a new album this spring and may only begin to go on tour early this summer," said Shields.

Each organization entered in the marathon will be sponsoring a theme hour such as Jackson Hour, Seventies' Hour, and Beach Hour. SAMS invites all faculty, staff, and administration and their families to Faculty, Staff, and Administration Hour on Dec. 7 from 1 to 2 p.m. Cap and Dagger will be dressed as clowns and will give free balloons and T-shirts to the kids.

Door prize tickets will be sold for $1.00 to anyone present. Prizes to be given away during each hour will include skis, T-shirts, a car vacuum cleaner, and gift certificates from The Gap and the Lewisburg Hotel.

WVBU and Technical Services will be providing the dance music, and WVBU will also be broadcasting live from the Bison during the twenty-four hours.

Keim returns to address criticism of Greek system

Brian Sipes—The Bucknellian

BY JEN REEB
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Confident that the Bucknell Greek system has much potential, Will Keim speaks annually at the Weis Center for free—a service he only offers to Bucknell. A powerful pro-Greek speaker sponsored by the Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils, Keim delivered another thought-provoking speech last Thursday.

Keim first gave his speech, "Demythologizing the Greek system" at Bucknell five years ago, because he felt fraternities and sororities at Bucknell were receiving unfair treatment by the faculty and administration. Although there was much room for improvement on the part of the Greeks, Keim saw the potential for these organizations to enact a lot of positive change. According to Keim, a Greek system is a worthwhile institution because of the opportunities it can provide for college students. Greek organizations, said Keim, claim to have goals that would be lofty ideals for a society at large.

Keim questions this assertion, though: since Greeks claim to be oriented toward these lofty goals, why do their organizations receive so much criticism and have such problems with sexism, drunkenness, hazing, elitism, and other related problems? In order for Greek organizations to claim to be scholarship, philanthropy and leadership oriented, their members need to believe in these qualities, not just give lip service to them.

Keim outlined seven main points which he feels a Greek system needs to strive toward in order to be strong. He emphasized making the most of scholarship, philanthropy and leadership opportunites, as well as the importance of being drug and hazing free, and practicing safe sex and responsible drinking.

He contrasted these seven positive aspects of a strong Greek system with the negative qualities of a weak Greek system like sexism, racism,

A blessing for the slothful and the starving... Bison delivery begins

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Innovative and adventuresome Hank Ross, director of Dining Services, announced several new eating options for the upcoming semester. In the spring semester the Bison will sport an outdoor grill, the Refectory will offer special Sunday brunches and the Academic Quad will feature a Haagen-Daaz ice cream vendor cart.

But here and now, the truly lazy can take advantage of the Bison's new delivery service; pizzas, strombolis, chicken wings and two-liter sodas can be ordered on Fridays and Saturdays from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m. And in the interest of the truly cash-poor, only declining balance will be accepted.

The idea of Bison delivery service has long been Ross's pet project. Why? "I don't really know," said Ross, "But I thought it sounded something we should be able to do, and have a lot of fun doing." Bison Supervisor Mary Byerly commented, "Over the summer we really perfected our pizzas and they're much more popular, so we thought this would be a good time to start delivering."

"We're not competing with the pizza-places in town because we won't accept cash," said Byerly. "We look at it as an extension of the meal plan."

In its first two weeks, the delivery service has not been widely used, but advertising has been minimal. Ross plans a publicity blitz for after Thanksgiving: "It's all about marketing."

A student can order from the Bison by calling 524-1245 and providing a Social Security number to access his or her declining balance. Two Bison employees then drive to the residence hall in a University van and the student signs a receipt for his or her purchase.

Delivery person Pat Roberts '94 commented, "It hasn't been very busy yet, but I want everyone to know that we accept tips."

After this initial test period, service may be offered on weeknights and the menu may be expanded to include other items.

Sean McCarthy '93 and Bison deliveryperson Cathy Klinger demonstrate the new and improved Bison pizza which will can be ordered for delivery (on campus only) by calling 524-1245 between 8 p.m. and 12 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays.

980 participate in BSG executive elections

Thomas pledges increased student input

BY JASON CORT

"I want to bring BSG back to the students," said Bucknell Student Government President-elect Micheal Thomas '94 following Monday's elections. "Right now BSG is a legislative entity apart from its constituents. It comes across as BSG representing BSG, not BSG representing the student body."

Thomas defeated Rick Scott '93 and Shane Lympus '93 in the election of executive officers, which sawi ess than thirty percent of the student body turn out to participate.

Thomas will preside over the congress as well as serving on various committees and representing Bucknell whenever necessary.

Sean McCarthy '94 defeated Charron Anderson '93 in the race for first vice president.

As the first vice-president, McCarthy's main jobs are to run all elections associated with the BSG and to sit on various committees with the president.

When asked about his main goal, McCarthy said, "As an executive officer, I want to change the representatives' role. I want to increase representative attendance at other campus meetings so that the reps can bring more ideas back to the BSG."

Scott Perricelli '94 defeated fellow classmate Jason Leitner for the position of second vice-president. As second vice-president, Perricelli will basically act as a secretary with his main task being to take minutes at the BSG meetings.

Perricelli says he is "looking forward to working with the other three guys on the executive committee."

In the treasurer's race Byron Frey '94 defeated classmates Elva Josephson and David Barry. Frey's main duty will be to preside over the appropriations committee.

He says he will strive to "make funding more equitable and more objective than it is at the present [time]." He stressed that education of other groups about the appropriations guidelines is a key to making it easier to access BSG funds.

Panhel elects president

BYOB passed, other officers to be named

BY ELIZABETH DANNEBERG

Bucknellian Staff Writer

Allie Zagroda—The Bucknellian

Newly elected Panhel president Eva Szreniawski '93 hopes for more programming with IFC.

Eva Szreniawski '93 was elected to the position of Panhellenic Council President this week, in a run-off against Randy Sargent '93, who is now eligible to be chosen for the vice-presidency of Panhellenic Council executive board.

The remaining positions of the board; Public Relations, Rush Chairman, Treasurer, and Secretary, are in the process of being filled for the coming term by the current Panhel executive board.

The two candidates made rounds to speak to all of the sororities early this week, and votes were tallied on Tuesday evening. In her speech, Szreniawski emphasized her knowledge of the Panhel presidential position, noting that, in her current position of vice president, she worked closely with current President Kristine Elliott '92.

Szreniawski intends to concentrate on several things in the near future. First, she would like to develop joint programming with IFC and work with the new universal BYOB policy for sororities as well as fraternities.

The BYOB policy was passed by Panhellenic Council on Monday, November 11, and dictates that organized, registered sorority social events on or off campus must by BYOB.

Panhel chose to cooperate with IFC on this FIPG (Fraternity Insurance Planning Group) plan so as to present a unified Greek front and to further integrate Panhel with IFC.

Szreniawski would also like to initiate programs and orientation for those sophomores considering rush for first semester next year, so that, "they know what to expect."

Aside from her position as vice-president of Panhel this past year, Szreniawski was also the Panhellenic delegate for her sorority, Phi Mu, assistant pledge mom, and vice-president of her pledge class.

New IFC to tackle BYOB enforcement

BY MICKI HAMILTON

Bucknellian Staff Writer

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

Peter Brady '93 was elected IFC president this past Tuesday.

On Tuesday evening, the Interfraternity Council held elections to choose new leaders to fill the positions of President, Vice President of External Affairs, Vice President of Internal Affairs, Rush Chairman, Philanthropy Chair, Scholarship Chair, Orientation/Greek Week Chair, Greek Editor, Secretary, and Treasurer.

Newly-elected President Pete Brady '93, has been involved in the IFC for the past year. He intends to establish an enforceable BYOB policy. Brady said, "We are past the stage where we debate whether or not BYOB is needed. It is a necessity." Brady wants to make sure that everyone at Bucknell has a good time with the minimum amount of risk involved to the fraternities.

Another issue Brady will contend with is further developing the rush program in accordance with the TIP proposals. Brady wants to minimize any negative aspects that may occur.

A third aspect that Brady mentioned was the need to emphasize scholarship, philanthropy, and leadership among the fraternities. Brady said that interfraternity relations has to be a goal of everyone and that it will happen naturally through scholarship, philanthropy, and leadership.

As vice president for external affairs, Mike Malusis '93 will be in charge of public relations for the IFC as well as assisting the President. Because people have come to the IFC for public relations in the past, Malusis said that his main goal is to take a more active approach and to look for those groups that need help.

Concerning the BYOB policy, Malusis thinks enforcement is the key to the policy's success. He said that if this policy is not handled properly, the next step could be a dry campus. Malusis said, "I think that we have to accept it [BYOB] and make the best of it."

Curt Booth '93 will take over as the vice president of internal affairs. He will oversee the IFC Peer Review Board as well as the Activities Review Board. Part of his job requires regulating Greek activities recognized by the IFC like Sig Derby and Luigi Fiji.

Booth will be involved with the IFC enforcement policy of BYOB, which includes establishing a Greek monitoring team to visit fraternity houses unannounced and enforce the policy.

Booth said, "I think that this new policy is a great opportunity for the Greeks to regulate themselves and take some of the burden off of the University while legitimizing the IFC as a governing body." He said that once the policy gets off the ground, it is important for Greeks to move on to other issues, such as philanthropy, leadership, and service.

Newly elected Rush Chairman Dave Fuetterer '94 will execute his job in accordance the TIP proposals concerning rush. He explained that this proposal tries to maximize the number of people who want to be Greek. Ideally, the system is supposed to keep all of the rushees in the process until preferentials and insure a bid for all students who desire one. Fuetterer said that he is responsible registration of rushees, setting the rush schedule and creating the rush booklet.

Scott Alfieri '94 is the new scholarship chairman. He is responsible for awarding the four IFC scholarships to the most improved brother, to the two brothers with the highest G.P.A.'s and to the outstanding pledge. Alfieri has also proposed inviting a professor to talk about any topic with the brothers in a fraternity. Also, the IFC will assist the OSA with running the College Bowl, an intercampus tournament in which teams will compete against each other to answer questions. Alfieri said that by next year the IFC will sponsor its own tournament but it will not be on an intercampus scale.

Andrew Cohen '93 was chosen as Greek editor. Other newly elected officers were Brian Bontempo '95 as the philanthropy chairman, Steve Darby '94 as the orientation/Greek Week chairman, Brian Regan '93 as treasurer and Dave Carleton '94 as secretary.

drunkenness, and elitism.

According to Kristine Elliott '92, president of the Panhellenic Council, Keim is an influential speaker because "he addresses issues from student perspectives, yet in an adult manner. He doesn't condescend, but points out students' irrational thought processes that occur due to peer pressure to conform to norms of irresponsible drinking and sex."

Keim's sense of humor and ability to relate to his audience make him an interesting and dynamic speaker. Unlike many who speak to Bucknell students, he is able to catch and hold their attention with his relevant and humorous examples.

Keim's goal is that in the future, college students will join a fraternity or sorority for the leadership and scholastic opportunites it provides, not just for social reasons.

F&M student paper folds

Those working for The Blue and White, Franklin and Marshall's new student paper, made the decision to fold the publication after realizing that it was taking too much time.

The Blue and White began in August 1989 as an alternative to the regular school paper, The College Reporter, which dates back almost a century. The paper appeared three times a week, and students working on it said they tried to make it a quality newspaper of which F&M students could feel proud.

The Blue and White's last issue appeared on November 1, amidst much regret. Said Carolyn Coffee, managing editor and co-news editor, "We set our standards very, very high in the beginning and we met them, I think. To continue meeting them just taxed us too much." Those on the staff of The College Reporter declared they, too, would miss the friendly competition of the newspaper.

Intruder frightens G-burg campus

Gettysburg College recently had a scare involving an unknown male assailant.

On November 8, a female student was studying in her room, located on the third story of Carlisle House, when she realized that a man was outside of her window, attempting to break in. The student screamed, and a male on her floor tried to apprehend the intruder, but failed when the unidentified man escaped by means of the roof and a fire escape.

The female student was then told by both Security and an administrator of the college that it was probably "a peeping Tom," and was advised to seek counseling services for the trauma caused by the event.

On November 11, another female student from the third floor of the student housing reported that she, too, had seen the man, and that he had followed her on the third floor of the college library. She immediately got in touch with Security, but they were unable to apprehend the suspect.

Currently, there are no new leads to this male, but the two incidents have incited students to hold a "Come Take Back the Night" march. They hope to bring awareness to the campus community with their march.

Students sue to release crime info

On October 10, two journalists from the University of Tennessee and one from Colorado State University joined the Student Press Law Center in filing a suit in Washington, D.C., claiming that their First and Fifth Amendment rights have been violated by the federal Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act, or FERPA.

This act prohibits the release of any student records, including police records from which students might be identified. Schools violating the FERPA may lose their federal funding.

Until the law is changed, the Student Press Law Center wants to stop the government from penalizing those schools violating FERPA. Said Mike Hiestand, an attorney the the Student Press Law Center, "Our whole point is to get an injunction against the Department of Education" so they cannot threaten to withhold funds from schools that disclose crime records to the press.

There is great determination on the parts of those filing the claim that it will succeed and limit the regulation of campus crime reporting by the Department of Education.

A grave-side chat with a Blues Traveler

At only 22 years of age, John Popper, the lead singer for Blues Traveler is enjoying success usually reserved for more experienced acts

BY MATTHEW P. WOOD

Bucknellian Staff Writer

Before Davis Gymnasium was transformed into a concert hall for the aspiring New York band Blues Traveler last Sunday evening, I had the opportunity to speak with the group's energetic lead singer and harmonica player, John Popper.

When I first happened upon this ominous figure backstage, dressed in a black trench coat and a wide rimmed hat, he was taking aim with a knife at a friend with an olive in his mouth. I wasn't at all surprised when he later told me he had received an offer to play the lead in a movie about a sumo wrestler. He suggested that Bucknell was a "beautiful place" and that we ought to "take a walk through the graveyard" to conduct the interview.

The location of our walk turned out to be beneficial. As he told me later, "You're pretty psyched cause you caught me in a weird mood. I haven't used much of my rhetoric on you because we walked through a cemetery." There wasn't anything frightening about Popper. He was an eccentric, but a focused individual with a lot to say about his life, Blues Traveler's recent success, and the future of the young group.

What was apparent was Popper's road fatigue. "We've legitimately been to 38 of the 50 states, Ontario, and British Columbia since September." This breakneck pace has included five to six shows a week and is a part of a tour meant to promote their latest studio recording Thieves and Travelers, the follow-up to their self-titled debut. They will continue touring colleges and theaters at this pace, moving southward, until they return to New York at Christmas time. On New Year's Eve at the Paramount in Madison Square Garden, they will cap off a blowout with their longtime friends The Spin Doctors.

Craig Bitter — The Bucknellian

Blues Traveler's John Popper in their concert last Sunday night.

The band has always been a glutton for punishment. According to Popper, it's been playing every chance it's had since its conception in Princeton, New Jersey as a high school outfit in 1983. The original band featured Popper and drummer Brendan Hill. They hooked up with guitarist Chan Kinchla three years later and bassist Bob Sheenan in 1987. Most of their early performances were at underage keg parties.

Popper graduated in 1987 and went on to New York City where he enrolled in The New School of Jazz and Contemporary Music. He made great progress the first year under the guidance of saxophonist Arnie Lawrence of Tonight Show-fame The next year his friends followed him to the school. They struck out on their own two years later. As Popper puts it, "We had too many gigs to go to school and learn how to get gigs."

> "What we're about is playing live. When you're live, you can make a mistake and the moment goes by. The crowd is still there. They get your energy. They don't scrutinize. Live, you improvise."
> — John Popper
> Lead Singer for Blues Traveler

The other big factor in the band's development was its experience playing at a "trashy" bar called Nightingales. "They let you do what you wanted to and that's where we learned how to play." "Eventually you start to learn how long you should do something before it gets boring and then you learn to work the crowd." "It was a turning point, that and the fact we were weird to begin with." He added, "It doesn't sound like much of a story does it?"

It's quite a story, actually. In 1990, the group impressed its label A&M records enough to get what could amount to a seven-record deal. They've had few restrictions regarding their playing and recording. What has most impressed A&M and excited fans thus far has been the band's style. When asked what kind of music they play, Popper has a one word answer. "Ours."

"That we've been hard to pigeon hole is a fact. It's been good because they don't really know what to do with us. It's also been bad because we have trouble fitting on specific radio formats. People who listen to us are into the classic rock thing, but we're not classic rock. We're here now." At best, their sound has been classified as a blend of folk, jazz, and blues.

"What I learned from the new school is that it's got to be honest. Play your thing. Do your impression of everybody and it will always sound good and original. Sometimes when I write a song, I want to be like John Lennon, and I want to sound like Stevie Wonder, and then I want to compose it like Mozart. So I do my impression of Mozart, with the attitude of John Lennon, trying to sing like Stevie Wonder. I don't sound like any of those guys."

Although Popper has enjoyed the results of the band's two studio recordings and looks forward to beginning a third next September, he insists "what we're about is playing live. When your live, you can make a mistake and the moment goes by. The crowd is still there. They get your energy. They don't scrutinize. Live, you improvise."

Among the various places the band has been, the West holds some of Popper's favorite memories. "Colorado gave us great reception. New Mexico and San Francisco were great places to play, also." "I've had a lot of great moments and it's hard to give one place. When Carlos Santana sat in and played 'Mountain Cry' with us at Golden Gate Park about a month ago it was a real high point. Madison Square Garden was also somewhat of a personal victory for us when we opened for Jerry Garcia a few nights ago."

As for the future, it's set for the next few years, but Popper won't dare to say what's in store for himself and the rest of the Travelers. "We're having fun now, but I have no idea where this is gonna go. There's too much in this world to see, and this is a good way to see it. The cool thing about life is that you get to change your mind."

When asked what he thought the best thing that could happen to the band was, Popper gave a healthy capitalist response, "We could get lots of money. Tons of money. I don't even care if it's an inheritance." He added that he hoped the band would stay "sane, healthy, and unaffected with the assumption we'll get really rich."

The band's bus driver, an 18-year journeyman of the business, had this to say about the band he pilots, "I've travelled with a lot of big acts in my time. So far, the ego has not got to them, yet. And I'm keeping them in line." Popper yells out to his road manager, "Hey, John, Roger says in 18 years on the road we're the best band he's ever had!"

Opera Co. opens season

BY KATIE DEBONVILLE

Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell Opera Company opened its season on Saturday, November 16 at Bucknell Hall. Under the direction of Dr. Catherine Payn, the fifteen-member company performed pieces from five operas before a capacity crowd.

The first act featured Wendy Kreitler '93 and John Caponegro '94. The two performed excerpts from Handel's Giulio Cesare. As the broken-hearted Cornelia, Kreitler sang soulfully and with tears in her eyes. Caponegro played the revenge-seeking Sesto. Both Kreitler and Caponegro sang in Italian, and seemed to have a strong command of the language.

Jeanne Mellish '95 and Brian Wilhour performed a duet from Vaughn Williams' Sir John in Love, an opera that is based on Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor. Their act was followed by the trio of Jessica Eustis '93, Melissa Funk '94, and Rebecca Goldstein '93.

John Caponegro returned to the stage as Don Jose opposite Jennifer Walsh '94 as Carmen, and the two performed the Seguidilla from Bizet's famous opera. Walsh conveyed the attitude of Carmen extremely well, attempting to use her femininity to convince Don Jose not to imprison her. This duet was sung in French.

Excerpts from Marc Blitzstein's opera Regina followed. This opera, set in turn-of-the-century Alabama, is based on Lillian Hellman's The Little Foxes. Lori Schoeneman '94 appeared haughty and demanding as the title character. Shelley Gensel '95 played Alexandra, a young girl who is filled with wonder about her future. This wonderment was evident in Gensel's face as she sang. Rebecca Lawson '95, as Addie the maid, performed a jazzy number that showcased her deep voice. Peter Hill '92 as Horace and Amy Anderson '92 as Birdie joined Gensel and Lawson for a quartet. The act was completed with an aria sung by Anderson. This nostalgic number was executed beautifully by Anderson, who has a strong soprano voice.

The evening at the opera concluded with a humorous rendition of Gian-Carlo Menotti's The Telephone. Ben, played by Eric Hodgson is waiting for Lucy, Karen Losch '93, to get off the phone so that he can propose to her before he leaves to catch a train. Hodgson exhibited just the right amount of humor, impatience, and finally, annoyance at Lucy's incessant talking. Losch, as Lucy, appeared oblivious to Ben's actions. The act was well-performed and had the audience laughing for its duration.

Bernard Kunkel accompanied the members of the opera company on the piano.

De Niro masterful in thriller Cape Fear

— Movie Review —

Cape Fear, rated R. Robert De Niro and Nick Nolte star in this Martin Scorsese film about an ex-con who takes revenge on a family who failed to provide evidence that would have cleared him of a rape charge fourteen years earlier.

BY PAT MCCORMICK

Bucknellian Staff Writer

Hey! It's a De Niro picture, so it has to be good, right? Well, not always. (Did anyone see We're No Angels?) But in Cape Fear, Robert De Niro tacks another masterful performance to his already long list of films, with the help of Martin Scorsese's direction (Goodfellas, The Last Temptation of Christ, & Raging Bull) and surprisingly strong performances from Nick Nolte (48 HRS, Three Fugitives) and newcomer, Juliette Lewis.

De Niro is immaculate as Max Cady, the ex-con who tantalizes attorney Sam Bowden, played by Nolte, and his family for failing to provide evidence that could have let Cady off on a rape charge. Responding to his conscience, Bowden buries the evidence, sending Cady to prison for fourteen years.

Fear opens when Cady has just finished his sentence and starts initiating his seduction of the Bowden family. In the film's most alluring and disturbing scene, Cady entices young Danielle Bowden, Lewis, by appealing to her new-found prowess and adolescent rebellion. Ironically, it is Juliette Lewis who pockets this scene with some of the best acting on film this year.

Jessica Lange (Sweet Dreams, Music Box), playing Leigh Bowden, is bigger than her role. At times, it seems her character's importance was magnified unnecessarily, but she blends quite well in a cast of fine performances. Robert Mitchum, who played De Niro's part in the original 1962 version of Cape Fear has a small role and Gregory Peck as Cady's lawyer, also in the original, spots the film with a "cameo" appearance, a seemingly trendy Hollywood gimmick. Today, audiences get to see big stars everywhere in short, unappealing roles.

Nolte gives his best performance to date proving he can act as well as "star" in movies. But, it's Scorsese who delivers this film by scaring us without the conventional stints used to indicate when the film is trying to be suspenseful. His talent as a director is showcased in the final twenty minutes, and without having first seen the picture, nothing written can complement this creation of confusion and torment evident by the film's conclusion.

Religion a part of half of students' lives

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell was founded as a Baptist school back in 1846. Today its students bring with them various religious backgrounds, or none at all. This year's entering students were made up of 1508 Protestants, 1204 Catholics, 104 Jews, 339 aetheists, and 104 of "other" religions.

When The Bucknellian polled students, 88% of the respondents claimed to have been brought up with a religion. The question is: Do these students continue to practice their religions?

Fifty-seven percent of the students said that they attended some kind of religious service regularly (twice a month) before coming to college, Fifty percent still attend a religious service now that they are at Bucknell. Fifty-two percent resume their worshipping once they return home for the summer or breaks. Many indicated that their parents have a lot to do with their religious patterns. One sophomore said that it felt strange to go to church without her family, another junior said that without his mom to get him out of bed on Sunday mornings, he did not make it to church. A freshman did not like the all-denominational service at Rooke Chapel and could not find a friend to walk into town with her to attend the local Prebytarian church. Some students viewed college as a time to rethink their religious views. These students had felt forced to go to church while at home even though they did not have a strong faith.

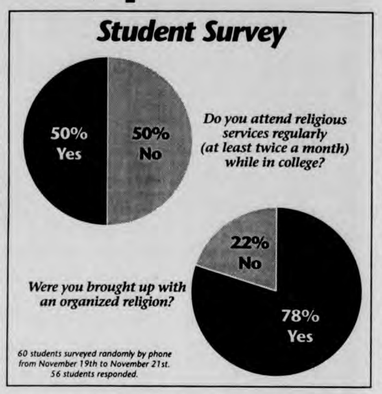
More than half of the students surveyed (57%) believed that their religion was based upon some amount of fact. They sited the large number of stories in the Bible and Jesus's life as proof. Those who disagreed said that religion is just a faith or belief. Other disbelievers said that religion is just an example of how to lead a good life and nothing more.

While religion did not seem to dictate anyone's life, it did influence some students' opinions on sex and marriage.

When asked how their religious views, if they had any, affected their attitude towards pre-martial sex, 57% said that it had no influence, 7% did not believe in pre-martial sex, 29% said that they'd only have it if they were in love with the person or planned to marry him or her, and 3% answered "other."

Religion had less of an effect on martial views. Ninety-five percent said that they'd marry someone outside of their faith or someone religious if they themselves were an aetheist. Hardly anyone saw a problem with letting their spouse have his or her own religious life.

In general, religion seemed to be something that most Bucknellians had been brought up with, but did not think that heavily about. No respondents had particularly strong views. Many indicated that they would always attend some sort of religious services, while others were finding that their interest in religion is slowly fading.



Where to worship, pray on campus

BY COLLEEN RUSH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Are you losing your religion? Do you believe that you've got to have faith? Feel like saying a prayer? Need direction in your life? If you answered yes to one or more of these questions, look no further.

Bucknell offers a wide variety of services, programs, and organizations that cater to the religious and spiritual needs of any student, no matter what race, religion, or creed.

Traci Mellinger—The Bucknellian
Father Kelly oversees the Catholic masses each Sunday.

The Intervarsity Christian Fellowship (IVCF) is a national, nondenominational, evangelical college ministry. The Bucknell chapter, run by students, has three main areas of focus: Bible study, fellowship, and outreach. Aside from the numerous outreach activities that the group sponsors, IVCF also holds twelve small-group Bible studies a week, and a large-group meeting each Friday night at 7 p.m. which features speakers.

Through the Interfaith Program, the Chaplain, Catholic Campus Minister, Hillel Counselor, other advisers, and student leaders work together to enhance interaction between the various religious groups on campus. Any representative of a different faith or of an organization concerned with spiritual development are urged to utilize the chapel facilities.

Catholic Campus Ministry, provided by the Diocese of Harrisburg, strives to incorporate Christian values and beliefs into everyday living by means of devotions, programs, and activities for participation by the entire campus community. Newman House, the on-campus Christian meeting place, serves as a spiritual center as well as a social gathering place. Reverend Jack Kelly is the Catholic Campus Minister.

Peter Ho—The Bucknellian
Professor Abowitz is the on-campus advisor to Hillel.

Hillel is the official representative of the Jewish community at Bucknell. Its range of programs include social, religious, and educational activities. Martin House, the Judaic Studies House and residential hall, sponsors a variety of Jewish activities throughout the year, provides a kosher kitchen, and serves as the site for informal, student-led Friday evening services. Rabbi David L. Silverman from Temple Beth-El in Sunbury is Hillel's advisor. He works with students to coordinate campus activites with those of the temple in Sunbury. Professor Deborah Abowitz is also an advisor for Hillel and readily available to students to discuss their faith.

Protestant services are held at 11 a.m. each Sunday in Rooke Chapel and feature student musicians and readers, and a sermon by a campus speaker or guest. Catholic Mass is also celebrated in Rooke Chapel each Sunday at 4 p.m. Jewish services are arranged through the Martin House and Temple Beth-El in Sunbury.

Religion course enrollment skyrockets

Students come with some religion or none, but all come to learn with open minds

BY KATE FINK

The Religion department is anything but homogenous. Students come from a wide array of backgrounds, from devout Christianity to agnosticity. Although the largest percentage of students are Protestant, the traditional denominational lines have become less important. Professor White, who is new to Bucknell, is "delightfully surprised" about the openness of the students, she says,"I have not found much conservatism or homogenity."

According to Joseph LaBarge, professor of religion, opinions tend to reflect what is going on in larger American socieety. The more vocal people in his classes tend to be fairly liberal, while the rest are either cautious and conservative or have middle-of-the-road views. Students have shown that they are able to appreciate the academic approach to religion because they are willing to experiment with ways of thinking that differ from their own.

LaBarge noted that most of the courses in the religion department are taken as electives and that the department is at an all time high enrollment. He says, "The number of students in these classes is growing immeasurably per semester." LaBarge considered this trend to be a result of changing times. In the '60's and '70's, students were "freer to question authority." They were "bolder, more intellectually adventuresome." And then in the '80's the struggling economy made people more cautious and conservative and in pursuit of careers that would give them financial security. But now, "students seem to be searching for a better foundation that can provide them with a sense of meaning in their lives" rather than for financial security.

Professor White compared Bucknell to the previous schools at which she had taught. She has found that classes at her former, more progressive liberal schools in the west became more factioned during discussions. People there seemed to have a firmer stance on their views. The women were more open to feminist consciousness and incorporated their views into class often. Bucknell students are more impressionable because they try to understand what is presented to them to the fullest extent and then they see how they can meld these ideas with their own.

How do religion professors approach the diversity in backgrounds, values, and motivations in their teaching? They assume that their audience has no background or exposure to the issues. Said LaBarge, "It has become increasingly problematic to assume students have a general understanding of basic beliefs and practices, with even western religions." He recalled an instance several years ago in an Introduction to the Bible class where a student could only identify the name "Moses" with a basketball star. LaBarge said that this ignorance has much to do with the student's religious education before college and the level of religious affiliation within the family. He also noted that increasing secularization of American society makes it difficult for people to become familiar with differing views. Lastly, he said, "As a society, we have an increasingly weak grasp on our sense of past. People simply don't read much anymore."

With religion classes almost closing to some students due to over-enrollment, it is evident that students really do want to learn about the beliefs of those around them. Because of this, the professors try not to threaten, intimidate, or preach. The issues brought up incorporate race, class, and gender into fundamental studies and provoke controversy and interesting debates. Join the many who are taking religion courses. You better hurry though, before the class of your choice fills up!

Take advantage of courses, programs, and services offered on and off campus to expand your knowledge and maybe find something that really interests you or makes you feel good.

Local churches welcome students to their services

If Rooke Chapel or the Martin house does not serve your religious needs or if you're looking for a specific Protestant service rather than an all-denominational one, try attending one of the twelve churches in town. They all encourage students to come when they can – and look at the church as a great way to become involved in the community.

Leering At Tragedy

Aren't tragic heroes supposed to be smart? I thought it was a rule or something. Aristotle, a brilliant theatrical thinker of Ancient Greece, in his definition of the tragic hero stated: The tragic man of the theater must be... 1. Male. 2. Of noble birth. 3. Bright enough to figure out the timer on a VCR so that he can watch "Beverly Hills 90210" and tape "Cheers."

With the exception of some ancient feminists who, for some strange reason, seemed to think that Aristotle was a sexist pig, there was little debate about his definition. Indeed, his thoughts on tragedy revolutionized drama. Before learning Aristotle's formula, playwrights like Sophocles had created dim-witted heroes that were quite different from the ones we recognize today...

Oedipus: Duh, uh, let me get this straight. I, uh, married my father and chopped off my mother's head with a sword.

Antigone: No, no you dolt. You have it backwards.

Oedipus: Duh, uh, you mean, uh, my mother chopped of my head with a sword.

Antigone: You idiot, put that Visine down and try again.

Oedipus: Uh. Okay. I killed my uncle, and uh, married my first cousin once removed.

The rules of tragedy were only slightly altered over the years to compensate for society's changing values and philosophies. These evolving paradigms of thought and their affect on the tragic hero can be seen in the diary of Renaissance playwright, Christopher Marlowe, who asserts,

...Aristotle's tragic hero is a brilliant vision with vivacious texture and charming accuracy, yet perhaps he is somewhat antiquated. It seems to me that today's tragic hero would tape "Beverly Hills 90210," and watch "Cheers."

Even Shakespeare, in his earlier tragedies, followed Aristotle's rule. His character of Hamlet was quite astute, and would spend hours contemplating the universe, and then contemplating the manner in which he contemplated the universe, and then contemplating the manner in which he contemplated, contemplating the universe, and then... Well, anyway, Hamlet was pretty smart. Macbeth also seemed fairly bright. Othello—a little gullible perhaps, but quite handy with a pillow.

But, in Shakespeare's later works, the tragic heroes were complete idiots. Take King Lear for example. Not only did he possess an IQ slightly less than that of a Creemy Koffee Kake, but people blatantly told him how dumb he was being and he still couldn't understand. Throughout the play, Lear's court jester uses mysterious puzzles and enigmatic metaphors to inform Lear of the stupidity of his decisions...

King Lear: Well, my fair Jester. I've just relinquished all my property to my eldest daughters, the ones who tried to poison me last week. What do you think about that?

Jester: My dear king, your eldest daughters are very evil and they don't love you. I beg you to reconsider. Nyuk, Nyuk.

Lear: (laughing) Ha, ha, ha. This fool is quite witty. Yet, methinks there is hidden wisdom in his foolish words. If only I could understand.

Jester: My great master, I swear that your eldest daughters shall betray you. Nyuk, Nyuk.

Lear: Ha, ha, ha. My how this fool can banter on. Oh, by the way, my youngest daughter, the one that bakes me cookies on Christmas and brings me breakfast in bed on Sundays, I kicked her out of the house and told her I never wanted to see her again.

Jester: That was very stupid, your majesty. Methinks you have the IQ of a Creemy Koffee Kake.

Lear: (shaking head) If I could only understand your cryptic puzzles, my jester.

More recently, Russian playwright, Anton Chekhov, completely changed the definition of tragedy, paying no attention to his characters' intelligence whatsoever. Chekhov, was more concerned with creating realistic, middle-class, bourgeoisie tragic-heroes, who are wealthy enough to continually host tea parties with large numbers of people, but, evidently, too poor to buy vowels for their names. The revolutionary concept behind the Chekhov tragedy is that: 1. Nothing happens and 2. Everyone is depressed. Here is a sample from Chekov's most famous work, The Three Silver Seagulls.

Mr. Prchzdvch: My good man, Mr. Yxlvmtsh, I am quite depressed, I think I will kill myself. Pass the tea, please.

Mr. Bysiscsy: I am depressed as well. The other day, Mr. Jpnblx, I shot and killed three silver seagulls. They fell in bloody, quivering heaps at my feet. Pass the sweet cakes, please.

Mr. Zqichchbfsny: Hey, I'm depressed also. The environment is being ruined. Pass the chicken, Miss Wryuyiuytut.

Mr. Slyixlyixylvch: Yes, I'm depressed as well. So, Mr. Bysiscsy, what did you do with those seagulls anyway? By the way, this chicken is particularly delicious with a rather unusual flavor.

Indeed, as drama evolves, so does the range of its methods, devices, and, of course, its tragic characters: the idiotic kings, unaware of their situation; the foolish court jesters who prattle on, misunderstood by the idiots; and the tea-party people, who eat crumpets, and get depressed by it all.

Local marsh cleaned-up, preserved

Environmental movement hits students as the Montandon Marsh is threatened by mining

BY SUSAN SMITH
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Not all environmental concerns are new. Professors at Bucknell have been aware of and taken a keen interest in studying and protecting the environmentally significant Montandon Marsh for over thirty years. Recently though, Central Builders outbid the University for a part of the wetlands. Like other prominent areas of preservation that are being commercialized or mined, the Montandon Marsh has been thrust into the environmental movement spotlight.

The Montandon Marsh is unique because it possesses boglike plants which are typically only found in much more Northern states and another set of plants which are typically found only in wet, sandy coastal areas. These unusual soil formations are due to the wetlands and uplands which were formed during glacial times. Windblown sands were deposited from the Susquehanna River to create this unique area. The unusual environment is home to many rare species of birds, forest areas, amphibians, and emphemeral ponds, as well as unusual plants.

In the late 1970's, Bucknell initiated an environmental program which used the marsh for class projects. Since then, student interns have helped to map out the plants, conducted bird breeding studies, and prepared a self-guided walking tour of the Dales's Ridge area. This summer, projects focused on how to preserve the wetlands after mining of the sand by Central Builders Company takes place in three years.

Pamela Anderson '92 worked with geology professor Craig Kochel to understand the hydrology of the land. Rachel Hochman '92 worked alongside biology professor Warren Abrahamson to determine where the different plant and animal species lived and thus which areas were extremely critical to restore and preserve after the mining.

Professor Abrahamson hopes that the Central Builders Company and the environmentalists will set a "beautiful example of partnership." Already he has walked through the marsh with the CEO of the company and explained to him what is important. The mining project is unfortunately going to be undertaken, but it will be done right, causing as little damage as possible to the marsh area.

Many local groups have jumped on the environmental bandwagon since the marsh was first spotlighted. The past two Saturdays Management 101 Company B helped to organize clean-ups of the marsh. Attendance was high and included 125 students from Bucknell's environmental college, sorority and fraternity members, biology research students, local residents, children from the Mifflinburg School District and all MG101B company members.

This clean-up can be looked upon as a real community effort to save a precious part of the area. The Bucknell Physical Plant provided clean-up tools, as did the Central Builder Company, who also paid for dumping and landfill costs.

The Merrill W. Linn Land and Waterways Conservancy, which has a conservation easement (private ownership, but developmental restrictions) on the environmentally important Walker's Farm, west of Lewisburg, is now also working in conjuction with local groups to clean-up and monitor the Montandon Marsh. Conservancies such as this one are a growing trend in America. They allow for a variety of options in saving ecologically important land.

With the help of all these local groups and a national spotlight that is focusing on the environment, the Montandon Marsh will hopefully be preserved for many more Bucknellians to study, and the general population to enjoy.

Ashley Chertkof—The Bucknellian
Members of Management Company 101B helped to organize other students and locals to clean-up the marsh so that it might be enjoyed by the community.

More awareness means a safer Bucknell

It seems that every time we turn around, another report of an attempted sexual assault has circulated around campus. Such publicity engenders two different responses: First, we worry about the possibility of an assault many times more serious and damaging than any to date—perhaps where a victim is killed or seriously injured.

At the same time, however, we take some solace in the fact that campus awareness of these issues has been increased by the courageous stepping-forward of assault victims. And, while students are beginning to take their own safety seriously, the University is lending a helping hand by stocking personal protection whistles (which are free) and electronic alarms (which sell at cost) in the bookstore.

Vince DeCerchio, director of public safety, and Barb Shailor, vice president for student services, have done their part as well by issuing campus crime alerts just hours after an alleged sexual assault incident is reported. This turn-around time for alerts is an incredible improvement from just one year ago.

One major key to the increased awareness, however, is the fact that these incidents are actually being reported in a timely and accurate manner. By making public the details of attacks on them, victims are helping to prevent further assaults from occurring. The infrastructure currently in place, including the Women's Resource Center, Public Safety, the Office of Student Services, and Psychological Services, ensures discrete and confidential handling of every case.

Therefore, if you or someone you know is attacked, report the incident immediately so that other members of the campus community are at less of a risk. Also attempt to follow the guidelines set up to catch assailants: carry an alert device (whistle, alarm, etc.), try to remember a description of the attacker, and run to safety as quickly as possible.

The University is doing what it can to reduce the threat of physical violence around campus by improving lighting and issuing personal safety devices. The best crime prevention begins with individuals, however: Don't prop doors open, don't walk or jog by yourself, and don't be careless with personal belongings.

The community would certainly be galvanized by a murder or significant assault at Bucknell. Indeed Lewisburg isn't so sheltered that such a thought is impossible. Let's learn our lesson before anything tragic does transpire.

Reader angered by StreetBeat responses

TO THE EDITOR:

Your StreetBeat section last week was really unnerving. Homophobia was blatantly accepted and even endorsed. I find it hard to believe that some instances of prejudice are dealt with in such an offhand manner. As long as the people being persecuted don't belong to your own pool of friends it doesn't matter. Of course no one knows any homosexuals. There are very few homosexuals who would feel safe if the bulk of this campus had knowledge of their sexual orientation. If you don't believe me and you think that Bucknell isn't homophobic, then you obviously didn't read StreetBeat.

I have yet to see comments in StreetBeat that suggested racism, sexism or anti-Semitism. If this ever were the case, I'm sure the response would be a tad bit larger. I don't know why, but I think it has something to do with the, way people separate being prejudiced on the basis of race, sex and religion from being prejudiced on the basis of sexual orientation. On the other hand maybe it's because no one has the guts to be such a bigot without knowing that practically everyone will agree. It makes me sick.

Homophobia was blatantly accepted and even endorsed.

Student defends B.P.C., and refutes Guzofski

TO THE EDITOR:

This is a response to the views held and expressed by Lee Guzofski in last week's edition of the Bucknellian. I am writing a response to his opinion article because I find it of utmost importance that it be understood and told in a clear and unobtrusive manner.

I was, to say the least, overwhelmed and outraged with the rather distorted, confused, and contradictory statements made in his article. For those of you who did not read the article, it dealt with a performance done in the Bison by the campus improv comedy troupe "Some Assembly Required," of which Lee is a part.

To paraphrase or sum up Lee's article would be very difficult because of its lack of clarity. But these are the major points that he stated and/or tried to discuss, which I feel are false and will address; 1) "All comedy is based on stereotypes;" 2) people that may personify certain aspects of stereotypes and also those who were upset with their show are "weak people who can't laugh at themselves, who can't 'take a joke;'" 3) people that were offended are "people who have little or no sense of humor;" 4) "SAR" did "good improv;" 5) Bison Programming Committee is a "fascist group" made up of "Neo-Nazi's;" 6)BPC, even though they are paying acts, should not have the control to dictate what artists can say and do.

It must be made clear that the views expressed in this article are strictly mine and do not directly represent the group views of BPC of which I am a member.

I would first like to address the fact that I do not agree with all forms of censorship, for censorship depends upon the different contexts and situations in which it arises. In this particular case, I feel that BPC has every right to decide not only what performers come into the Bison, but also what material will be performed and whether or not it may be found offensive. Since the performances are sponsored by BPC and the Bison is a public place, if something is found to be offensive it could be seen as a direct reflection of the committee's views, whether the committee feels that way or not. I see this as a very legitimate reason for limiting certain material and if the performer does not feel as though he/she can handle the limitations that the committee has placed on the performance, than the performer has every right to decline performing at the Bison (within contract rules already established).

Secondly, I would by no means call myself an expert on comedy but I would disagree that "all comedy is based on stereotypes." This is a very broad generalization and it is not true. There are many forms of comedy, especially seen today, that do not reflect stereotypes, but rather reflect or are based on one's own personal story. These personal anecdotes are

"Political Correctness at Bucknell" offends junior

TO THE EDITOR:

The November 15th issue of The Bucknellian ran an article that deeply bothered me. Now, on the advice of the author, I am going to attempt to analyze what it is about the article, and the subject matter, that offended me. Although I am writing a personal reply, I would like it to be absolutely clear that I have heard similar sentiments offered by various members of the student body and that these opinions are in no way solely my own.

The article concerned the student comedy routine of an improvisational group on campus. As a member of the audience for their first performance of the year, I was incredibly offended. Granted, improvisational performances heavily rely on the audience's participation. However, this participation only required occasional offerings of a person, place, or thing. What the performer does with the suggestions is solely dependent on him or her. Therefore, the actors are not merely our puppets. They build a story around a single idea-they are not controlled by the audience by any means.

My argument with the writer is not about the technical nuances of improv. acting, however. I am angered by his nonchalant treatment of a very important issue. In the first performance of "Some Assembly Required" this year, offensive portrayals of women and homosexuals seemed to be the foundation of the show. Rather than repeating what was said on stage (once is enough), I'd like to address Lee Guzofski's attitude concerning the performance and the subsequent action taken by the Bison Programming Committee.

After the first performance, Lee wrote in his article that anyone who was offended by any of the subject matter was, among other things, "weak...oversensitive...had little or no sense of humor...and was not strong enough to laugh at him or herself." This pertains to anyone who did not find the show funny. I think the problem lies with the performance, not the audience. He continues, saying the people who objected to the nature of the first show "need to be protected by the University from everything mean and 'not nice' in the world." This is absurd! Should I stand by and watch this obnoxious "comedy" continue because that's the way the world outside the Bucknell Bubble actually is? I think not. The only reason the writer views the "real" world in this way is because he's one of the people whose attitudes perpetuate that image.

In actuality, the real world is not a stage upon which a person can say anything he or she wants and get away with it. I think the writer found this out when the Bison Programming Committee made it clear that such degrading humor would not be allowed in the Bison again. According to Lee, the "fascist" and "neo-Nazi" Bison Programming Committee is violating his First Amendment rights. This is completely incorrect. No one is taking away his right to free speech. The Bison Programming Committee will not let offensive, minority-bashing humor continue in the "convenient venue" of the Bison, because it offends many members of the audience. If this type of comedy makes Lee laugh, why doesn't he keep it in his own room where he knows it will be appreciated, and relieve the rest of us from hearing it anymore?

Finally, Lee, if you have been told that you've offended someone, before you open your "much-too-large" mouth, analyze what you may have said to offend someone. Is it really that big of a deal to admit that some of the remarks in the show were wrong? Can you really not understand the nature of your offensive humor? Is it really that hurtful to your ego to refrain from insulting people not like you? And even so, who cares? Maybe that's exactly what you need-someone to tell you that you are out of line and that you should reconsider your attitude. At least it makes you think! How can you possibly try to ignore it?

Input on Route 15 tunnel sought by Public Safety

TO THE EDITOR:

I am soliciting input from students on how the make the Route 15 tunnel more user-friendly. This tunnel is used by a larger number of students each day. One suggestion was to build a set of steps leading to the Bucknell West parking lot perpendicular to the pathway leaving the tunnel (fence side). Anyone who has suggestions for improving this facility, please drop me a line. Thanks.

On the current state of homophobia at Bucknell

BY MARGARET E. CRONIN

As I read the last two issues of The Bucknellian, it struck me that we have seen some encouraging movement on gay/lesbian/bisexual concerns at Bucknell. Gay issues are no longer confined to letters from a few of the same old people in the op/ed pages. Twice this semester, The Bucknellian has run front page items on gay/lesbian/bisexual concerns. With increasing regularity, an awareness of homophobia and heterosexism crops up in letters and articles dealing generally with multiculturalism and the need for change on this campus. The Bucknellian's most recent "Street Beat" question, "Is Bucknell homophobic?," drew the unanimous response that homophobia is indeed a problem here. In his letter addressing harassment on campus (The Bucknellian, 10/11/91), President Sojka characterized "sexual orientation harassment" as unacceptable behavior worthy of disciplinary response. And, as we saw in last week's Bucknellian, sensitivity to gay/lesbian/bi issues is even a criterion for endorsing a Bucknell Student Government candidate (Miki Zoey, girlfriends! Can you believe it?!). It seems that a range of people at Bucknell are beginning to seriously acknowledge that homophobia, as well as other oppressions such as racism, sexism, anti-Semitism, and classism, is a cultural phenomenon that affects us all and is worth examining.

Perhaps most encouraging, concern for gay/lesbian/bi rights has entered mainstream student politics through a BSG resolution proposing that the administration hire a staff person to advocate for gay/lesbian/bi needs. In response, Gary Sojka met with BSG and FLAG, and has subsequently authorized the formation of a task force to look into the possibility of creating such a staff position, and to find ways to address homophobia at Bucknell.

Bucknell is by no means a safe or supportive environment for its gay, lesbian, or bisexual members. But I am encouraged by the current focus on gay issues because visibility is a key element in making any campus a safer and more inclusive place for gays, lesbians, and bisexuals. People are much more likely to gay bash when they think they don't know anyone who is gay, or when they dehumanize gay people to the point that they believe gay people are not entitled to the same human rights as heterosexuals. It's cyclical: the more we tolerate such notions, the more difficult it is for your gay friends, your gay teachers, your gay sorority sisters and fraternity brothers, your gay classmates to come out to you, to say "I'm here, I'm hurting, and I need your support and friendship more than ever."

Many gay people transfer out of Bucknell, leave school for good, or leave their jobs here because this campus feels impossibly oppressive. Some people fail out. Or attempt suicide. Some internalize the homophobia assailing them every day, and quietly hate themselves. And some gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals at Bucknell do come out, feel good about who they are, celebrate gay culture, and function as bridges between the gay and straight communities. But even these "success stories," these "well-adjusted" gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals, pay prices. This is particularly true for students who come out in this unsupportive and unsafe environment. It requires a lot of emotional energy and fortitude to be openly gay, lesbian, or bisexual on a homophobic campus. It can deplete you. And, as Trudy Cunningham, assoc. dean of engineering, pointed out in a recent public meeting on gay issues at Bucknell, students who take the time to struggle against homophobia often pay an academic price for their efforts.

I know we already have a system here that is supposed to protect and support all students. If the sys-or are based on one's own personal story. These personal anecdotes are by in no means offensive and audiences can relate to them very easily, because they are personal and very humorous.

Lastly, I would like to comment on Lee's direct statement that this campus does "not need Neo-Nazis like Bison Programming holding our hands and leading us down a rose-colored path to maturity because the fact is, that path dead-ends, if it ever existed at all. Growing up involves dealing with reality, with hurt." This statement is absurd not only because of the strength of the language used (Neo-Nazi), but also in its connection with the jokes that I found offensive.

These jokes were not about the majority, but about the minority, or as Lee states, those "weak people who can't laugh at themselves, who can't 'take a joke.'" As he states and as I agree, hurt continually surrounds us and there is even hurt that is not outwardly visible by most people, but

In particular, a skit dealing with "Naked Chick Football," which was not only degrading to women in terms of language, but also visually for the images created were quite offensive. But Lee uses the excuse that, "All of you that are accusing me are really the ones at fault: I am merely your puppet." I agree that "SAR" is merely a puppet (in terms of its show), but I disagree that they have no choice in deciding whether or not they will perform a certain description or word. They are the performers, and they have the ability to make a conscious decision on which way the performance will go. Unless of course, the group agrees with the offensive images that it portrays, for if that is the case then another issue must be pursued.

...in "SAR's" performance, I felt there were many sexually degrading and offensive images that were unnecessary. In particular, a skit dealing with "Naked Chick Football," which was not only degrading in to women in terms of language, but also visually for the images created were quite offensive.

In last Friday's show, compared to their previous performance, "SAR" made a nice effort at being more respectful, but I felt that it was for the wrong reasons.

Continually through their performance they mocked "having to be politically correct" and although indirectly, that they could not pursue certain ideas because of the limits requested by BPC. Their type of attitude although very negative, is good in one sense because it has made people aware of the issue, but immediately it's been put in a bad light by the performers. This defeats much of the purpose and in some senses only adds negatively to the problem.

Lee, I have spoken my piece and in answer to your statement I have thought about these issues for a solid three+ years as a Religion major. I know what offends me. And I also know what frightens me, even as a part of the majority. The attitudes and opinions represented in that article last week I hear too often and I am frightened about the future.

"If you are offended, before you open your much-too-large mouth, analyze what it is that offends you. Is it really that big of a deal? Can you really not laugh at it? Is it really that hurtful to your morals and ideas? And even so, who cares?"

Well Lee, I care. And I know of many other people that do too.

Where is Love and Heaven at Bucknell?

BY JOEL PETRUSCHKE

"Love does not exist in this world." That is all I hear wherever I go. I'm sick of it, so I am relating my impression of the most profound emotion to ever hit this world, and Bucknell.

First off, I guarantee that love exists in this world, but that we have been searching for it in the wrong ways. I must apologize to Love before I go any further. It doesn't deserve the scrutiny it has most unfairly received; nor does it deserve to be reasoned, because by doing so I remove all its glory and magic. However, I am compelled to outline it somewhat because people are being led down the wrong paths.

The word "search" should never be used in association with love, because if it is we are saying that we have some sort of control over an unbridled passion. Love's nature is free playfulness and unlimited dexterity. It finds us, and we can't make excursions to find it. Hope of ever finding love would already be lost.

Many authorities would state that giving freely without expecting anything in return is love, but this is irrational. We give because we want others to feel good, and it makes us feel good (even if we don't see the results). That is selfish! However, love is selfless!! When we give a present, we always expect to see a smile or receive a hug of thanks. How can one give and not at least think, "Wow, I am doing something kind for someone."

We may say that we don't want to be selfish, or that it is disgusting and revolting and that we are personally striving to get away from it, but we only say that to make ourselves feel better; in other words, for selfish reasons. Anytime we give it is a selfish act. Love is selfless, completely selfless!

"True, pure love" is taking one step past the closest we can come to selflessness. As mortals we cannot even imagine it. Try! Try to envision a selfless world, one in which everyone is doing everything for everyone else, without a mere thought of themselves. We'd probably have to be zombies, giving without thinking. It is impossible, though it must be amazingly beautiful and perfect.

In human formn, I think, we can achieve a type of perfect love. How do we do this'? Well, contrary to popular belief, it is not something for which we can search. Love retains its power of randomly bestowing itself on us, and not us bestowing "it" on someone. If someone were to happen to "love" you so much that they continually, non-stop, blessed you with presents, flatteries, passions, everything, the world, and in essence your life (doesn't have to be so extreme)... if you cried or some equivalent action because you were "loved" so much, then you yourself have felt love. You cried because someone cared so much for your well-being, even if you didn't love them back. That is love! The receiver of the unlimited giving is the one experiencing the love, not because of the giving, but because they understand how much someone can care for them personally.

The more a person has to encourage love from you, the stronger that love will be. As soon as you requite the emotion, the strongest love is lost. It may be that it is truly onesided: receiving so much that you cry or giving so much without wanting anything in return. When either of these people give in, love is lost. It may be that love is strongest when it is secluded within one person.

Another problem arises. We are often afraid to be "loved" that much. How many of you on campus have been frightened by a secret admirer, a surprise rose or note, a phone call, or what have you? Very few ever find this one-sided love in this world because very few are willing to be "loved" by someone to the extent where they will cry. Our fear is inborn. We are instinctively concerned with self-preservation, and that again is a selfish trait. We just get scared, before we ever cry. So, as selfishness destroys the hope of love when we try to give unconditionally, fear almost destroys love when we push away the giver, but I have seen people cry because they were given so much. The latter theory seems to hold. I'll give a few examples, but we should thank those who give unconditionally" because otherwise those receivers would never know love! Now, who do we give more to than anyone? God (I have to relate this to religion for a moment, so all you existentialists and so forth bear with me, you may learn something.) Everything we do goes to His creation in some way, including ourselves. Our bodies can never be given to our lovers completely, even in suicide. If we all give so much to just One Being, how can He not be sobbing, weeping, and heaving in tear of perfect love? But, at the same time He has given so much to us: our passions, people, possessions, and the tears to cry. God's tears are divided between ones of compassion for those who have faith, and those of sorrow for people who don't have faith. Interestingly enough, the Devil never has tears, nor do we cry for him—what did he give us? Some people would argue that the Devil makes us cry; we are in pain, and misery, and grief because of him. However, we cry because we can't find something we desperately want, or we are given too much and feel compassion. I honestly believe that if your faith is strong enough, you never want! Ponder this!

What we are scared of is faith in God. We are frightened because we are given so much. The infinite giving doesn't make sense to our finite minds. The same fear arises towards the supreme Giver, as it does for the giver of a rose. "Oh. it could be some raving lunatic who wants to rape me." Does God want to rape you? Of your life? We all must give to create perfect love; besides He gave first. We don't even want to give up our lives, because we are fearful. In giving anything material, we are usually fearless and hopeful. Sometimes we have anxieties, but nothing equivalent to the fear of giving our lives. We must be fearless and faithful in dying. When we received this life we were selfless, weren't we? Anyone scared at birth? then why should we be selfish when we die?

A lot of the fear also stems from the fact that we can't touch or feel or caress the Immortal. We lose faith because of that. Are we saying that we cannot love without sex? That we have hormones and a body to separate us from the Immaculate? We are saying that we are human. The receiver cried because he was given so much, maybe not even wanting it, and a touch probably may not have even been returned. But, I said that I was going to offer examples.

When we are born we are the most innocent and purest of human beings. We are given to abundantly. Do we desire it? At first we are timid of everything but take all the loving that we are offered. The selflessness lasts an instant, and then we start to desire the pleasure and the desire gets stronger and stronger further along. Physically, we cry so that we can be attended to; but why then, when we are first born do we tearlessly cry? As we grow we start to obtain a conscience and fears, and love almost becomes entirely submerged.

An instant we selflessly accept the "love," but it is in our helpless condition. Keep in mind that the givers are still selfish because they soon see how content you are suckling milk and smile—love with some reception, because the baby is returning smiles to make parents happy. The babies give unconditionally (unknowingly) to parents, and the parents feel the love that that child arrives them by being in the world suckling and maybe even laughing.

The other example is in memory of death and life. Goethe summed it up best when he said, "The ecstasy of death." There are innumerable things that we can have innumerable ecstasies of, or in or with...but we all only get one ecstasy of death, where all our thoughts, ambiguities, pains, passions build and build and...contentment. There is no other moment in life where so much passion and power is found. People cry, heave, and sob all their tears and passions for one person. Those people give all that to love, a love that the dead will never experience, nor wanted. But, the people themselves are crying because they are recalling all that the deceased gave them. Here again is some reciprocation.

How do people ever get to one another? I have no doubt that any person can "love" another. If a person gave as much as love requires him to give, the receiver—no matter who it would be—would feel love eventually, if she let herself. But, the giver will wonder whether it is worth it, if nothing is returned soon enough. Both wonder if it is worth it and both wonder if they want the process to go on. Do they oppose each other? My question always was, "If I showed and explained what love was to someone that person would have to love me because without me they could never understand or experience love to its fullest, but at the same time I would no longer want them. Love is proud, and I would consider anyone to whom I had to explain love inferior. Love and I want to grow and learn and experience. What can one experience more that the finality of one's self?"

It is definitely better to have a stubborn battle for love; people get closer and value love more. Maybe, that is why "hard-to-get" works? No, that deals with pride, "Why doesn't he love me now? I want to know what is wrong with me."

Seriously, no one wants to know specifically what love is. I might be doing a grave injustice with this essay. A lot of harm could come, before any good is seen. Love can't be analyzed, it is all emotion; so once we come to know exactly what it is, love ceases to exist. Blind faith is like this, too. It loses its charm and mystique, and we would lose all our goals in the world, if we knew the absolute truth. Nothing else would be worth searching for. For the most part faith and love are personal or one-sided. We have a one-sided faith in God, He already knows. If we give continually in faith, as in love, we can make it a reality.

If heaven is perfect sustained love, then the only way to imagine it is altemating between birth (innocence, "happy" love) and death (knowledge and experience, "sorrowful" love) infinitely. It may be that it is a constant state combining these, much like the world we live in now. With each passing moment there is a death, which encompasses a loss of all we knew and saw and experienced. With each upcoming moment (before the influx of stimuli) there is a moment of innocence and birth. With each miniscule moment we become completely ignorant and omniscient, but we don't realize it because we continue so quickly. It is like a dream, but only in our dreams do we break from the systematic influx of stimuli that places us in this systematic, cyclic phenomena.

Are many people happy in this world, truly happy? In heaven, we are. Can we ever know the truth? In this world we couldn't handle it. Is faith fearless and selfless, but not lovelorn? Love is fearless and selfless, so let yourself be given to, and see how far it will bring you. Can you cry?

tem has always worked for you, it may be hard for you to understand why we need "special" support, or different kinds of support, for certain groups. But chances are, if you are a straight white man who has been wronged, you know you can go through the channels and be taken seriously. You can count on other people to share your outrage about an injustice done you. You can be fairly certain that people will empathize with your pain, support you through a hard time. But if you are a lesbian or gay man in a homophobic culture, you cannot count on such justice. The system does not always work for you, in part because you have not been figured into the system from the start. As far as the system is concerned, you either don't exist, or you exist as an aberration.

An even sadder reality is that you cannot always count on your friends or family to support you. In fact, by bringing an injustice done to you to light and thereby coming out, you may lose your family or friends (not to mention your job, house, or children). Thus, for some gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals, it is an act of survival to keep quiet, suffer in isolation, and live a double life. This is a survival which exacts a heavy cost, especially during our college years as we transit into adulthood, struggling with issues of identity, self-esteem, and value formation. College can be a time of such sweet and profound self-discovery. But imagine if your first real love were smothered in shame and confusion and self-hatred. Imagine if part of your identity were daily characterized as disgusting, sinful, sick. Imagine if violence against you were condoned or seen as funny or righteous. What sadness we endure; what stifling of love and growth and individuality at a very precious period in our lives.

In characterizing the campus climate for gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals, I think it's important to understand how the ethos of a community can dictate the behavior of its members. For the sake of analogy, let's consider rape and sexual harassment for a minute. A woman who experiences this kind of violation in a heavily sexist environment is not likely to come forth to seek justice. Her chances of not being taken seriously, or of being revictimized by the people controlling the mechanisms of justice, are too great. Thus, rape and sexual harassment are likely to go unaddressed, or at least infrequently confronted. Consequently, the perpetrators of such violence may begin to think there is nothing wrong with their behavior. And the rest of the public is lulled into believing such violence against women is a rare occurrence. (For illustration of this, we need only remember Anita Hill's treatment at the hands of a patriarchal Senate.)

This same dynamic of silence and distortion operates even more vigorously around homophobia and the invisibility of the gay/lesbian/bisexual population. Until Bucknell as an institution takes a pro-active stance on gay/lesbian/bisexual rights; until we let our gay members know that we won't tolerate homophobia and that we support their right to be who they are, only a small handful of gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals will be out at this campus. As a result, the pain and frustrations, as well as the joys and the contributions, of most of our gay classmates and colleagues will continue to be invisible, thereby perpetuating problems endemic to homophobia.

As an understanding of homophobia and heterosexism continues to emerge at Bucknell, I urge us all to consider ways in which we can interrupt oppression. Try simple things, like not laughing at gay jokes, refraining from assuming heterosexual norms for everyone, listening open-hearted to the experiences of gay people, reading books or viewing films about gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals. Your refusal to laugh at gay jokes, your refusal to participate in or encourage gay-oppressive stereotyping may seem like a small thing. But it can make all the difference to a closeted gay friend who may feel too afraid to come out in the face of prevailing campus homophobia. I think most of us would truly want to be a person to whom our gay friends or gay relatives could turn for comfort and understanding. But in order to earn the trust it takes for a gay man, lesbian, or bisexual friend to come out to us, we must pay close attention to our attitudes, our assumptions, our very language.

As an understanding of homophobia and heterosexism continues to emerge at Bucknell, I urge us all to consider ways in which we can interrupt oppression.

When you can, speak out and let this university know that you value its gay/lesbian/bisexual students, faculty, staff, and administration. Support the work of the newly formed task force by documenting homophobic incidents you've witnessed or encountered (the task force, which consists of students, faculty, staff, and administration, is being coordinated by Barbara Shailor, acting v.p. for student affairs). Come to a FLAG meeting (Wednesdays, 4:30–5:30, LC 302) to talk to students who are doing anti-homophobia work on this campus. Small, sincere steps can lead to slow, solid progress.

Finally, one of the most powerful things you can do to combat homophobia is to have gay friends. Friendship, more than anything else, fosters understanding by replacing stereotypes, damaging myths, and false assumptions with authentic, enriching exchange between people.

As I indicated earlier, I wouldn't characterize Bucknell as particularly supportive of its gay/lesbian/bisexual members. But there does seem to be an increased awareness of homophobia, and a sense that gay/lesbian/bisexual concerns may finally be appearing on Bucknell's institutional agenda. I do believe there are indications that individuals, small groups, and even people representing structural components of this university are now looking for ways to create a safer and more supportive climate for gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals at Bucknell. I support the growth of this inclusive spirit, and look forward to the continuation of these efforts.

Women's basketball welcomes new coach

Coach Juliene Simpson will take her squad to Delaware tomorrow for season's opener

BY ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Reach for the Stars. This is the motto that adorns the tee-shirts of the Bucknell women's basketball team. It is also what Juliene Simpson, the new head coach of the team, is trying to teach her squad to do. Simpson, who replaces Lori Howard at the helm, is working to create an entire new program out of the team that finished with a disappointing 2-24 record last year.

A native of New Roselle, NJ, Simpson comes to Bucknell with a tremendous amount of basketball experience, both in playing and in coaching. She attended John F. Kennedy College, a small NAIA school, where she excelled in the varsity basketball program.

Colin Bridgewater—The Bucknellian
Shooting guard Joy Sandler '92 will lead the Bucknell backcourt this season. The senior has been voted as one of the team's captains for 1991-92.

From there, Simpson went on to play on 11 international teams, the highlight of which was the first U.S. women's Olympic basketball team in 1976. She was the only player to represent the NAIA on the Olympic team, which boasted many players from the more prominent leagues. Simpson co-captained that team with Pat Head, currently the head coach of the Tennessee women's team, and led the team to a silver medal. Even then, she knew that she wanted to get into coaching.

Simpson has established a reputation for turning failing programs into success stories, a trend that she hopes to continue here at Bucknell. The first notable coaching experience of her 14 years in the field came at the University of Cincinnati, a team that had been faltering prior to her arrival. She immediately coached them to a winning record, and within two years, University of Cincinnati was ranked second in the state of Ohio.

Simpson then moved on to Arizona State University, another program that was in trouble before she took over. After her second year there, the team was invited to play in the NIT tournament, and by her third year had earned itself one of many NCAA berths. In 1987, the American Sports Foundation named Simpson an NCAA Regional Coach of the Year for her Arizona State success.

Her most recent position was at Whitworth College, a small school in Spokane, WA, where she was not only the women's head basketball coach, but also an assistant athletic director. Simpson was named the Northwest Conference of Independent Colleges Coach of the Year for her performance at Whitworth in 1990.

Coach Simpson says that she was not really looking to come to Bucknell and had, in fact, interviewed elsewhere in the East, to where she has wanted to return for many years. However, the problems that Bucknell was facing caught her interest since they were similar to those that she had dealt with before. "I like to take a negative situation and turn it into a positive one," says Simpson.

The main aspect that Simpson is focusing on with her new team is building the self-esteem of her players. "I want them to believe in themselves and in their teammates," states the coach. She feels that the Bucknell players have done a good job trying to overcome the obstacles that face them. Simpson believes that they are an extremely competitive group of women who are having fun and like to practice.

"They like each other, which is a big step. So far, I've built the program on honesty, trust and integrity, which has ultimately lead to loyalty, an important part of a successful team." She also feels that the members of any athletic team are, in the broader scheme of things, not necessarily going to remember their wins and losses, but the friendships and discipline that they have accumulated along the way.

As the start of the season approaches, Simpson is trying to stay away from the word "win" because she believes that, with the situation that her team faces, focusing solely on winning will cause the little things to fall apart—"little" things such as team and individual goals, roles, and skills. Realistically, however, Simpson would like to see Bucknell approach the .500 mark. "Whether we are a little over, a little under, or exactly .500 absolutely doesn't matter, however," she says.

Simpson also believes that all of her players will be successful this season—some more than others, of course—and she feels that they will all have to work hard on the psychological aspects of the game. One important, specific aspect that the team has been working on during pre-season is its defense. Last year, Bucknell was second in the league in offense and last in defense, a trend that it hopes to reverse this season.

Tomorrow, the Bucknell women's basketball team faces its first 1991-92 opponent at Delaware. As the game approached during the week, the coach saw her players getting excited; she saw more unity and better skills, such as passing. "We are trying not to focus on who we are playing, just on the fact that we are playing. We'll find out what we can do, and what we need to work on. I think we will see some success on the things that we have worked on—how much, I don't know, probably more than some others may believe," stated Simpson.

Leading the Bison at guard this year will be tri-captain Joy Sandler '92, and Kelly Dee '94. Sandler, one of the most determined players on the squad, adds an excellent shooting range as well as important leadership skills to the game. Dee averaged 10.7 points per game last year, second on the team behind graduate Julie Bachman. She was also named Patriot League Rookie of the Year for the 1990-91 season. Backing them up will be Erin McCoy '95 and Carolyn Mangan '95.

Tri-captain Lisa Fink '93 will play the important point-guard position, with Kristi Dunleavy '93 backing her up. Anne McGovern '93 will also help out at the 3-guard position.

Starting at center will be tri-captain Kirstin Ellison '92, who averaged 7.8 rebounds last season to lead the team. Kelly Kempton '93 and Nicole Reffner '95 will be playing behind Ellison at the position. Juliet McGee '93, who came on strong late last season, will play an integral role at power forward. Heather Ross '94 and Monica Nawarskas '94 round out the versatile front court. The injured Heather Hoehn '94 also hopes to see action late in the season.

Henesey breaks Bucknell rushing record as team is defeated by Lehigh, 41–13

BY KIRK PETERS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Bucknell's football season came to a close last weekend with a 41–13 loss to Lehigh. The season was marred by a 1–9 record, but several individual performances and achievements managed are worthy of recognition. Among these achievements were the accomplishments of the graduating seniors. In particular, co-captains Brian Henesey '92 and John Spatafore '92 left undeniable impressions on the history of Bucknell football. In addition to the performances of the senior class, the Bison also saw the development of some younger players who will lead the Bison in the upcoming season.

Henesey's records include the freshman rushing record and the all-time rushing record. He also leaves as the only man to lead the Bison in rushing for four straight seasons. Henesey broke the 38-year-old all-time record on a three-yard gain midway through the second quarter. Henesey would go on to gain 63 yards in the game and 2,649 on his career, as he surpassed Brad Myers '53 as the all-time leading rusher for the Bison. The record also stands as a tribute to the hard-work and toughness of the Radnor High School graduate.

One of this season's most lasting images will be that of Henesey leaping to his feet after having his helmet knocked off in a savage tackle by two Holy Cross defenders. The picture of the smile on his face and the enthusiasm of his teammates will not easily fade from memory. This kind of toughness was the norm, not the exception for Henesey. He remained a constant fixture in the backfield for four years taking hand-offs from the likes of Auchenbach '90, Hadajik '91, Kelly '92, and Kopp '95. He will not be an easy player to replace.

Equally difficult to replace will be defensive leader John Spatafore, who will finish his career as the second leading tackler in Bucknell history. Spatafore, like Henesey, was characterized on the field by toughness and durability. He was a major contributor to the Bison defense for the past four seasons. On Saturday, in desperate pursuit of the all-time record, Spatafore recorded a team high eleven tackles.

This season, Spatafore remained the constant steadying influence on a defense that was laden with injuries and the subsequent inexperience. He finished the season as the team leader in tackles by a large margin. Spatafore carried the torch left by Mike Augsberger '91 as the hard-hitting defensive leader. His leadership on the field will be as difficult to replace as his talent and determination.

In addition to the contributions of the co-captains, other seniors left their mark on this and previous Bison teams. Kelly, who came back from off-season knee surgery began this year as the starting quarterback. In the season's third week, he led the Bison to their only win of the campaign. Equally as impressive, was his conversion to the defensive secondary after turning over the reigns of starting quarterback. The Bison will sorely miss his athletic ability in the upcoming seasons.

Defensive end Roosevelt Smith '92 and fullback Ron Mesaros '92 also completed outstanding careers with the blue and orange. Smith started every game this season and finished second in sacks on the team. Mesaros opened holes for Henesey and the other tailbacks as well as gaining some tough yards on his own.

Certainly Bucknell will miss their graduating class of outstanding players, but don't think that they will enter next season with no talent or experience. Among the players returning, the Bison have a solid nucleus to rebound from a tough season, including Kopp. He was the starting quarterback for the last half of the season for the Bison. Though he experienced the difficulties that all freshman quarterbacks will, he showed a strong arm and poise that should prove invaluable next season. His favorite target will also return. David "Whitey" Berardinelli '93 led the Bison in receptions, yards and touchdowns this season. Though not exceptionally big or fast, he had a knack for getting open and, once the ball got

First-year quarterback Travis Kopp '95 pitches against Lehigh last Saturday. For the game, he completed 16 of 31 passes for 241 yards and a touchdown. Kopp's season total of 834 yards sets a new Bucknell record for passing yards in a season by a freshman.

Ferraro wins title as grapplers open

BY JAMIE DIAFERIA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell wrestling squad opened the new season with an impressive group of individual performances at the Asics Tiger East Stroudsburg Open. Four members of the team, including one champion, were placewinners in the highly competitive tournament held Sunday.

The Bison effort was led by Bob Ferraro '94, the local high-school standout and eventual state champion, who captured the 190-pound weight class title with an impressive set of victories. Ferraro, who sat out last season, has the potential to be one of the most exciting things to happen to Bison wrestling in years. He proved this on Sunday after he defeated fifth-ranked T.J. Wright from Army 8–5 in the final match, though Ferraro was seeded only seventh. This was not the most impressive match of the day, however. In Ferraro's third match of the day he came up against second-seeded Kevin Brown from Maryland, who, last year, captured the Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC) title. Ferraro struggled a bit, but managed to hold on for the victory.

Overall, Ferraro was pleased with the outcome of the tournament, and with his performance. "I think I wrestled pretty well, but there is plenty of room for improvement." When asked about the pressure that he felt, he remarked, "I'm not putting any pressure on myself. The only pressure I feel is from outsiders, and I don't listen to them."

The team will not have to rely solely on Ferraro, however, as the tournament proved the squad's strength in other areas, as well. Phil Elliott '93, wrestling at 142 pounds, placed sixth overall after losing to fifth-ranked John Hughes, 7–3. Tri-captain Ken Herceg '92, wrestling at 177 pounds, placed fifth in the tournament after he was defeated by second-ranked Shane Camera from U.N.C., 12–4. Additionally, Herceg recorded the most falls in the tournment, with three for the Bison at 7:49 in the match. Finally, tri-captain Ben Myers '92, wrestling as the heavyweight, placed fifth against fifth-ranked Bill Ferencz from Maryland, 6–3.

Coach Bob Ferraro was pleased with his team's overall performance. "The younger guys in particular did real well," he remarked. "We showed a lot of promise, especially considering there were 350 entrants in the tournament." Commenting on the younger Ferraro's match, the coach said, "He was well-focused, and wasn't letting anything get to him. I really don't have any expectations for him this season."

Ferraro outlined the two goals for the team as being a conference championship and ranking among the top 20 in the country. While he would not speculate on the feasibility of this goal, he did stress that this year's team was a young one. "We have some exciting young kids. They have been real competitive in practice, and it's a nice situation." He adds that the loss of All-American Tom Marchetti '91 will definitely hurt, but that the team will recover. "We are a different team," he conceded. "But I am real comfortable with the team. The youth aspect is exciting, because each week I see improvement."

The Bison will have to deal with one early season loss, however, as tri-captain Mike Van Doren '92 suffered a knee injury in practice, and could be out for at least a month. Van Doren, who was an NCAA qualifier last season, was to wrestle in the 150-pound slot on Sunday, and represented one of the bright spots on the Bucknell squad. Mike

Swimmers top Drexel and UMBC

BY MARK ABRAHAMSEN AND ANDREA FALCIONE
Bucknellian Staff Writers

The Bucknell men's and women's swim teams began their seasons last week in excellent form, facing UMBC last Wednesday and Drexel on Saturday.

The Bucknell women fared slightly better than did the men as they came out of the week with a 2–0 record, while their male counterparts are now 1–1. The women beat UMBC 129–113 and Drexel 131–112. The Drexel victory marks the first time in the history of Bucknell women's swimming that the Bison have beaten the Dragons. The men beat UMBC, a team that has beaten them for the past two seasons, by a score of 134–108. Unfortunately, Bucknell then faced a very powerful Drexel team and lost 146–97.

At the UMBC women's meet, the lead changed hands five times before Bucknell eventually took control for good. UMBC established an early lead by taking the first two events, the 400 medley relay and the 1000 freestyle. The Bison then went ahead with the first place finishes of co-captain sensation Margaret Grunow '93 in the 200 free (1:56.57) and of Andrea Falcione '92 in the 50 free (:25.49). Another first place finisher was Debra Zapotocky '94 in the 1 and 3 meter diving events, with scores of 188.63 and 169.87 respectively. Grunow also captured the 100 free in a time of :53.72, a full second and a half ahead of her nearest competitor. Bucknell sealed the meet victory with a first place finish in the 400 free relay (3:44.30), comprised of Kathleen Hartnett '94, Stephanie Boles '95, Falcione, and Grunow.

Unlike the women's meet, the UMBC men's meet was clearly dominated by Bucknell from the very start. The Bucknell men opened the meet with a victory by the 400 medley relay team of co-captain Don Steenson '92, co-captain Chad Farrell '92, Rick Steenson '95, and Kevin Schroth '92 with a time of 3:37.79. The Bison followed the winning course set by its relay with an impressive seven individual victories. These included: Dietrich Conze '94 in the 200 free (1:47.75), Jay Gross '93 in the 50 (:21.71) and 100 frees (48.22), R. Steenson in the 200 individual medley (1:59.43) and the 200 butterfly (1:57.63), Eric Carr '93 in the 3 meter diving (213.08), and Kevin Britton '93 in the 1 meter diving (217.20).

Against Drexel, the Bucknell women held the lead throughout the entire meet, which they opened with a strong swim in the 400 medley relay. Hartnett, Boles, Grunow, and Falcione teamed up once again to win that event with a time of 4:05.92, missing the Freas-Rooke Pool record by only .33. Distance queen Linda Fink '95 followed by winning an important race in the 1000 free (10:54.40). Grunow next had a tough race in the 200 free, winning by a margin of .81 with an impressive time of 1:55.76. She also went on to capture the 100 free (:53.56) later in the meet. The final individual winner was Hartnett, who took the 200 backstroke in 2:11.36, just .01 slower than her personal best. The Bison winded down the exciting competition with a victory in the final event; the 400 free relay team of Boles, Wendy Sheldon '93, Victoria Gorman '93, and Jeannie Klawon '95 won with a time of 3:50.31.

The Drexel men's meet saw few first-place finishes for the Bison. The 400 medley relay captured first once again (3:37.10), but this time the team consisted of D. Steenson, Farrell, R. Steenson, and Gross. Stuart Harris '95 won the first collegiate race of his career in the 1000 free versus Drexel in a time of 10:09.59. The only other victory for the Bucknell men on the day was the 50 free, which Gross took once again in :21.69.

The Bucknell women are looking forward to a strong season to follow their 6–4 record and second-place finish in the Patriot League Conference Championships of last year. The men are hoping to improve upon their 1–10 record of last season, a season that ended on a positive note as they took third at the Conference meet. The teams face Bloomsburg today at 1:00 at Freas-Rooke Pool.

Skiing squad readies for slopes

BY RICHARD FERRIGNO
Bucknellian Staff Writer

As old man winter rapidly approaches, the members of the 1992 Bucknell ski team are busy tuning up for what should be a challenging season on the slopes. Men's team captain Mark Abrahamsen '93, having already organized the dryland training and strength conditioning workouts, will have his squad hit the hills of Smuggler's Notch, Vermont by the second week in January. Races begin on Saturday, January 18th and will run through February.

Success this season, admits Abrahamsen, will not come easy. Comprised of five racers and two alternates, the men's "A" team will need major contributions from returning sophomores Scott Perricelli and Mark Ralston. However, as encouraging for the team as these key skiers may be, the squad cannot succeed without reinforcement from freshmen.

Top-notch performances from many individuals last winter propelled Bucknell to victory on the conference and regional levels, including wins over rivals UPenn, Pittsburgh, and Penn State, and their rigorous fitness program in the off-season has improved not only their stamina but also their mental fortitude essential to skiing competitively.

As Abrahamsen says, this team is basically a young, inexperienced one. Unfortunately, the maturity and confidence of incoming freshmen are factors that cannot as yet be quantified. The most promising young skiers will earn roster spots and will join Abrahamsen, the experienced leader of this coachless consortium, in filling out this year's line-up.

In light of the impressive achievements of last year's team, this new group of young skiing enthusiasts have inherited some big shoes to fill. The 1991 men's team advanced past regionals and placed 16th in the National Collegiate Ski Association (NCSA) National Championship held last spring at Mt. Bachelor, Oregon. Since then, however, the team's profile has dramatically changed. Two sensational skiers have graduated, and another is out indefinitely after recently undergoing ACL surgery to repair his left knee.

The women's team also faces the difficulty of reloading its squad after its top racer of last year, Christine Ralston '92, also required reconstructive knee surgery. This season's captain, Sarah McCahill '93, predicts, "It's definitely going to be a rebuilding year, and we're looking for any freshmen that have any racing experience."

Along with McCahill, the women's team will be joined by Kate Fink '93 and Kerry Marks '94, who will provide leadership for the new members of the team. "The three we have makes up a good core group," said McCahill, "But we're going to need some fresh faces." The women's team is aspiring to move up from last year's fifth-place showing (of fifteen teams) in the conference standings.

The upcoming year should prove to be rewarding, if lofty goals are not prematurely set. A year of rebuilding is an occasional necessity for any team looking to keep future dreams alive. The potential is there. And, while hopes are high for reaching the Regional Championship at Timberline, West Virginia, national success at Lake Placid seems to be still a dream.

HENESEY

Henesey's outstanding football prowess can be traced back to 1978 when he was a nine-year-old playing 85-pound football and was instructed by his father, Richard Henesey, "If you're going to run the ball, you ought to punish the tacklers, because they're going to be trying to hurt you." It was advice that the younger Henesey must have taken to heart and not forgotten.

Although his prep accomplishments were impressive, few could have envisioned his success as he came to Lewisburg out of Radnor High School in Radnor, PA. As a senior fullback, Henesey rushed for nearly 1,000 yards, an average of 6.2 yards per carry, tops in Delaware County. He was also an All-League defensive back, but wanted to play running back as he continued his career.

"One of the reasons I chose Bucknell was that I knew I could play here early and play running back. But I didn't expect to do what I've done," commented Henesey earlier this season.

Despite his abilities, the 22-year-old International Relations major has always put team accomplishments before his own. When asked to recount a memorable moment coming out of high school, he chose to bypass his records and mentioned his team's victory over its ancient rival, Lower Merion.

Echoing this sentiment, Bucknell's offensive coordinator, Michael O'Connor comments, "Brian's a great, great player and person. He personifies everything you want in a football player, the same attitude everyday, practicing as hard as he plays. The rushing record is a great accomplishment, but I'm sure that he would tell you that he'd trade it for a couple more wins."

During his first season playing within Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium, the freshman quickly went from fourth-string to second to varsity starter, setting a school freshman rushing record with a team high, 430 yards. He topped those numbers during his sophomore year as he again led the squad with 757 yards and was tops on the team with ten touchdowns, marks good enough to land him a spot on the All-Patriot League second team.

In 1990 he was again named to the all-league second team after he carried 177 times for 815 yards, the most by a Bison back since Ken Jenkins '82 gained 1270 in 1980.

Henesey states that breaking the school's 39-year old rushing record "makes me feel as though all of the hard work that I have put into football over the years has paid off."

Following his graduation in June Brian Henesey may enter the Marine Corps' officer candidate school. Another option that he is considering is to continue his football career in Canada, but for now he can take pride in the fact that he is the most prolific running back ever to charge as a Bison.

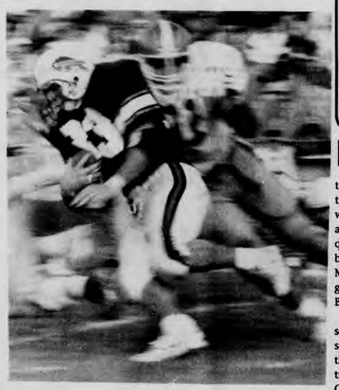
A tribute to the 1991 grid captains

Brian Henesey '92

As Bucknell's offensive captain in 1991, Brian Henesey '92 led the Bison in rushing yards for the fourth consecutive season. This unprecedented act helped the outstanding back to surpass Brad Myers '53 as Bucknell's all-time leading rusher. This season's total of 686 yards raised his career total to 2649, a total that included eight 100-yard games, two this season, three last year and three in 1989. His top single game performance came during his sophomore season as he gained 160 yards against Colgate, including a 54-yard touchdown romp late in the fourth quarter that sealed the Bison victory.

John Spatafore '92

Bucknell's defensive captain in 1991, John Spatafore '92, totaled 13 tackles in last week's season-ending defeat at the hands of Lehigh. The total gave him a season mark of 113 tackles and a career mark of 363 tackles leaving him only four shy of Bucknell's career mark of 367 set by Mark Wiesnewski '86. An All-Patriot League selection the past two seasons, the linebacker looks to repeat again. He is finishing a career that began with 100 tackles during his freshman campaign as he won a starting position that he would not relinquish for four seasons.



Bison Afield

BY MICHAEL CORELLI
Bucknellian Staff Writer

I know that everyone is salivating, waiting for rifle season to open on December 2, especially the high school students who get the day off as a statewide holiday (I love such values held within this state). Anyway, you have probably scouted out the area you are going to comb in search of that elusive ten-point trophy buck; you have probably been looking since as early as the end of last season. Well, since you have put so much time and effort into it, I wish you the best of luck, however, I would like to add, now is the time to start planning that Spring fishing trip.

Now if you are the true angler, of course this point is always up for argument. You probably enjoy fishing for that freshwater fish, which, pound for pound, is the toughest fighter. Your best bet is the Smallmouth Bass. These balls of muscle abound in the waters of the Susquehanna River nearby; however, if you are looking for the ultimate in Smallmouth fishing you must travel as high as Canada, Maine, or upstate New York. One trip which I am planning to take in the spring includes Quetico National Park in Canada. Though I have as yet to go to this haven, very close sources, who are certified anglers themselves, swear this to be the most outrageous Smallmouth Bass haven anywhere in the world. One can begin this trip by planning through Moose Bay Outfitters in Minnesota from whence a two-day canoe trip is necessary to whittle your way into the paradise, accompanied by your guide. It is important, as well as interesting, to note that within the boundaries of this park, which is quite large, there are no motorized engines or motors allowed, of any kind. This includes the air space above where air traffic is prohibited. Once within the maze-like tangle of lakes and rivers, only the finest fishing is found. My close sources swear that although there were slow points, as there always are, for the most part it was difficult to keep up with the action. Outrageously large smallmouth of four lbs. and higher were commonplace, and if you have a palate for Northern Pike, they were so abundant that you would fear dipping your hands into the water for a quick rinse. One story tells of a chase where a prehistoric looking Northern chased down and pinned a four-pound bass to a fallen tree and swallowed him whole. I wouldn't have believed this either had it not been for the 20-pound Northern Pike which was landed on 6-pound test line, and was brought home and mounted in all its ferocious glory. The lure of choice for the Smallmouth on this trip was the salt-and-pepper color Fat-Gitzit, which is an eel-like, grub-like jig. Also well-liked were the ever-popular Blaze Orange Rapala and the gold Vibrax.

Now I know what you are thinking. "I have seen these articles and hyperboles before in Field & Stream and Outdoor Life. This is just another fishing story." Well, believe that if you will but I have read and followed these articles before also, only to be completely disappointed. This place is for real, the ultimate in Smallmouth angling. Please feel free to contact me if you would like any information to plan this trip. Only serious outdoorsmen should consider however, for the trip is physically grueling as well as rewarding. Take it easy.

atmosphere. I like the rural atmosphere of Bucknell in terms of training, not to mention its excellent academic and running programs. I think I've made one of the best choices I could have made.

BB: How do you think the team will fare Monday?

MD: Coach told us that we were ranked 23rd. I don't believe it. We'll see come Monday where we'll end up.

BB: What are you going to do next year?

MD: I'm looking at Med school. I'm thinking about some M.D./Ph.D. programs. I've looked at Harvard Med school, and I like it the most. To get in there might be a little lucky, but I'll take it.

BB: Why has this team been so successful?

AG: I think it's the work ethic the kids have. We have usually a group of six to eight freshman come in every year and probably two-thirds of those stay with the program. I don't think that's a knock on the program. I think it's a plus that some of the kids decide that they just don't want to put in that kind of time. It's not an extraordinary amount of time, it comes second to athletics. But it's every day for four years of being dedicated to being the best distance runner that you can be.

BB: The team's GPA is over 3.2. Why do the two go so well together?

AG: I think the structure works for both. You have to be at practice every day at 4:00, and you have to get eight hours of sleep in order to recover physiologically from the work-outs. When we recruit kids, we tell them academics comes first, running is the second priority and your social life is going to take a hit. You're just not going to be able to do the things you want to do if you want to be the best student and runner you can be.

BB: Is the fact that Bucknell doesn't give athletic scholarships a hindrance on recruiting?

AG: Probably it will always be a hindrance. It just means you've got to search a little harder, though, to find the kids that can do both. They are out there. It is just a matter of finding them. It is obvious we've got them here and we've had them for a long time.

BB: What do you look for in a recruit?

AG: First of all, you have to look for a student because you have to get them past admissions. In distance running, they seem to go hand-in-hand. The history shows that they are dedicated in the classrooms and dedicated athletes. I think the most important thing beyond the classroom is just looking the kid straight in the eye and saying "If you want to be the best distance runner you can be, this is a good place to do it," and they'll make the decision from that.

BB: Your teams have been in the top 20 nationally and gone to the championships eight times in the past 13 years. Why can this team compete nationally whereas some of the other Bucknell sports cannot?

AG: That is an interesting question. I think the nature of the sport is such that you only need five to seven and we have a team of 28 to pick that from. We just get kids who work real hard, and we're able to compete on that level. There are a number of factors.

BB: What is realistic and what are you going to shoot for at Tucson?

AG: We realistically belong there. I don't think we're there in the top three places, but I don't think it is impossible to be 10th or 12th either. We are going to go run our own race. I think we know the course, we have been there before. I think this team is suited for that course, so I think we are going to do very well there. Exactly where we are going to finish, I don't know.

BB: How will this group of seniors rank 10 years from now?

AG: There is no doubt there has never been a group of seniors with the kind of dedication to academics and athletics that these kids have. We have had better teams, maybe one or two, but never as good a mix in the classroom and on the course.

there, for not missing it. Also offensively, the Bison will return a line with a season's worth of experience. Vince Mays '94 will anchor the line at center, and what was a question mark going into this season will be an asset going into next. Kevin McElvene '93, Matt Walsh '93, and Joe Vargo '93 will also contribute heavily to the Bison attack next year.

Defensively, the Bison will also return a solid group. John Lusk '93, who led the Bison in sacks with 8.5 this year, will solidify the defensive line. He will get help in the trenches from Janne Kilpalainen '93 and Cecil Boone '94 who will bring experience to the tackle position.

Russ Strohecker '95 and Hew Woodward '93 will help replace Spatafore in the linebacking core. Each saw extensive playing time for the first time this year and played outstanding football. Along with Kevin Kane '93, who sat out much of the year with injuries, they will lead a group of linebackers that will be the heart and soul of the defense. In the secondary, the Bison won't have any superstars coming in, but they will have several experienced players. Matt Noll '93, who intercepted his first career pass last week against Lehigh, Blaine Fawcett '93, and Matt Sniegocki '93 all saw plenty of quality playing time this season. This group of returners should help re-establish the strong defensive tradition of the Bison.

The adversities of a 1–9 season are not something that are easily overcome. Nor are they easily forgotten. Such adversities can be devastating to a team, but the Bison leadership would not let that happen. Despite being doomed to a losing season, Bucknell gave a solid effort in every game. This effort was a reflection of the senior leaders on the team. Henesey, Kelly, Spatafore, Smith, and Mesaros won't play a down next year, but their presence will be felt. Over and above the individual performances and notoriety, they were all team players who will leave their toughness and determination behind with the people who will replace them.

Good Luck to the X-Country squad

Cross-country's outstanding junior runner, Kristen Opdyke '93 has been awarded this week's Athlete of the Week Award.

Bucknell's top finisher in every meet this season, Opdyke continued that streak with a personal best time of 17:33.88. The time marked the second fastest time in Bucknell history at the Bethlehem track and earned her first place in the ECAC University Championships.

Opdyke and the women's squad finished their season with a 2–4 mark.

As the Thanksgiving holiday nears, while most Bucknellians are thinking of turkey and relaxation, the 15 members of the men's basketball squad have their thoughts strictly on the hardwood.

The outlook for the 1991-92 season seems bright, with four starters returning from last year's 18–13 team. As the Breakin' Bison prepare to capture their tenth consecutive winning season, a feat not accomplished at Bucknell since 1910, they know that significant improvement will be needed to surpass the fourth-place finish of a year ago.

After losing to eventual Patriot League champion Fordham in the tournament semi-final last March, Head Coach Charlie Woollum looked ahead to this year, saying, "We have a lot of the same people back, but we must improve, and I'm concerned about our depth." Despite Coach Woollum's reserved optimism, he readily welcomes back his three leading scorers from last year.

In particular, First-Team All-Patriot League guard Bill Courtney '92 and Second-Team forward Pat King '92 must equal or better their performances of last year. These two co-captains will be looked to for leadership both on and off the floor.

One of the Bison's strengths this year will be the backcourt, led by Courtney. The loss of sharpshooter Keith Fenton '91 means that Courtney will expect to shuttle between the point-guard and "two-guard" spots. When Russell Peyton '93 steps into the point, Courtney will switch to two-guard. However, with the anticipated increase in playing time of Matt Clark '93 and Chris Simpson '94 at shooting guard, Courtney will remain at point.

Courtney was able to fill both roles last season, showing a knack for scoring from both positions. His ability to knock down three-pointers spreads the defense and allows for his slashing penetrations to the hoop. His versatility is essential to a successful year. Coach Woollum speaks highly of Courtney: "If he improves and has a good year, he could be a definite NBA prospect," said Woollum. "He has the size (6'2"), skills, and desire to play. Everyone knows he can score, but he is also an outstanding defensive player."

Bill is coming off one of the greatest seasons ever of any Bucknell player. The pre-season All-America and All-Patriot League candidate set a school record with 619 points last year, and he led the conference with a 20.0 points per game average. He tied a Bucknell record by scoring 20 points or more in 16 games last year, and his three 30-point games were one short of a school mark. Among these was a 37-point effort in a win over St. Francis, the seventh highest total ever for a single game at Bucknell.

The secondary education major from Springfield, Virginia is also a leader off the court. "Bill is a leader everywhere," says Pat King. "He keeps everyone together. He is friends with everybody on the team, and he makes sure that no player's ego comes first."

"Bill is undoubtedly one of the best guards in the East," adds Woollum. "He is extremely competitive and works hard at his game. He is coming off a storybook season last year."

Pat King, the 6'6" senior from Scarsdale, New York has vaulted into the spotlight the hard way. It was not until King's junior year in high school that he chose to take up basketball, but his size and athletic ability enabled him to make the junior varsity squad as a walk-on at Bucknell. Pat credits JV coach Tommy Thompson for giving him a chance. It was not until his sophomore year with the JV that King blossomed into the player we see today. In 1989–90 he led the 10–0 JV team in scoring (19.1) and rebounding (11.6), and he also appeared in ten varsity games.

"My success with the JV team my sophomore year along with some varsity experience really helped as a junior. I did not really expect to play so well, but I already knew what it felt like from the year before," said King.

"Patrick is a true success story," adds Woollum. "He works and plays as hard as anyone I have ever coached. He should be even better this year because he is even bigger and stronger."

"Pat is a model for every player on the team," says Courtney of King. "His work ethic inspires us all."

King, who specializes in offensive rebounding, is coming off a dream year in which he set a Bucknell record and led the Patriot League in field goal percentage with a spectacular .670. King also led the team in overall rebounding and ranked fourth in the conference with 7.7 boards per game. His 98 offensive rebounds mark the best single-season total since this statistic originated. In addition to being an excellent free-throw shooter, King is very durable. He averaged 33.4 minutes per game last season, including three 40-minute performances.

With the loss of Steve Leshinski '91 and Mike Walsh '92 from the frontcourt, other guys will have to do more rebounding. According to King, "We expect more rebounds this year out of Paul (Olkowski) and Mike (Bright). Ray Brown is also important because he may have to play three positions—behind myself, Paul, and Mike."

While Bucknell's success in the Patriot League largely depends on the play of Courtney and King, the team does have talent in other areas. Forward Mike Bright '93 is one of the best athletes in the league, and he showed a deft touch from outside last year. Center Paul Olkowski '93 proved in the semi-final game against Fordham last year that he can play with anybody. Guard Russell Peyton '93 has outstanding quickness that leads to many steals and rebounds. Chris Simpson '94 and Raymond Brown '94 should also have an impact. "Everyone talks about our four returning starters, " says Courtney, "but Chris and Ray have the potential to surprise everybody."

As for the Patriot League competition, Courtney and King both see Lehigh as the biggest obstacle. "We played Fordham tough three times, and we beat Holy Cross at their place, so we have a lot of confidence we can beat them this year," says King. "We did not play too well against Lehigh, so we will key on them." Courtney adds, "We'll just try to stay competitive."

Overall, there is plenty of reason to be optimistic about this year's team. While Coach Woollum is correct in assessing that improvement is necessary to get from fourth place to the top, there appears to be a solid nucleus which should wreak some havoc on the Patriot League.

Burychka '92 replaced Van Doren in the tournament, and lost in the second round to Matt Postlethwait of Penn State.

The Bison next head to the Mat-Town USA Invitational in Lock Haven on Sunday. With the youth surprisingly well-adjusted, and the seniors providing the necessary leadership, the team is in excellent shape to challenge the league competetively.

Harriers return to Tucson for NCAA's

Men's Cross Country team places third at IC4A/District 2 championships; rekindles memories of 1987 squad

1991 team heads west

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

From the time even the youngest of athletes laces his sneakers for the first time, visions of competing in a national championship appear in his head.

For Bucknell's top seven runners, these visions will become a reality Monday morning in Tucson, Arizona when they compete in the NCAA Men's Cross Country Championships. This senior-dominated team earned the trip west by placing third in the IC4A/District II meet this past Saturday at Lehigh University.

Despite being ranked among the nation's top 25 for most of the season, the Bison came within 200 yards of falling shy of a national invitation. As the theme from the movie Chariots of Fire echoed in his head, Jeff Loomis '92 was "on fire" as he passed "about 20 people" in the last half mile of the race to round out Bucknell's scoring.

More importantly, he passed the fifth place runner from Iona, who finished just two points behind the Bison, to propel Head Coach Art Gulden's team to his eighth championship in the past 13 years and first since 1988.

The five mile course that Gulden refers to as "the best cross country course in the world" proved to live up to its reputation. Following an aggressive first two miles, numerous orange tank tops infiltrated the top 30 places. However, the final three miles saw the races tighten up, and Bucknell's standing slip.

"We were a little too aggressive in the beginning, but we hung on," summed up Gulden.

Even as the last runner crossed the finish line, most of the Bison harriers, along with numerous alumni who came out to support their former teammates, didn't know whether or not they had qualified. Bucknell's top finisher, Matt Deardorff '92, stated, "We knew it was close. It was just a matter of them double checking everything."

Initial tabulations led Gulden to believe that his team had unofficially qualified. After watching films, and double and triple checking all of the results and totals, the official scoresheet read Penn State 74, Georgetown 110, Bucknell 116, and Iona 118. Only the top three of the 35 competing teams qualify.

Individually, other than Loomis, the Bison received solid efforts from their top four seniors who had carried the team all season. Deardorff placed 14th overall in the district. Tom Wuchenich '92 and Jason Cahilly '92 finished well ahead of their buddies from Cornell, at 18th and 20th, respectively.

Bob Kelly '92, whose two sisters raced in the women's championships, crossed the line in 24th position. Tucson is not completely foreign territory to Bucknell runners. Five years ago, the team finished 16th at the championships. The course features all of the local flavor, sand, cacti, blue skies, and even 3,000 feet of altitude.

"The altitude is not really a problem, but it can be if you run the wrong type of race," responded Gulden.

Bucknell's top national finish was 12th place in 1982. To attain another such performance the Bison will be forced to run hard the entire race.

When asked about his team's strategy, Gulden replied, "You can't afford to go out aggressively the first couple of miles and then take a vacation. The other teams are too good and the course doesn't allow for it. We have to run a better race than we did last week because we can't expect to hang on if we do."

The Arkansas Razorbacks and the Iowa State Cyclones are the favorites going into the meet. But, only the 23rd ranked Bison and Big Green of Dartmouth are non-scholarship schools among the 22 teams that will travel to Tucson.

When Gulden, Deardorff, Kelly, Wuchenich, Cahilly, Loomis, Judd Jarden '93, and Tom Eagleson '93 board their westbound flight tonight after classes and dinner, they'll do so knowing that they've advanced further than more than 265 other programs.

1987 team revisited

Bucknellian Staff Writer

Last Saturday at Lehigh University, the men's cross country team won the Region II title. Out of a field of 364 of Regions I and II combined, the men put their top five between places 21 and 66.

Captain Carl Kemmerer '87, Bucknell's first finisher, completed the 10,000 meter race in 30:43.4. After Kemmerer's 21st were Captain Mark "Sleepy" Floyd '87 and Charles Cole '88 in 23rd and 24th, respectively. Floyd, looking at the first place district trophy commented that, "There are only eight of these in the country and one is sitting here at Bucknell. That's pretty special."

The men's outstanding performance not only placed them first in their region, but it also placed them third in the IC4A's, the combined Regions I and II, behind Dartmouth and Boston University. That place qualified them for the national competition which will be held in Tucson, Arizona on Monday. In Tucson, they will be competing against 20 other teams, the top three from each of the eight regions.

Coach Art Gulden commented that "The men's goal is to be in the top ten, this is our kind of course. It's rugged and tough and we'll run well in that kind of course."

This season the men's team has run consistently well on all kinds of courses. Captain Floyd looked retrospectively in awe of the season. "This year we've been blessed beyond my wildest imagination," he noted. "Every year we set goals for ourselves. Some of them have been accomplished this year like winning conference and season, but this year we did some things that are goals but not accomplished each year like beating Penn State in an invitational, being nationally ranked all year, finishing third in the IC4A's, first in the district and going to nationals. Although, as a team, the men's cross country went to nationals five years in a row, we haven't gone for three years which means that no one on this team has been part of a team."

An interview with members of The Team

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

AND BOB BEHLER
Special to The Bucknellian

Bucknell Assistant Sports Information Director, Bob Behler (BB) interviewed the top four members of the Bucknell men's cross country team, as well as Head Coach Art Gulden. All four are seniors and enjoy tremendous success in both the classroom and on the course.

Tom Wuchenich '92 (TW), Bob Kelly '92 (BK), Jason Cahilly '92 (JC), and Matt Deardorff '92 (MD) all boast greater than 3.6 GPAs.

BB: What does it mean for this program to be running in a cross country national?

TW: It's something we've been working for since our freshman year. The last time we were there was our freshman year. It's something we've been working for four years.

BB: What are your plans for the future?

TW: Next year I hope to go to law school and get a masters degree in international relations. I've applied to ten of them in the Northeast.

BB: What would be a typical day for someone on the cross country team from the time you get up to the time that you go to sleep?

BK: A typical day for me, I have all 8 o'clocks, I start my morning around 6 or 6:30 and do our required doubles which could range from four to six miles every morning. From there I go to classes, do some homework in the spare time. In order to keep up the academic grades that we have, you have to use your time wisely. Once practice comes at 4:00, we establish maybe 2 to 2 1/2 hours for that which is followed by dinner and back to books again. Hopefully, I can get to bed early enough so I can 8 hours of sleep before 6:30 comes again.

BB: Why do you think that this team has been so successful? Do we have a lot of talent on this team? Is it a lot of work? Or a lot of both?

BK: I think it's a mixture of both. I don't think Bucknell recruits the top-most athletes in the sense that we don't give athletic scholarships. What Coach does is he looks for the runners that really want to work hard and have a lot of potential that might not have done extremely well in high school. He gets the most out of them by establishing a good work ethic. Everybody, just by doing the morning doubles and running really hard when you have to, becomes an excellent runner as far as Coach is concerned.

BB: What kind of goals have you set for yourself and the team at Tucscon?

BK: I think we're going to surprise a lot of people. There are 22 teams going to Tucscon. The highest Bucknell has ever finished is 12th, and I think a great goal would be to break that streak and to maybe finish in the top 10.

BB: What are your plans for next year?

BK: I plan on beginning a job working for GE hopefully as an engineer and, somewhere down the line, obtaining a further degree, maybe a masters in electrical engineering or even and MBA.

BB: What is harder for you, studying or running?

JC: I'd say running is harder. A lot of running is natural ability and what you put into it. Whereas studies is just a matter of time and desire.

BB: What are your plans for next year?

JC: I am going to law school, either Harvard or Yale are my top choices.

BB: How much better are you and your classmates than when you arrived here as freshmen?

MD: As we came in as freshmen, our class average was about 17th on a fairly large team which nice because there are always people to look at. We were looking to the seniors at that point such as Steve West '89 and saying "OK, we want to be like them when we're seniors." As you get older, you begin to get closer to that and sometimes even

Opdyke wins ECAC race; team places 9th

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Kristen Opdyke '93 captured the gold medal while the team placed ninth at the women's ECAC university race this past Saturday at Lehigh University.

Opdyke, Bucknell's top finisher all season, had the option of which race to run. "She should have run in the championship race, but wanted to run as a team for another race," commented Head Coach Art Gulden.

By out-distancing the rest of the field by almost ten seconds on the five mile course, she helped lead the Lady Bison past Patriot League foes Colgate, by one point, and Lehigh, by many points.

Gina Abraham '93 finished 36th among the 138 participants. Kathy Wurster '94, Kris Deardorff '93, Becky Tobin '95, and Jessica Wilhelm '95 all placed within the top 100.

For her outstanding performance at the meet, Opdyke will compete at the national TAC meet in Boston after Thanksgiving.

"Opdyke really came of age as a distance runner this season," stated Gulden. "She could have finished among the top 30 if she competed in the championship division, but she thought of the team instead."

The freshman members of the men's cross country team will join Opdyke in Boston for the Under-20 race November 30th.

BSG course evaluation sparks controversy

BY TIMOTHY AMMAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The Bucknell Student Government has recently decided to implement a controversial proposal which will create a booklet which compiles newly designed student course evaluations to be used as a resource in selecting classes.

The planned book, called Veritas, is meant to give students a better idea of professors' personalities and how they run their classes through input from students who have recently completed the course. The 20 question ScanTron evaluations would be distributed and collected by professors at the end of the semester in addition to the department evaluations which students are currently asked to fill out.

Brian Mannix '94, BSG's Chairman of Academic Affairs, has been instrumental in the planning of the two-year-old project. The BSG has also been working with the University's Committee on Instruction (COI), chaired by Associate Professor of Geography Ben Marsh. This committee is charged with recommending policy on matters that don't fall directly under one of the University's colleges, such as the Writing Center and final exams.

According to Marsh, the COI "thought that it was good to have more information out" and that "it was pretty clear it would go on" regardless of faculty opinion. Marsh further felt that the "questions were more directed at instructor performance rather than course content."

Although it has worked with Mannix and Alex Sherer '93, BSG President, the COI does not feel that it would be appropriate to endorse the idea.

Mannix says that the "goal of Veritas is to give students the truth" about the courses in which they are about to enroll.

The actual 20 question evaluation would rate the course and professor on a scale of 1–5 by a number of different criteria. These questions are meant to "find out the general opinions of the class as a whole."

The reasoning behind having professors handle the project is that 100% participation is needed to get an accurate evaluation. Mannix feels that a "mass mailing would only get extreme responses—bad and good," and that students who did not feel strongly would not volunteer their input.

Robert Taylor, chair of the English department, indicated that there "was considerable opposition in the department" to the book, after Mannix presented the details to the English department faculty.

Taylor feels that most professors objected to the idea that they would have to distribute and gather the evaluations themselves. Taylor himself also feels that such a

BU runners place 13th in nation

BY CHRIS DROWNE
Bucknellian Staff Writer

When U.S. News and World Report listed Bucknell among the nation's top universities, most guidance counselors weren't surprised. However, this survey enlightened the doubters amongst that profession, as well as the rest of us. The men's cross country team did much the same for their program last Monday by finishing thirteenth at the NCAA Championships in Tucson, Arizona.

Prior to taking their marks at the scenic starting line at El Conquistador Country Club, many coaches and athletes questioned Bucknell's presence. Most importantly, the Bison didn't question their own credentials.

"In many respects we're the Rodney Dangerfield of cross country. We're always up there [in the rankings], but we don't get any respect," commented Head Coach Art Gulden.

Ranked in the top 25 for most of the season, the senior-dominated squad began developing its own self-respect following a strong showing at the Iowa State Invitational. Beating the second-ranked host after "not running as well as we're capable" instilled invaluable confidence that they can compete with the "big name powerhouses."

"I'm not sure we would have done as well without that meet to wake us up to the fact that we belong with these teams," concluded Gulden. "It dispelled some of those doubts and myths. Hopefully it will rub off onto some of our younger runners."

The Bison obviously did more than compete. Of the 22 teams invited to the 80-degree desert of the Cactus State, nine watched the bright orange tank-top's top five finish ahead of them. The grueling ten kilometer course taxed the stamina of several runners, transforming the race into what Gulden called "a war of attrition." Despite the heat, no one factor dominated a harriers destiny; not the altitude (3,000 feet), nor the hills, but rather the combination of all.

Before mentioning the results of the meet, a brief explanation of the scoring system would help. Each of the 22 teams enters seven runners. The top five out of each team's seven will be used to count towards a total team score. A runner's place of finish determines his score. However, several individuals who boasted strong personal times but whose team failed to qualify compete also. These runners do not effect the

Final plans submitted for Old Bison

Ruth Burnham, associate dean for orientation and activities, serves on the space committee, which is overseeing the plans for renovating the Old Bison and Taylor Hall.

BY MICKI HAMILTON

Because of the lack of space on campus and the increase in campus programming caused by the TIP proposals, the trustees have provided money to renovate the Old Bison.

The Old Bison is the cream colored building located next to Seventh Street House and Smith Hall. Ruth Burnham, associate dean for orientation and activities, commented that a lot of students think of the Old Bison as The Cave which served as a "temporary" Bison until the current one was completed.

Presently, the Old Bison is vacated except for the psychology department's occupation of some office and lab space. According to Burnham's proposal, the other two rooms in the building will be dedicated to social space and the craft shop. Referring to the map of the unaltered Bison, Burnham pointed out that the wall between the two front rooms may be moved to make the room closest to the exit bigger. The bigger room will accommodate social activities and the second room will house the craft shop.

Burnham described the plans for the social space as a cross between a lounge and a snackbar. According to Burnham, "We are looking into state of the art vending" which can be stocked everyday. This includes juices, snacks, other beverages, and sandwiches. The idea is that students will not be able to buy food from the grill like in the Bison, but other snacks will be available besides just chips or candy bars.

The social area will be adequately furnished with booths saved in storage from the Bullseye, and tables from the former Bison. Burnham commented that recycling this existing furniture saves money since the budget for this project is sufficient but not extensive.

Other proposed changes include installing a drop ceiling, a deck on the stream side of the building where picnic tables will be able to be used on nice days, additional

A slight miscalculation

Traci Mellinger—The Bucknellian

A Bucknell student's trip with a rental truck ended very abruptly Tuesday afternoon at the St. George Street railroad underpass, as the vehicle failed to make the bridge's low nine-foot clearance.

According to police reports, Thomas Duchesne '94 was traveling west on St. George Street at 15 to 20 mph when the truck collided with the bridge, sheering the top one to two feet from most of the truck's cargo section and scraping the face of the bridge. Police are not planning to file any charges against Duchesne, who rented the truck from West Branch Rent-All minutes before the collision.

Public safety Officer Anthony Mileto said the twenty-four-foot truck had to be removed by releasing air from the tires and "gunning it in reverse until it lodged loose."

Mileto noted that new, larger caution signs had been erected on the bridge, which was also recently painted by members of Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity.

In recent years the bridge has been the sight of numerous accidents. Most have involved rental trucks, since drivers are unaccustomed to the vehicle's size.

'Giving Tree' promotes philanthropic efforts

BY TARA GILLIGAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

What would Christmas be if, instead of glimmering ornaments on the tree and piles of presents under it, the ornaments themselves contained gift suggestions and nothing but a pile of dried pine needles lay on the floor below?

Bison Volunteers, a loosely structured organization under the direction of Ruth Burnham, associate dean for orientation and activities, thought this image captured the Christmas season pretty well. So, for the second year in a row, the organization is sponsoring "The Giving Tree" in hopes of brightening the holidays for needy people in the area.

"The Giving Tree" is located on the second floor of the Elane Langone Center, and is covered by paper snowflakes and blue and orange ribbons. Each snowflake has on its back the name of a needy individual and several gift suggestions. When students, faculty, or staff agree to donate the requested items, ribbons replace the individual snowflakes.

Stacy Hetherington '95, who works under Burnham as a community service intern, said that she solicited the names and gift suggestions from three local organizations: the Lewisburg United Methodist Home, a senior citizen home; Laurelton, an organization for the mentally retarded; and Concern, a professional service which provides primarily for foster children.

While the average cost of each gift falls between $10 and $15, according to Hetherington, some children aimed a bit higher. Beth Archer '94, assistant community service intern, said that children submitted "wish lists" of three items. Common requests included walkmen, video games and Harley-Davidson tee-shirts.

Archer said that she herself had agreed to buy a gift for an elderly woman. Requests for perfumes and soaps were more common among this group.

Amy Clare—The Bucknellian

Each snowflake on the tree represents an opportunity for Bucknell students to give a gift to underprivileged children in the area.

In total, 120 snowflakes, each representing a different person's Christmas wish, hung from the tree. Now, blue and orange cover most of the branches. "I looked at it the other day and I think that most of the snowflakes are gone," said Archer.

Archer went on to say that some clubs and hall groups have jointly donated gifts. "I live in Vedder and my hall is giving two gifts," she said.

If by Dec. 11, the last day possible to donate a gift, all snowflakes have not been traded in for ribbons, members of Bison Volunteers will donate the remainder of the presents. No funding exists for this purpose, and Bison Volunteers would have to dig into "personal savings. And then we'll try to get reimbursed," said Hetherington.

system "is a mistake."

A number of professors in the department "objected to the idea that these might be used to measure a course, whether it would be easy or hard," according to Taylor. Some faculty feel that this "might steer students away from good courses because they are perceived as being hard."

Richard Waller, chair of the History department, indicated that faculty from his department had sent a letter to the BSG communicating their feelings on the topic.

Waller says that they are not against the idea and "that student evaluations are important," as well as being mandatory for departmental reviews. However, some professors in the department thought that it should be "open to individual members to make their evaluations available to the BSG," and that the process should not be mandatory.

Sherer disagrees, wondering if hesitation on the part of the faculty actually stems from fear of what students will say. "They believe they will be poorly evaluated and therefore come up with poor excuses not to participate."

Sherer also takes issue with claims that the process should be voluntary to faculty, saying "there's no reason students should not have access to this information. It will simply be another resource enabling students to make educated decisions about the courses they wish to take. It's certainly better than getting one other student's opinion on a course."

According to Mannix, "originally there was not much criticism, but as time went by there has been more and more." He says that the idea of Veritas is "not trying to put teachers in a negative light" and that "it probably helps them find out what students really think."

Professors may believe that their students think of them in a vastly different way than they really do." Furthermore, he indicates that the BSG "can work with faculty" since "this is only a trial and nothing is set in stone."

"While I understand that untenured faculty may be wary of distributing such a form, for fear it will be used against them when they are up for review, this is not a big issue," assures Sherer.

While BSG considered having students distribute the forms when opposition from faculty was encountered, Sherer says "that's simply not feasible this late in the game. It would definitely be most effective if all faculty distributed the form and that's the route we're going to take. I anticipate poor participation in some departments and I think that's a real sad commentary."

bathrooms in the space near the exit that was office space, heating and air conditioning and wiring for phones.

Burnham said, "The three things that surfaced most often in TIP recommendations were the craft shop, social space, and organization space."

Burnham said that the craft shop, which currently resides in the basement of Hunt, was dispossessed of adequate space in the renovations of the new Bison. As a result, the craft shop will occupy the other fairly big room.

Burnham said that eventually the psychology department may be relocated and that the space they leave will be utilized as offices for student organizations. She said that the process of deciding which organizations get the space is still "up in the air." Burnham said, "There will be a net gain in space. How it is handled has to be figured out."

However, one way may be for organizations to submit applications to a student board who will evaluate them based on the organization's productivity, goals, and the like. Burnham said that not every organization on campus needs an office, but some organizations have supplies and archival material that needs to be stored in an office where it can be accessible to its members.

As the director of the Space Committee, Barry Maxwell coordinates the committee's activities to review tough issues over space and makes recommendations to the Presidential staff.

Concerning the Old Bison renovations, Maxwell said, "We are trying to figure out the most effective way to utilize space to best address the programmatic needs of the University."

As for when this project will be complete, Maxwell said that one complicating factor is that a place is needed to relocate the psychological offices still occupying the Old Bison.

He said it is possible to renovate the vacated parts while trying to relocate the psychological offices, however the constructors may want to wait until the place is completely vacant so they can do their work unhindered.

According to Maxwell, many uncertainties affect establishing a definite time schedule for the project. Maxwell said, "The hope is to have this project done during the summer of 1992."

Maxwell added that there is no guarantee that this will occur, but that that vague date is a goal.

Sexual assault at Bucknell addressed

BY TIMOTHY W. KIRK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Though no progress has been made on the investigation of the most recent sexual assault on November 15th, the completion of many goals and strengthening of existing resources has enabled the University to deal with the issue of sexual assault more effectively.

"We are not exempt from the problems and crime which plagues the rest of society," says Vincent DeCerchio, director of public safety. "We are simply a microcosm, a small community which experiences the same problems as any other."

Pointing to issues raised last semester, DeCerchio noted all of them are being addressed. As a result of the lighting tour in October, lights are being installed in areas deemed deficient in lighting. Night patrols have been increased, and the security escort service has been supplemented on Saturday nights by the Delta Delta Delta Safe Ride escort service.

Amy Clare—The Bucknellian
The November 15 attack occured at 1:30 am near the corner of St. Catherine and Seventh Streets. There has been no progress made in the investigation due to a lack of information.

The crime alert procedure has progressed to an efficiency which allows alerts to be written, printed, and distributed within a period of hours after the incident occurs. This, in addition to the approval and publication of the new sexual assault policy and various letters and guidelines established by the University have served to increased campus awareness of sexual assault.

Yet, the problem still persists. Two assaults were reported this semester, both of which remain crimes unsolved.

"We need more time for the changes to take effect," says DeCerchio. "We have made a significant number of improvements and it's not accurate to assess our progress based on the first six months. This could be a spurt, and I do think it is out of the ordinary. We take these assaults very seriously, but we need to give it time."

Sexual assault is a community-wide problem which mandates a universal effort in order to quell future assaults. "This is not the problem of the Office of Public Safety or the Women's Resource Center," says DeCerchio. "This is everyone's problem."

When asked if Bucknell was a safe campus, DeCerchio responded with an emphatic yes. "No community is one-hundred percent safe, but our job is to make it one of the safest campuses nation-wide, and I think you'll find Bucknell at the top of the list."

Both DeCerchio and Janice Butler, director of the Women's Resource Center, point to the relationship between sexual crimes and alcohol. Speaking earlier this year on the topic, Butler noted, "There is a statistically proven link between alcohol and sexual harassment and assault. An overwhelming majority of the cases reported involve alcohol in one way or another."

DeCerchio echoes Butler's comments. "Many incidents involve individuals under the influence who would never normally commit such crimes, but since the alcohol has clouded their inhibitions, they go right ahead. I wouldn't be surprised if that was the case in one or both of the incidents this semester. Alcohol is a definite factor."

The issue has also been brought to the forefront by victims coming forth and reporting incidents. The recent conviction of Donald Perkoski in two incidents, open ludeness and indecent exposure, are a direct result of victims working with authorities to apprehend perpetrators of sexual crimes.

"There's no question that victims are coming forth quicker and with every intention to do what is

Campus gang rape addressed in lecture

BY SUE BASALLA
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Former assistant professor of psychology Chris O'Sullivan returned to campus last Tuesday to lecture on a topic which necessitated telling disgusting tales about fraternity rituals and athletic team initiations.

Ever heard of Ooky Cooky? Consider yourself lucky.

O'Sullivan described these practices as a means of approaching her larger concern: the prevalence of group sexual assault on college campuses.

A social psychologist with an M.A. in linguistics and a Ph.D. in experimental psychology, O'Sullivan described the data she gathered in her classroom experiences. For example, O'Sullivan asked a class of 52 students if they'd ever heard of three or more men having sex with a woman. Forty-seven responded with various stories. "Most of these incidents weren't considered rape by the students describing them," O'Sullivan said. "I don't want to argue the legal issue, I want to address why men do this."

"90% of gang rapes on campuses are committed by members of the same fraternity or athletic team. It's easy to explain this percentage. These men live together, they party together, they have their own space. But I'm concerned about the social structure of these groups and what social behavior they learn in these groups," O'Sullivan said.

"Not all fraternity men or all athletes are rapists. But there is a connection...At the trials I have attended for some of these assualts, ministers testified that these are 'nice boys.' And I'm sure that they are nice to their girlfriends or whoever. This behavior is an aberration for them, and that's why we must examine it."

Several factors make group sexual assualt more possible and more probable in athletic teams and fraternities, O'Sullivan argued. For example, excessive use of alcohol, approval of violence, and excessively competitive attitudes all contribute toward a dangerous kind of male-bonding.

Basing her statements in part on interviews with students at Bucknell and at Hamilton College, O'Sullivan compared pledging a fraternity (or being intitiated into a sports team) with entering boot camp. Male initiates learn a "moral sense that benefits the group, and this mentality facilitates aggression towards outsiders. Women are outsiders to the group, so it's okay to hurt them," explained O'Sullivan.

"Why do men join fraternities? They want close emotional ties with men, not women. Women can interfere with their bonding... Men don't learn to listen to women; they learn to disrespect and abuse women...Students have told me about weekly fraternity meetings in which brothers compete to tell the most disgusting story about their dates." Concluded O'Sullivan, "An exploitive relationship with women helps strengthen the male bond."

As a final comment, O'Sullivan offered her suggestions on "how fraternity brothers or athletes can avoid being falsely accused of sexual assualt: Don't have sex if you'll think less of her afterwards. Don't have sex with disdain, disgust or anger."

Student pleads guilty in fire alarm incident

BY TARA GILLIGAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

Jeffrey Mangel '94 has pleaded guilty to two summary offenses levied against him for activating a fire alarm on the first floor of West Vedder hall early in September.

Although the charges, disorderly conduct and criminal mischief, each carry a maximum sentence of $300 or 90 days in jail, Mangel's entire sentence has been set at $400. Broken down, the fine included $300 for disorderly conduct and $100 for criminal mischief—tampering with property. Court costs added another $69.

Mangel will also be required to serve on 180 days of unsupervised probation.

Additionally, Mangel said he received an "administrative warning" from the University.

Originally, the Lewisburg Police Department (LPD) also charged Mangel with one first degree misdemeanor for activating a false alarm. This charge, which carries a maximum sentence of five years in prison or a $10,000 fine, has since been dismissed.

Because Mangel pleaded guilty to the two summary offences, Dale Yount of the LPD agreed to drop the charge misdemeanor.

According to his initial testimony, Mangel said he accidentally activated the pull station while checking to see if it contained ink. As an aid to catching criminals, some pull stations shoot dark ink at a person who activates the alarm.

Two other students, Michael DeCastro '94 and Daniel Spector '94, were present when the incident occurred. No charges were filed against either of them. "The other two guys were not culpable and were referred to the Dean's office," said Vince DeCerchio, director of public safety.

DeCerchio went on to say that he believes DeCastro and Spector received only warnings and that one of them had actually tried to talk Mangel out of pulling the alarm.

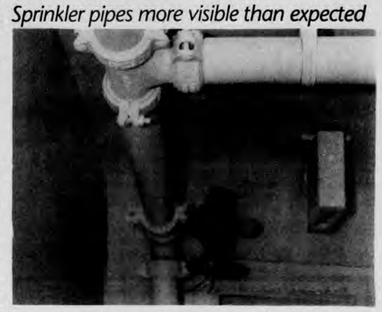
The October 3 incident took place shortly after 10:52 pm on the pathway between Rooke Chapel and the Langone Center. This pathway was one of the areas determined to have deficient lighting.

Reconstruction nears completion at Phi Psi

Sprinkler pipes more visible than expected



Peter Ho—The Bucknellian

BY K. LARS BRUNS
Bucknellian Staff Writer

The reconstruction of the Phi Psi house is finally nearing completion as the contractor is expected to finish the University mandated sprinkler system within a week.

Originally, the sprinkler system was desired to be constructed out of sight and constructed within the walls of the house. This would have proved to be too costly after a bid of over $100,000 was received.

Instead, "a bid of $43,000 was accepted and we're working with the contractors to try and route the system the best way," according to Jim Hostetler, manager of construction for the University.

The second and first floors of the house are finished and there were no changes made to these plans, which do not conceal the pipes.

On the first floor, "We're trying our best to route the system the best way. We did manage to keep the library free of any pipe," said Hostetler.

The first floor should be fin-

"Unfortunately, these beams were old, dry wood and when they were dissassembled, they basically became splinters" said Hostetler necessary to catch their attacker," notes DeCerchio. "Students are much quicker to bring to our attention inappropriate behavior. The increased awareness has helped victims realize that it is not their fault and that we will work with them in confidence."

Agreeing with DeCerchio's placement of blame for sexual crimes, Butler asserts, "The only person responsible for committing a sexual offense is the perpetrator."

The Office of Public Safety and the Women's Resource Center work together in cases of sexual assault, but nothing is told to security without the permission of the victim. While DeCerchio notes that the apprehension of the offender is aided greatly by as much information as possible from the victim, he respects the rights of the victim and understands the stress involved in such situations. "It's easy to say 'make sure and get a good look at his face,'" notes DeCerchio, "but obviously the safety and security of the victim is the primary concern."

Both DeCerchio and Butler agree that the underlying problem rests in the fundamental attitudes and perceptions of sexuality and role playing which are still promoted by society.

Butler noted that for alcohol to enable one to take offensive action, the notion of such action and it's place in the relationship between male and female must already be present in the mind of the perpetrator.

O'Conner is a 1985 graduate of Bucknell, and has worked as an instructor with Bucknell's Japanese Teachers' program for the past five years. In 1985, she was a Mombusho English Fellow in Japan, and has been a seminar assistant with the Bucknell Seminar for Younger Poets for the past four years.

Her poetry has been published in several literary magazines, including "West Branch," "Poetry," and "The Irish Voice." Her reading will be free to all who attend.

Starting off at the corner of North Water and Market Streeets, the parade will proceed down Market to North Seventh Street, where it will turn right and end at Daniel Green Field.

Off Campus

Alcohol proposal offered at CMU

Jon Caron, president of Carnegie Mellon Pi Lambda Phi fraternity recently submitted a new alcohol policy to the InterFraternity Council.

This draft is intended to represent the growing awareness of alcohol and alcohol-related problems on campus.

The proposed policy provides that each activity must have a stated ending time after which no alcohol may be served; all guests must be checked for ID and marked according to whether they are under 21, or 21 and older; no visibly intoxicated person may be served alcohol, each house hosting a party must provide a "sober patrol," a group of house members who stay sober for the entire party and monitor alcohol use at the party; and the prohibition of the "purchase and/or use of a bulk quantity of...alcoholic beverage," including kegs.

The policy also states that no uninvited guests may attend Greek parties, thus ending the days of "all women invited."

The proposal is expected to undergo further revisions, but students and faculty agree that it is a stepping stone for future changes in the fraternity party system.

Mock trial points out date rape

The students of Skidmore College presented a mock rape trial to an audience filled with classmates and faculty. Their goal was to bring awareness to the ever-present threat of date rape on campus.

The trial consisted of two students, seniors Adam Gibgot and Amy Lynn Fisher playing litigants in a mock court case presided over by an actual judge. The trial resulted in a hung jury, the members having been randomly picked from the audience, ten of the twelve favoring the defendant.

Although it took over two hours, the trial was "well-received," and many involved feel that it should have begun sooner. Organizers were "extremely pleased with the results."

Amherst looks at "green" house

Members of the College Council at Amherst College are determined to make changes for the students next year, including sprucing up the housing and all the special-interest houses on campus.

Among several proposed ideas, the one which the classmates want to succeed is a new theme house, called "Green House," which will focus on environmental issues.

The co-sponsors of the proposal are currently looking into possible housing, but no definite plans have been set for the opening of the special-interest house.

Attempted rape suspect sought

Officials at Binghamton University are searching for a male who attempted to rape a female student while she was in her dormitory room.

The man allegedly came into her room by way of her unlocked door, and attempted to sexually accost her. Students also living in the building heard her screaming, and by the time they could get the door unlocked, the suspect had fled from the building via the victim's window. Police barricaded the streets surrounding the location of the incident, called K-9 patrols, and locked all residence hall doors, but were unsuccessful in their attempts to find the suspect.

Since the incident, several dorm meetings have been held, once again explaining the need for caution and safety measures

Hilltop Film Series brings classic and foreign movies

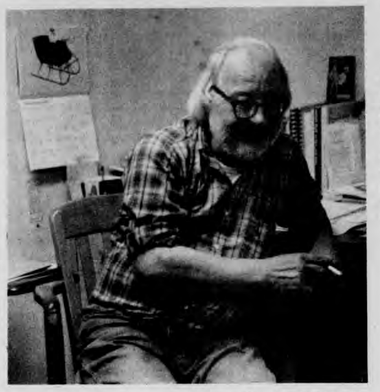
BY NICOLE COBBAN
Bucknellian Staff Writer

People always talk about the "Bucknell Bubble" and the limits that it places on the students. There is an organization, however, that will give students the pin to break the shell that hovers over the campus. The Hilltop Film Series is "a University-funded program making available at no charge a selection of films old, and new, in a variety of styles and languages from a variety of nations and cultures."

The process for choosing the films is simple, but crucial. In February a committee sits down and sifts through catalogues from distributors. An initial list is composed by all the members, and then there are further meetings to discuss the films. The committee votes on the final selections that will go on to comprise the catalog of movies that is to be shown the following year.

There are no guidelines or prerequisites to the selections made by the committee. The only one is that "they be good," which doesn't mean that a film has to be old. Included in this year's list are Jesus of Montreal and Mystery Train, both films released in 1989, but already considered to be classics. The films are shown Fridays at 4:30 and 8:00 p.m. in the Vaughan Literature Auditorium.

The goal of the films is to broaden and support the students' education. Karl Patten, one of the members of the selection committee, reaffirms that the Hilltop Film Series helps to round out the Bucknell students by exposing them to "the kinds of films people ought to see. It makes their education a great deal richer."



Amy Clare—The Bucknellian

Karl Patten, member of the Hilltop Film Series committee. Films are shown Fridays at 4:30 and 8:00 p.m. in Vaughan Lit. Auditorium.

Over the years the program has been fairly popular, and different films always draw out different kinds of audiences. But there is always a steady stream of regular viewers. "There's a part of the campus that couldn't do without it," Patten explains. "I guess there are those elements of the student body and faculty that want to be challenged by films. It makes them think, unlike most films."

For that section of the audience, the Hilltop Film Series does seem to be the only outlet. Miles from any city that might show classic or foreign films, and the Campus Theater months behind current releases, the Series offers a breath of fresh air for those moviegoers serious about the movies they watch.

But few people realize the tremendous resource available to them. A New York film distributor cited Bucknell as having one of the top two best college film programs. Patten agrees. "For years I think it's been one of the great advantages of being at Bucknell. Not everyone on the campus knows that. Oddly enough, the distributors do."

Chanticleer to present an a cappella holiday concert

BY LAURA GRISIN
Buckellian Staff Writer

Chanticleer, the only full-time professional a cappella vocal ensemble in the United States, will present a winter holiday concert tonight at 8 p.m. in the Weis Center.

Reputed as "an orchestra of voices" ranging from countertenor to bass, the group will present a program of sacred and secular Christmas music of more than five centuries, largely from their recent and acclaimed recording, Our Heart's Joy: A Chanticleer Christmas.

"Their Christmas program is especially moving and beautiful," says William Boswell, director of cultural events. "I have been pleased by the enthusiastic and wide response to this rare Pennsylvania appearance. Fans are calling from more than 2 hours drive away."

The concert will include arrangements of traditional seasonal favorites such as "Winter Wonderland," "Away in a Manger," and "Good King Wenceslas," Renaissance music, and a medley of Christmas spirituals. The liner notes to their most recent album reads, "Music such as this, sung by the men of Chanticleer, can be not only a haven, but an invitation to participate in our power to create and nurture life, and an invitation to honor this magical ability, first and foremost, in ourselves."

Tickets will be available at the Weis Center box office prior to the performance.

Defending Your Life is enchanting and funny

-Video Review-

Defending Your Life, Rated PG— Written, directed, and starring Albert Brooks. Brooks plays a man, caught in Limbo, who is forced to defend his life in order to gain admission into heaven. While undergoing his trial, he meets Julia, played by Meryl Streep, and he gets caught in a light and comedic love story.

BY PAT MCCORMICK
Bucknellian Staff Writer

There's a very good chance that many of you missed one of the best light comedies of the year. Defending Your Life, written and directed by Albert Brooks, did not open on many screens. Where the movie did play, it didn't stay around for very long. Brooks (Broadcast News), stars as Daniel Miller, a man who, in the last seconds of his life, drives his convertible into a bus, and is forced to, as the title suggests, defend his stay on Earth successfully in a hovering medium between heaven and Earth adequately named "Judgement City," where the food is great and the visitors can never gain weight. If Miller is successful, he moves on to an unknown and clearly more promising dimension than the alternative destination, Earth, where he will be forced to be less fearful in an entirely different life.

In the time of his "trial," Daniel meets Julia, played by Meryl Streep (Postcards From the Edge, Out of Africa), and easily impresses her with his sense of humor while finding Julia's simplicity appealing in contrast with the "perfect" wife he left behind. Because of this mutual admiration and the fact that they were the only two people of their age in the city, they predictably fall in love. Now, Miller finds himself faced with the biggest decision of his life, or rather, afterlife.

Rip Torn is oddly funny as Miller's super-human defense attorney, who is quite confident of abilities, as he utilizes forty-nine percent of his brain whereas humans only use about four or five percent. Actually, the entire film is oddly funny and enchanting. Brooks' laid back and groaning dialogue keeps his audience smiling without allowing them to fall to the floor clutching their stomachs from laughter. A gentle sardonic look to his attorney, or a light remark to Julia tells us that only Brooks himself could have written like this for Miller's character. With the help of Streep's and Brooks' delicately humorous script, the two present a strong case for themselves on screen, not difficult to defend.

Be all that you can be in the R.O.T.C.

The Bucknell Bison Battalion cadets work hard, play hard and rise at six a.m.! These cadets receive a taste of 'life after college' early.

Daryl Hodgkinson—The Bucknellian

Twice a year, cadets gather to compete in a Field Training Excercise(FTX),which includes basic military skills such as rappelling and marksmanship.

BY ELIZABETH DANNEBERG
Bucknellian Staff Writer

If you have ever thought that you did not get enough sleep, think again, for you could be in the ROTC. Although Bucknell's ROTC program, short for Reserve Officer Training Corps, does not take up all of the time of its cadets, between other activities and their books, these students are fortunate if they get five hours of sleep a night. "You learn to buy more than one alarm," says Matt Evans '95, an ROTC neophyte and one of the 44 students involved the program. Evans is an engineering major as well, which, combined with ROTC, leaves little time for idleness.

Contrary to popular belief, ROTC is not the master of these students' lives. In fact, the program emphasizes that ROTC and all other activities come secondary to academics. The cadets receive a great deal of support concerning their workload on three different levels, mentions Chris Norrie '92, Bucknell Bison Battalion Commander (head honcho of the cadets). He adds, "There is the cadre level, which are the ROTC teachers; the squad leader level, which are the cadets that foster a caring environment in which everyone can do well; and the tutor list, which includes a list of everyone's major." Oliver Hasse, presently a second-semester sophomore because he served stateside for Operation Desert Storm, adds, "It's at a personal level...you're never afraid to call someone at home."

The ROTC cadets do not live by books and military science alone, however. The program encourages participation in other activities. "They bend over backwards so you can fully experience the Bucknell community," says Norrie. In the Bucknell Alpha Company, which includes three Susquehanna University and nine Lycoming College students, 18 out of 56 cadets are involved in Greek life, three are involved in student government, and ten are varsity athletes.

Christena Johnston '94 is not only the treasurer of the ROTC adventure club, organized for cadet sportsmanship; she is a member of Delta Gamma sorority and the crew team as well. Despite conflicts of physical training and crew practice in the early morning hours, Johnston explains that ROTC "lets me work out something so that I can balance the two practices." As a sophomore, Johnston's ROTC requirements are two hours of physical training (PT) on Mondays and Wednesdays, and one-and-a-half hours of military science class per week.

Johnston does not seem to mind that she is one of four female cadets this year. "Females in the military command as much respect as anyone involved...it takes a lot of guts to be who they are, do what they do, and do it well," says Norrie.

Having this respect for each other has resulted in a tight bonding between the members. Johnston recalls a common experience, "after being up for 48 hours for FTX (Field Training Exercise), you bond together no matter what." Hasse adds, "it helps you a lot in teamwork...you feel for each other's weaknesses." Thus between early morning PT, military science class, ROTC competitions and clubs, it should be no surprise that the group has emotional ties with one another. ROTC is similar to many other organizations on campus in that a formal social event is planned each semester. In the fall semester there is an officers' "dining-in," and in the spring an awards banquet is held.

For these cadets, the military is not only a way of life for them now, but it will be for many years after they graduate. They are the Army officers of the future...if they pass the test. Essentially, the first three years of ROTC consist of preparation for advanced camp, a test of leadership skills. To make things clearer, Evans explains, "advanced camp is like the SAT." The final score from this test, along with other factors, is necessary for applying to the army.

In preparation for the test, freshmen such as Evans, at level MS1, are taught basic military skills. MS2, comprised of mostly sophomores, takes an increased responsibility within the Battalion and assists the squad leaders. MS3 is the biggest year (usually the cadets' junior year) and involves intensive preparation for advanced camp.

In addition to preparing cadets for advanced camp, ROTC "offers training for real Army units, such as Airborne school, Air Assault school, Northern Warfare school, and Master Fitness school," says Phil Engle '92, the staff adjudant of the Bucknell Bison Battalion. Engle plans on applying to the Ordinance school, one of the 16 different branches of the Army that one may enter after graduation.

Although Bucknell's ROTC program exists to give students an idea of what the real Army is like, and to develop its cadets to be leaders, surprisingly, "more than half of the cadets join the reserves after they graduate," says Lieutenant Colonel MacIver, who teaches the military science classes. He adds that approximately 60% stay with the army to become officers, while 40% do not continue after the reserves. The cadets receive the best of both worlds though, because they are able to have a college experience at the same time. Keeping the balance between books, ROTC, and a social life, these cadets are no ordinary students. They receive a taste of the real world even before they are thrust into it.

The Collegiate Perspective (and other fairy tales)

Peter Lalos

According to the most recently added section of Bucknell University's academic core requirement handbook (part 5, article IV, subsection F, Vitamin A), each student enrolled at the institution is required to re-qualify for admission by passing a comprehensive examination covering information of which the administration, faculty, and board of trustees believes every student should be knowledgeable. This ordinance, which has been in effect since the fall 1990 semester, outlines that only a perfect score on this exam will qualify students for re-admittance to the University for the following year.

Bison on the Loose

BY CHRISTINA SOTO

"City sidewalks, busy sidewalks, dressed in holiday style, in the air there's a feeling of Christmas." Christmas time is the best time of the year in New York City. Santas on every street corner, decorated store windows, the Rockefeller Christmas tree, all the hustle and bustle...it's a sight to see. This Christmas why not treat yourself to a day in the Big Apple. I'm sure that many of you have been there with your family before. You've seen The Empire State Building and the World Trade Center, but here are some places you can go without your parents.

For a day of shopping, people watching and exotic eating, make your way down to Greenwich Village. For great ethnic jewelry, hair pieces, sweaters (like the ones they sell in the bookstore only cheaper), t-shirts, you name it, take a walk on St. Mark's Street. The atmosphere is great and running into a couple of nose rings and purple mohawks will be refreshing after the Bucknell bubble. Broadway between St. Mark's and 3rd Street is great for more of the unusual. Be sure to stop in Tower Records on 4th Street and the flea market next door.

When you get hungry there are plenty of places to eat in the Village. If you're in the mood for Indian food, 6th Street between 1st and 2nd avenues is lined with excellent Indian restaurants. For some Chino-Latino food Bayamo on 4th and Broadway is great. Of course, if you're in the mood for good American food, MacDougals (located at 89 MacDougal Street), an outdoor cafe, is perfect. For the number one pizza in the city go to Golden Pizza on Carmine Street. When you want more than a snack, but less than a meal, Cafe Lucca (228 Bleeker Street), and The Village Corner (corner of Bleeker Street and LaGuardia Place), are my favorites.

If you are still there by nightfall there is a lot of excitement waiting for you. Some great bars are McSorley's (7th Street between 2nd and 3rd streets), which has been around since the 1800's; Jimmy's (98 MacDougal Street); and the White Horse Tavern on Hudson Street. If you're into the dancing scene you can always go to the Paladium on 42nd Street, but I prefer the Limelight on West 23rd Street or Mars on West 17th Street.

Remember when you visit New York City to travel by public transportation, because parking is never easy. Buses to the Port Authority, trains to Penn Station and the Path coming from Hoboken are not expensive and they cut down on the hassle. So grab some friends on one of those boring days of Christmas vacation and visit some of these hot spots. It's a guaranteed good time.

Bison Tales

Lately, I've been getting a little tired of those whiny, self-indulgent letters-to-the-editor cluttering up the Opinions section like broken- offpieces of potato-chips in onion-dip, which bother me almost as much as unnecessary hyphen-usage. I was going to write a letter-to-the-editor complaining about the whole thing, but I figured that might be defeating the purpose. No, instead I'll write a whiny, self-indulgent column complaining about the whole thing. In case you are one of those people who goes straight for the McNutt cartoon and skips the letters-to-the-editor, they usually look something like this:

Dear Editors:

I never thought I'd see the day that I, a proud and enthusiastic student, would write a letter to the Bucknellian, but the other day, I was so offended by something that I thought I was just going to explode!!! I mean the sheer and utter... offensiveness of it was just seething out my pores like lava out of Mount Shasta. Now, as a triple Engineering/Biology/Economics major with a minor in theater, a frequent contributor to most worthy charities, a second-place winner of the limbo competition at Dougie Shalowitz's coming-out party, and a dark-haired, left-handed, spectacle-wearing, homosexual atheist, I feel it is my God-given right to speak up and address the current, offensive tragedy that plagues this infernal campus and all of man-kind for that matter!!! In fact, being a three-time recipient of the national Vector Bloodclot Marginalpropensitychutzpah award for my ambitious majors, and as a conscientious worker with perspicacious proofreading proofreading skill, I am sensitively attuned to the gross apathy and lack of morals on the part of the rticular people that I plan to complain about just as soon as I get finished telling you about this time in third grade when my father single-handedly...

Of course, once you get past the resume and the bold type, some of our campus concerns are quite enthralling. A few weeks ago, an enraged member of the local "Young Republicans" organization wrote in to complain about the president of the club. (I won't bother to mention his name, because my own feeling is that he craves publicity in the same way that the Cuckoo bird on Saturday morning commercials craves "Trix" cereal.) Anyway, the leader of the club was supposedly engaging in unethical and scandalous tactics. My first response was, of course, shock. "REPUBLICANS... SCANDAL... NEVER!!!" I shouted, while inspecting the top of my Pepsi can for mysterious follicles. But, as I delved further into the story, I discovered that, indeed, the president of the club was forcing his members into committing several unspeakable crimes including 1. Making jokes about poor people. 2. Secretly planting spies in various campus "liberal" organizations. 3. Using subliminal messages to cajole the student body into thinking that it is a Cuckoo bird who endorses "Trix" cereal, when really it is a "silly rabbit." (The Cuckoo bird likes Cocoa Puffs.) Of course, being an oatmeal man myself, I thought the second crime seemed the most horrible, and I can just imagine the backlash in the local umbrella groups when they got wind:

Liberal Student #1: (banging gavel) This meeting of Indignant, Oppressed, Politically Correct, Angry, Sober, Environmentally Conscious, Did We Mention Oppressed?, Students (IOPC ASECDWMO?SZTV) will come to order. It has come to my attention that there is a malevolent imposter among us. So will all persons here please put down their Styrofoam coffee cups and recite our club creed.

Imposter Liberal Student #1: (making peace sign while indicating his tie-dye shirt and laughing nervously) Heh, heh. Couldn't be me, I love all men and girls...oops, uh, I mean I love all of mankind...uh, no, uh, The Wall Street Journal is for fairies, ur, I mean homos...oh damn.

L.S. #1: Well, people. It seems we have found our spy. What should we do with him?

All Club Members (in unison) Educate him, educate him! Hold a symposium!

Imposter: No, please! Anything but that.

The most recent controversy involved Bison Programming Committe's request that "Some Assembly Required", the newly- founded, talented campus comedy troupe, tone down their act (from a previous performance in September) before they were featured again as part of Bucknell's-Big-Bison-Birthday-Bash. One angered member of "Some Assembly Required", the newly-founded, immensely-talented campus comedy troupe, voiced a polite complaint about the whole thing, in a letter to the editor, calling BPC a bunch of "Neo-Nazi Facists" with no talent for creative alliteration. This remark instigated an independent letter to the editor from a member of BPC who remarked that not only was he offended by "Some Assembly Required"s (the newly founded, God-like and immensely-talented campus comedy troupe) original performance, but he was still offended by the group's toned-down presentation where they "mocked" political correctness. Apparently, any attempt to satirize the idea of "political correctness" should be banned because it would demean the quest of politically correct people everywhere to create a world where oppression no longer exists and where everyone is free to listen to 2 Live Crew albums and yell "fire" in XXX movie theaters in Sarasota, Florida. A world where Bison performers feelingly strum acoustic guitars while humming James Taylor tunes and puffing soulfully on a harmonica in a mellow, sentimental manner, while the audience sways, holds hands, and munches Domino's Pizza.

Seriously, though, everyone should have the opportunity to vent their personal thoughts, just as long as I can make them out through the onion-dip-smears.

Couples young and old come together on Thursday nights to learn the art of social dance

BY JAY PAULL
Bucknellian Staff Writer

In the large, cavernous Larison dining hall, students and area residents gather every Thursday evening to learn the art of social dance. There are no chandeliers, fancy evening gowns, or tuxedos, just ordinary people with a common interest.

Yuppy'ish Lewisburg residents Brad and Ruth Schambach have been dancing since the 1970's and have regularly attended Bucknell's social dance class for two years. "We love it!" they both exclaim, adding that it's a fun, recreational activity as well as good exercise.

Dr. Charles Pinter, professor of mathematics, and his wife Donna have been studying dance for months. He is European and desired to learn more American dances which his wife already knew. Now they are able to dance at various area functions nearly every weekend. "It's fantastic," he grins. After working a 12 hour day, Donna says the temptation to vegetate at home is great, but that she finds dancing invigorating. "It's an activity for everyone of every age."

"It makes a good study break," claims Katy Thornton '92. Her friend Dave Ehrlich '92 agrees and adds "It's fun because there are a lot of different skill levels."

And that there are. Experience ranges from first-timers to those who have danced for years. Nearly all ages are represented. The youngest participant is six year old Elizabeth Litzel of Northumberland who likes to come because "it's fun."

Standing in the center of the room leading the action is dance instructor Joan Moyer Clark. She not only possesses the agility of a dancer, but looks like one too. Tall and slender, wearing heavy makeup and a miniskirt revealing perfectly toned legs, fifty-something Clark announces "O.K., everyone line up please." Women line up on one side of the dance floor facing the men on the other side.

Tonight the group is working on the Cha-cha and the Jitterbug. Throughout the semester, the Waltz and other slow dances, the Somba, and the Tango are taught as well. Clark reviews the previous week's lesson, demonstrates the new steps, and then the fun begins.

Couples pair together, find an area on the dance floor, and begin to practice. While music from antiquated records plays in the background on a small record player, Clark's gravely voice reverberates like that of a drill sergeant's. While clapping her hands, she chants "One-two, cha-cha-cha...One-two, cha-cha-cha..."

Some couples step clumsily across the floor, narrowly missing each other's feet. Some argue among themselves about who should be doing what. Some laugh. Some are serious. Others stand in awe of the fast-learners who resemble professionals. Clark flits from group to group offering assistance.

"He does what he wants to!" exclaims Joannah Skucek of Mifflinburg, referring to her husband and partner Rudi. Retorts Clark "It's only his first night, he can't be Fred Astaire." To another couple she directs "Don't use your feet that way—there you go!"

Students have plenty of praise for Clark. "She makes it fun—more artistic," comments ten year old Stephen Foster of Northumberland. Undoubtedly her teaching expertise comes from years of experience. She started to dance when she was three and has trained at the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore, The Ballet Theatre, and the Alvin Ailey Dance School in New York.

She began teaching at 14 and has choreographed extensively for television as well as early Atlantic City stage shows. "I just love to teach," says the bubbly and energetic native of York, PA.

Although social dance has only been offered for three years, Clark has been teaching at Bucknell since 1954. She currently teaches three to four other classes as well as conditioning programs for the women's basketball team, the wrestling team, and other sports groups. The Bucknell Association for the Arts presented her with an achievement award in 1980 for her contributions to the campus and to the community. When not teaching, Clark operates the Moyer Institute of Dance in Sunbury which she opened in 1953.

She encourages everyone to take advantage of the opportunity to learn social dance at Bucknell. Although most people bring a partner, others just come by themselves. "We always seem to have a few extra people to go around," she says with a wink and a smile.

Joan Moyer Clark's social dance class meets weekly every semester on Thursday from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. in Larison Dining Hall.

Don't let winter give you the blues

BY JOYCE DOLLINGER AND LISA LIPARI
Bucknellian Staff Writers

As winter approaches and the days grow shorter, many students may feel as though the semester is closing in on them. Along with the added anxiety and pressure comes an obscure physiological condition which is very real and affects many, some of whom do not even realize it.

Seasonal Affective Disorder (S.A.D.) is a condition which occurs due to the decrease in light during the winter months. However, it need not only occur in the winter. (For example, people who work in windowless offices are affected as but of climate as well. People tend to "hibernate" in the winter due to the colder temperatures, and they tend to sleep more than they normally would. They also become irritable, anxious, and less enthusiastic. A decrease in sexual desire is also apparent. Interestingly, people tend to crave more carbohydrates; however, they exercise less, which leads to weight gain.

All this brings about feelings of depression, and the feeling that you are the only one who is experiencing such lethargy. According to Jane Wegscheider Hyman, author of The Light Book, "[people] become so withdrawn that the thought of going to a party is agony...[they] often feel self-blame for not being able to

This graph demonstrates the sun's ability to affect one's performance on activities. Ideal times to perform certain activities are also shown.

Such despair is the result of an upset in the body's daily rhythms.

These rhythms, called circadian rhythms, occur naturally but can vary among people. A normal rhythm occurs over a 25-hour period, and the body, under normal conditions, adjusts it's peak activity according to the availability of light. People who are physically affected by outside forces are those who work in windowless offices, work at night, or keep irregular hours. Changes from weekend to weekday schedule can affect the body adversely, even if you sleep the same amount of hours as you would during the week. Thus the "Monday morning hangover" doesn't necessarily occur due to lack of sleep, but rather a change in daily activity. Another example of an outside force affecting daily activity is the "October jolt", when the clocks are set back an hour. The British Broadcasting Corporation calls it "an annual masochistic ritual too few people have had the courage to oppose."

The body's recognition of available light begins with the retina. From this part of the eye the external stimulus is sent to the hypothalamus gland, where it is then transmitted to the pineal gland. The brain is next to receive the signal, and its internal pacemaker, or timekeeper, sends signals to the various organs in the body, keeping them all in synch. Thus an internal equilibrium is reached, in which disruption justifies changes in mood and behavior.

Even though the resulting depression may seem neverending, ultimately there are methods of treatment. Light therapy, or the use of artificial light to stimulate the body, is commonly used to treat S.A.D. While the intensity or duration of the light may vary in the treatment of different people, researchers agree that it is definitely beneficial in alleviating the symptoms which result from S.A.D. Usually the intensities of light that are administered are 5 to 20 times the intensity of normal room lighting. However, in certain cases normal room lighting has proven effective. It has also been found that ultraviolet light is not necessary for treating S.A.D., especially because of its adverse effects on other organs such as the eyes and skin.

Psychologically, there are many factors which may contribute to the mental/emotional healing as well. For example, looking at a picture of the sun is a psychological placebo in that it makes the mind think of sitting on a warm beach on a bright, sunny day. Also, the presence of many lights surrounding you is better than one intense light focused on you (for example, an overhead reading lamp); shadows tend to remind us of darkness and gloom.

Here are a few simple methods for day-to-day living for acute cases of S.A.D.: Work in rooms or offices that let in plenty of light (if this is not possible, take frequent breaks to go to a window and look at the sky), and try to get out in the fresh air at least a small part of the day, even if you don't really have to go out. Don't hibernate! The simplest cure is to stimulate the body with as much light as possible, but if you feel that you have more than an acute case of S.A.D., ask a doctor about the therapeutic opportunities awaiting you.

Compromise for the sake of students

Over the last few years several controversial issues at Bucknell have hinged on one problem: a lack of understanding and constructive dialogue between faculty and students. The disagreement between some faculty members and the Bucknell Student Government over the publishing of Veritas, a student course-evaluation guide, is the latest example of this lack of communication and compromise.

The Committee on Instruction (COI) refused to endorse the BSG proposal, choosing instead to let individual academic departments decide whether to participate in distributing the BSG's 20-question multiple-choice survey.

BSG President Alex Sherer says faculty oppose Veritas because "they believe they will be poorly evaluated and therefore come up with poor excuses not to participate."

Although the history department refused to participate in distributing the Veritas questionare, it may be willing to release its own student evaluations conducted by the department. Members of the English department are also opposed to distributing and gathering the surveys. Their "poor excuse" is nothing more than a desire to avoid reptetitive work. They are willing to release information, but not to play the BSG's game of 20 questions.

Sherer and the BSG are correct in demanding that all faculty members release such information. Every department should be willing to follow history's example; the surveys do not contain student names, and there is no reason students should be denied access to them.

COI Chair Ben Marsh said BSG's "questions were more directed at instructor performance rather than course content." Students deserve to know about an instructor's teaching style and skill, but this is just one of several pieces of information students should consider when deciding on courses. The course evaluations already used by departments provide a wide range of information, including course content and instructor performance; as such they are more comprehensive instruments for evaluating the course than the multiple-choice Veritas survey.

Students should have as much information as possible when making the important decision of course selection. However, the proposed Veritas system is unwieldly, costly, repetitive, and an incomplete measure of a course's educational worth.

Instead of setting up their own system, the BSG should rely on departmental evaluations. Students on the BSG Academic Affairs committee should compile the surveys into a book for each department, and copies of this binder should be available for view in both the library and the departmental office.

Compromising on the release of this information benefits both students and faculty. Having the most complete information will help students to choose classes that match their interests and abilities. Faculty will get students who are enthusiastic and motivated to learn.

B.P.C. contemplates its stand on "censorship"

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you Lee! Thank you for expressing your opinion and bringing the issue of censorship to the forefront of Bison Programming Committee members' minds. Since reading your opinion in the Bucknellian two weeks ago, all of us have been "put into gear." We have thought about, discussed, and debated censorship and for some of us, it was the first time we ever really contemplated our own individual stand or the committee's stand.

It was necessary for our committee to formalize our position and the recent editorial was the impetus we needed to sit down and do it. Our committee got together, shared our individual views about censorship and discussed how our committee should respond to the accusations that we are nazi, fascist censors. We developed a "marketplace of ideas." Once a multitude of ideas and opinions were on the table, we were able to identify which we felt were best for the committee as a whole. By reacting to criticism, we as a committee were forced to solidify our beliefs and grow as a unit. Also, each individual member grew intellectually as a result of our exposure to new ideas and our new found desire to "get it all straight in our own heads." The expression of an opinion, however harsh or offensive, serves, as it did here, as a learning tool and as an instigator for further expression, communication, and development of ideas.

Much has been established as a result of this beneficial controversy. It is the main job of the Bison Programming Committee to choose and contract artists to perform in the Bison. We are committed to finding the best entertainment we possibly can. Each week, we receive dozens of tapes and promo-packets from artists who want to perform here at Bucknell. As should be obvious to everyone, we cannot hire everyone that solicits us. We as an organization are thus forced to make choices. We choose based on cost, availability, references, past audience approval at Bucknell, and how "good" the artist is. True, how "good" a performer is depends on the viewer, and what is funny, appealing and considered quality to one may be unfunny, unappealing and even offensive to another. If we, as a group, feel the comedian is funny and not offensive to us, we are more likely to hire him or her than a group we feel is less funny and offensive to us. This is not censorship. This is our committee doing the best job we can of putting the funniest comedians and the most appealing musical groups on stage in the Bison. We are not telling unfunny, unappealing, or offensive acts that they cannot perform at Bucknell or in the Bison. In fact, we invite any group to rent out the Bison, Coleman Theater, the ELC forum, or stand in the quad or anywhere else on campus and perform whatever it is they want to perform. We simply are not choosing them to receive a share of our limited funds.

Members of the Bison Programming Committee preview each artist's tape in order to decide which artists we think are the best. If we like the tape, we speak to the agent or performer personally and get more information. We inform the entertainer before any contract is signed that the date of performance is during Alcohol Awareness week, the Women's Leadership Conference, or Black History Month, and we may ask if the show can be tied in, or at least not contradict, the larger theme. Most comedians have many different routines which they can perform, so this information helps the artist decide which act is most appropriate for the campus climate. The response is a criteria we take into consideration when deciding who and who not to hire. This again is not censorship. Any group is more than welcome to express its beliefs and perform any act whenever the Bison is available, but we have the right to hire and pay whomever we think is the best, most qualified entertainer for the date we have in mind. Once we

BY CHRIS O'SULLIVAN

I no longer reside within the protective confines of the Bucknell Bubble, and had hoped to escape from it into the wider world I occupied before joining the Bucknell faculty a few years ago, I find myself not quite free, however, with only one foot in the real world. Because of my experience teaching at Bucknell, I think I have some understanding of the conflicts within it; and would like to offer my thoughts on one of those conflicts, informed as well by my professional orientation (expertise, arguably) as a psychologist.

We all live with certain mind-sets, in our own cognitive universe that tends to construct our experiences and observations in certain ways, that rejects some other perspectives out of hand, and that simply does not find other perspectives. Out of sight, out of mind, they remain alien. I could apply this truism about the way the mind works to many issues of interest, or conflict of interest, in the Bucknell community.

I could, for example, apply it to those of us on the faculty who opposed the perpetuation of the Greek system, meaning, most pointedly, fraternities. Students engaged in or sympathetic to that way of life thought that we failed to understand the benefits, virtues, and beauties of fraternity life. It is true that while I was energetically and vociferously committed to diminishing if not expunging the role of fraternities at Bucknell, I kept foremost in my mind the evils I see stemming from that system. I was able to interpret every supposed virtue as another sign of weakness.

At a general and theoretical level, I believe that. I understand that fraternities discriminate; that they create an all-male culture that is dangerous to women; that philanthropic activities have nothing to do with the raison d'etre of fraternities and merely serve to provide a patina of respectability; that men who join fraternities, regardless of their academic aptitude, perform more poorly on the average than men of similar aptitude who remain independent.

At a more concrete level, though, I have no problem with fraternities. I even occasionally have warm thoughts of them and their members. It wasn't until the fight was over (and we lost), however, that I allowed myself to have any positive feelings toward fraternities. Admittedly, these sympathies were aroused by opposition (once again). A colleague who habitually brought her dog to campus wanted to ban fraternity dogs. I thought fondly of the fraternity dogs I knew, and, by extension, of the men who brought them to campus to have a friendly canine presence in their residence. Unlike my colleague who has more of a law-and-order mentality, I liked the fact that these dogs escaped and often roamed freely. It brought out a humane aspect in these groups of men, and in me toward them, that extended beyond their dog ownership, or partnership. For a moment, I was able to see fraternities as simply a bunch of young men having a good time, and not as a malevolent force.

Despite that long, meandering illustration, I really mean to focus on another case of what my grad school advisor called "myopia" (about 100 times a day — he was a man of few words, although he repeated them to maximum effectiveness) and I have termed a "cognitive set," and to perpetuate a different debate that has been occupying your pages. That debate is the one over the performances at the Bison of the comedy group, "Some Assembly Required."

In last week's Bucknellian, there were two excellent responses to Lee Guzofski's defense of their comedy.

Was Hitler "politically correct?"

BY EVAN COYNE MALONEY

The term itself, "politically correct" (PC) implies that there is only one set of opinions to have. Those not sharing these opinions are "politically incorrect." The biggest irony here is how these people, who preach tolerance and understanding of differences, can be so intolerant of differing opinions. Their intolerance leads them to suppress opposing opinions using a variety of means, any of which would be right at home in Nazi Germany.

If you post flyers opposing a PC stance, they will be torn down. If someone posted flyers opposing Nazis, the same thing would happen. If you communicate your opinion through chalk talk, it will be defaced. The Nazis defaced any anti-Nazi graffiti. If you give a speech opposing some PC opinion, you will be shouted down. The Nazis would have forcibly removed you. If your book offends the politically correct, it will be banned. If it offended the Nazis, they would have burnt it. If you are a white male, the PCs blame you for every injustice ever committed. The Nazis did the same thing to the Jews.

In fact, the only difference I can think of between the politically correct and the Nazis is that the PC haven't yet organized their militia. But...you can bet that all of us white males will be marched off to the gas chamber.

The parallels don't end there. Hitler was a vegetarian. Hitler didn't smoke or drink. Hitler didn't wear fur. Hitler was pretty damn politically correct. In fact, the only difference I can think of between the politically correct and the Nazis is that the PC haven't yet organized their militia. But, when the PC SS is organized, you can bet that all of us white males will be marched off to the gas chambers.

So, now that you know what the politically correct are like, let me give you an example of how they function at Bucknell. A Management 101 company recently ran ads for their Mexican snack, Churros, depicting a Mexican standing behind a sombrero. Of course, the PC people, whose sole job it is to sit around waiting until someone offends them, decided that this was racist.

One member of the faculty, who made it her job to be a professional spokesman for the PC Nazis, said the ad was racially biased against Mexicans and Blacks. This person claims that the sombrero represents "laziness," and somehow—the PC logic is quite specious, so bear with me—the ad is demeaning to Blacks, who aren't even depicted in the ad.

Now, there was no implication of laziness made on the part of this Management company, so this woman obviously inferred laziness on her own. To her, a sombrero truly does represent laziness. But, doesn't this say more about the prejudices of this person than anything else? She projects her own prejudices onto the outside world, and every time she sees her own grotesque prejudices, she feels the guilt and lays the blame elsewhere. This woman is the racist.

Well, now you know the politically correct when you see them. They are the people who claim the song "White Christmas" was written specifically for David Duke's campaign. They are the people who sit around complaining about the evils of capitalism, carniverism, and whites. They are the people who would like to replace our democracy with The Fourth Reich.

So, in parting, I'll leave all of you PC people who haven't yet set this paper ablaze with some advice: find a hobby, get a job, lighten up, rent a sense of humor and watch The Comedy Channel. Do some damn thing with your time so you don't have to sit around waiting for something to offend you. Don't be afraid to laugh at life. Psychiatrists say laughter is the best therapy, and you guys need all the therapy you can get.

"The Pickled Brain"

By Steve McNutt

ALICE from page 8

There is just one point in one of these impressive letters that I would like to pick up on and elaborate, Christopher Williams' comment that the group can ignore suggestions for skits that are offensive.

Let me interject at this point that, to someone operating outside of a mind-set, someone locked into it may look doctrinaire (for example, dogmatically p.c.), blind, or pig-headed. When the mind-set is not ideologically tinged, though, it simply looks like a failure of imagination. (For example, how would you attach a burning candle to a wall with only a thumbtack, candle, and box of matches? You have to break a mindset to get the answer.) The response of the comedy improv group to the audience suggestion that they work with the concept of "naked chick football" can be construed as such a failure of imagination. There is a solution that requires neither that they ignore the suggestion nor that they follow the mindset of the person who made the suggestion, thereby presenting a conventional and misogynist form of humor.

Now, we have already been told by the group member that comedy involves stereotypes, and we have been correctly informed by Christopher Williams that humor often does not rely on stereotypes. It may be the case, however, that improvisation more than other forms of humor must deal in stereotypes and shared imagery because it has to utilize humorous concepts that the whole troop can recognize and key into quickly, without explanation.

Readers have also been admonished by Guzofski that people have to be able to laugh at themselves. We have heard the response, as well — why is it the people who are admonished to laugh at themselves are the negatively stereotyped? Isn't Gusofski really saying "We want to laugh at you. Where's your sense of humor?"

I have a solution that allows the rest of us to laugh at heterosexual white males, for a change. It might even give Mr Guzofski the opportunity to laugh at himself in public, an experience he recommends highly to others. That solution is to mock the member of the audience who made the Naked Chick Football proposal. There is an honorable tradition in improvisational comedy of playing off obnoxious members of the audience by making them look like fools. Why didn't it occur to the comedians?

Coming from a different mindset, the suggestion "Naked Chick Football" immediately brought to mind an image and a stereotype that I found ripe with humorous possibilities: The stereotypical dirty young man, the size of whose beer gut is dwarfed only by the size of his ego, who is always making lewd suggestions but can never get a date. He tries to lure other men to join in his obscene views of women, but they are too busy enjoying the company of women who wouldn't waste a minute on the sexist goon. A Saturday night in the library would be preferable to partying with this guy. Sidelined, sitting alone or with a bunch of like-minded unregenerate jerks, he whiles away the hours in a bar, or hanging around the frat house, chugging and booting the night away, while pathetically mocking the physical attributes of others. Another laughable model could be John Doggett (see author's note,) who believes women are thinking about him, wanting him, when they clearly aren't.

There is, interestingly, a parallel debate in the national scene. Bob Kerry, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president, cracked a dirty joke that apparently mocked lesbians, women, and Gerry Brown. In a discussion of the joke on a PBS public affairs show, a conservative defended Kerry, saying something like: "Thank god, he's a real man," and "What can you do? That's the way men are." A woman from Newsweek on the program responded along these lines: "It's unfortunate that men are like that and I don't see why women should vote for a man who has no compunctions about revealing his disdain for us." All agreed the joke wasn't funny, anyway.

The point, and the problem, are the same. Why is it that homosexuals/women/Native Americans/Arabs/Jews/etc... are supposed to laugh at ourselves, or not mind when you crack an unfunny joke about our gender/sexual orientation/race/ethnicity? Why can't you laugh at yourselves, huh? I guess you don't see the humor.

I can see a lot of humor in some man proposing that everyone (men, and those women who are "good sports" and want to please men they'd be better off ignoring) laugh at women because our bodies are different from men's — and discovering that the joke is on him; that he is the butt of the humor. (I can even imagine some humor in Naked Jock Football...possibility for a couple of good puns there.)

Funny it didn't occur to the improv group, that they can see the humorous possibilities in the stereotypes of those who are different only, not in stereotypes of people like themselves. Having been rebuffed by members of the audience and the BPC, they see some illusory oppression by people who are tired of being laughed at, and generate not-so-funny allusions to political correctness.

Can't they see the humor in David Duke and his followers, people who somehow imagine they are losing out because of the state-supported lifestyle of impoverished, downtrodden and homeless people? Can they see any similarity to themselves?

Author's note: I have been told Bucknell students won't get the Doggett reference. Could that be true? Just in case, John Doggett testified at the Judiciary Committee Hearings on Clarence Thomas's nomination to the Supreme Court. According to Spy magazine, Republican staff-members in the Justice Department and White House Council office who were assigned to look for dirt on Anita Hill couldn't find any. Rooting around, they instead dug up Doggett, a histrionic man who suffered from the delusion that Anita Hill was fantasizing about him.
